Miss Melanie Johnson: A new sun awareness initiative "SunSmart" was launched on 27 March by Cancer Research UK to make the public aware of the dangers of exposure to the sun. The campaign is based on the successful "SunSmart" campaign in Australia. The campaign has received funding from the United Kingdom Health Departments this year. We will be providing further funding for the campaign for next summertime.

The campaign's aim is to increase the profile of the issue of skin cancer and methods of effective sun protection.

The key objectives are to increase knowledge of the causes of skin cancer, to increase awareness of actions that can be taken to prevent skin cancer and to influence positively attitudes to sun protection.

Subject to further funding, longer-term aims are to reduce sunlight exposure through changes in behaviour and environment, to increase the proportion of people reporting with early stage disease and decrease the proportion of people presenting with late tumours.

The campaign's key messages have been disseminated by way of an alert to the campaign and mailshot pack of posters and leaflets to all general practitioner surgeries and health promotion units nationally, an alert to the campaign and mailshot to secondary schools with 3,500 leaflets and posters; and a series of press events over summer 2003, with leaflets and posters targeted in cities and seaside resorts. The effectiveness of the campaign is being evaluated and the lessons learnt will be fed into future development of the campaign.

The Department has separately developed the "SunSafe" web pages last year, designed with children in mind and these are available on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/sunsafe. Sun awareness information is also contained on the "Wired For Health" website at www.wiredforhealth.gov.uk/teaching/sun/intro.html.

We continue to fund annually the Meteorological Office to provide the daily Ultra-Violet index in the media (TV, radio, Meteorological Office website).

The Department also provides core funding to the National Radiological Protection Board, which provides expertise on ultra-violet radiation issues.

Solid Waste Incinerators (Health Risks)

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to update the research on (a) angiosarcoma, (b) lymphohematopoietic cancers and (c) cancer incidence near municipal solid waste incinerators. [142632]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department has no plans to carry out further research on angiosarcoma. The independent expert advisory Committee of Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and Environment that any potential risk of cancer from residency near to municipal solid waste incinerators was exceedingly low and probably not measurable by the most modern epidemiological methods. Therefore, no further research is planned on cancer incidence near municipal solid waste incinerators.

The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) recommended in its third report an investigation of the geographical distribution of childhood cancer and leukaemia in Great Britain and how the pattern of cases around nuclear installations compares with the national pattern. This study is nearing completion and the Department has asked COMARE to advise on which, if any, nuclear installations in Great Britain have incidences of childhood cancer and leukaemia in their vicinity which are statistically outside the distribution seen nationally. COMARE hopes to report on this aspect of the study to the Department early next year. When complete, the database will also allow investigation of other environmental factors and their potential relevance to the temporal and spatial distribution of childhood cancer.

Waiting Lists/Times

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking, in response to the 45th Report of Session 2001–02 by the Committee of Public Accounts on Inpatient and outpatient waiting in the NHS, to reduce the regional variations in (a) waiting lists, (b) waiting times and (c) different specialisms. [142561]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has put a number of measures aimed at reducing inpatient and outpatient waits in the National Health Service and to improve access as outlined in the NHS Plan. Local action continues to implement these measures in reducing local variations in waiting lists, waiting times and different specialties.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Solicitor-General what visits (a) she and (b) Ministers in her Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if she will make a statement. [143160]

The Solicitor-General: Neither the Attorney-General nor I have made any such visits using public funds or accompanied by civil servants and none are currently planned.

Sand Yachting

Mr. Jack: To ask the Solicitor-General, what the basis was for the request by the Attorney-General to the Crown Prosecution Service to provide him with an update on whether sand yachting should be allowed to continue at St.Anne's. [142623]

The Solicitor-General: I refer the hon. Member to the Attorney-General's letter to him dated 3 December 2003, in which the Attorney stated the following:

> "I indicated in my last letter that I had asked the CPS to provide me with an update, including the future of sand yachting in the area. I made this comment on the basis that I could see that the CPS decision regarding a criminal prosecution would be relevant to those responsible for licensing sand yachting in the area. The issue of whether sand yachting should be allowed to continue is not a matter for the CPS to determine, as their review of these tragic events is restricted to the more limited issue of criminal culpability."

PRIME MINISTER

Art Acquisition

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister how much his Office has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by his Office since 1997 was; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by his Office through sales of its works of art has been since 1997. [142365]

The Prime Minister: My office has neither sold nor bought paintings or sculptures since 1997.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Prime Minister, what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143162]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend, the Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. Hain) gave him today.

House of Lords Reform

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister, what continuing role he intends to propose for the Joint Committee on Reform of the House of Lords; and if he will make a statement. [142799]

The Prime Minister: The Joint Committee on House of Lords Reform published a press notice on 12 November, together with correspondence between my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs (Lord Falconer of Thoroton) and my right hon. Friend, the Chairman of the Committee, (Mr. Jack Cunningham) on this issue. Copies are available in the House Library.

Ministerial Duties

David Davis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the (a) role, (b) duties and (c) responsibilities of (i) Mr. Jonathan Powell and (ii) the Deputy Prime Minister. [143200]

The Prime Minister: The Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State deputises for me as required across the range of my responsibilities at home and abroad.

The Deputy Prime Minister chairs Cabinet Committees on domestic affairs, environment and local government; and Sub-Committees on energy policy social exclusion and regeneration.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has responsibility for policy on local and regional government, local government finance, planning, housing, urban policy, the Fire Service, the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit, the Social Exclusion Unit, the Regional Co-ordination Unit and the Government Offices for the Regions.

Jonathan Powell is my Chief of Staff and is appointed on special adviser terms. He has direct responsibility for leading and co-ordinating operations across Number 10 and reports to me.

David Davis: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements are in place for delegation of Prime Ministerial duties and responsibilities if the Prime Minister were unable to perform his duties for a period of time. [143201]

The Prime Minister: If I am absent for any reason then appropriate arrangements would be put in place as has been the practice under successive administrations.

Nuclear Weapons

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, if he will set out the circumstances under which he would authorise the use of UK nuclear weapons. [142568]

The Prime Minister: As has repeatedly been made clear, the British Government would only contemplate the use or thereat of use of nuclear weapons in extreme circumstances of self-defence. We would not use our weapons, whether conventional or nuclear, contrary to international law.

Queen's Speech

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister, if he will bring forward proposals to replace the Queen's Speech with a statement to Parliament by the Prime Minister setting out the forthcoming legislative programme. [143032]

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Composting

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the steps she is taking to promote composting. [142343]

Mr. Morley: Defra has set up the Waste Implementation Programme (WIP) to help local authorities meet their targets for reducing the landfilling of biodegradable municipal waste under the Landfill Directive. One of WIP's programmes being taken forward by the Waste and Resources Action Programme (WRAP) is to promote kerbside recycling and composting best practice in local authorities.

This sub-programme has two components:

1. A Recycling and Organics Technical Advisory Team (ROTATE) which will provide technical advice to local authorities needing to implement and improve kerbside recycling, with an emphasis on organics collections systems. This is supported by £14.9 million over the next three years.

2. An Organics Materials Programme which provides material-specific support and investment to the growing composting sector. It aims to develop markets in compost, with headline targets of increasing the market share of compost in the landscaping and horticultural markets by 35 per cent. and 30 per cent. respectively, by end 2006. This is supported by £12.2 million over the next three years.

These targets will be achieved through a range of activities including:

development of compost standards;

business development initiative for emerging compost companies; marketing and product development targeted at the landscaping and horticultural sectors.

Defra also provides £272,000 over three years to the Composting Association to raise awareness and increase the understanding of composting and uses of compost.

In addition, Defra's Waste Minimisation and Recycling Fund has supported composting schemes run by local authorities. In 2003–04, 21 green waste-only kerbside schemes and five composting site developments received funding.

Crop Spraying

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received from (a) the Department of Health, (b) the Health Protection Agency and (c) the Countryside Agency regarding the consultation documents (i) plans for greater access to information about crop spraying and (ii) proposals for buffer zones between spraying areas and residential properties in England and Wales. [141961]

Alun Michael: The Pesticides Safety Directorate has not received representations from the Department of Health, the Health Protection Agency or the Countryside Agency regarding the informal consultation on plans for greater access to information about crop spraying or the formal consultation on proposals for buffer zones.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to obtain Land Cover Map information from the Centre of Ecology and Hydrology in order to calculate the number of people in England and Wales living directly adjacent to fields sprayed with pesticides. [141962]

Alun Michael: I have asked the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD) to carry out a Regulatory Impact Assessment (RIA) on proposals for the introduction of no-spray buffer zones between agricultural spray operations and residential properties. That will include consideration of evidence on the number of people in England and Wales living directly adjacent to fields sprayed with pesticides.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what plans she has for a formal public consultation on greater access to information on crop spraying; [141963]

(2) what plans she has to implement (a) a mandatory and (b) a voluntary pilot for proposals in the consultation paper, plans for greater access to information about crop spraying. [141966]

Alun Michael: The Pesticide Safety Directorate (PSD) issued approximately 1,500 consultation documents for the informal consultation on greater access to information on crop spraying. In addition, a series of meetings were held with interested parties.

Some 500 written responses were submitted to the PSD, reflecting a broad range of opinions, and officials are currently processing these. Some parties, in responding to the consultation, made the suggestion of running voluntary or mandatory pilot schemes.

Consideration whether to issue a formal consultation, or to carry out pilot schemes, will be given by ministers after the responses have been analysed.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) how many submissions her Department has received to the consultation on Plans for greater access to information about crop spraying; and how many favoured proposals to oblige pesticide users to (a) keep a public register of what pesticides they have used and (b) notify surrounding households when they are going to spray a pesticide, identifying the pesticide; [141964]

(2) how many submissions her Department has received to the consultation on Plans for greater access to information about crop spraying which are in favour of disclosure of the records of pesticide use (a) directly to members of the public and (b) to parties acting on their behalf. [141965]

Alun Michael: The Pesticides Safety Directorate has received about 500 responses to the informal consultation on options for greater access to information about crop spraying. A series of questions were asked in the consultation document, with the aim of identifying practical arrangements for notification and disclosure of pesticide spray activities. Officials are now processing the responses, which contain a broad range of views, but it is possible to identify some general trends.

The majority of respondents were broadly in favour of greater access to information on pesticide spraying activities in general terms. However many raised potential practical difficulties with respect to the implementation of the proposals, particularly in respect of the issue of prior notification.

The majority of responses favoured the proposal to oblige pesticide users to keep a public register of what pesticides they had used. In general, members of the public were in favour of direct disclosure of spray records while farmers and industry groups were broadly in favour of disclosure via a third party such as a doctor or lawyer or via a Regulatory Authority.

Dredging (River Tyne)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress has been made in discussions between her Department and the Port of Tyne Authority concerning the dredging of the River Tyne and the disposal at sea of contaminated sediment; and what the present position is regarding the dredging and disposal. [140644]

Mr. Morley: The Port of Tyne Authority (PoT) applied for a licence in February 2003 to dispose of 315,123 cubic metres of sediment dredged from wharves within the port to the Souter Point disposal ground. Some sediments are contaminated with Tributyl-tin and heavy metals.

Defra and its advisers from the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquatic Science (CEFAS) have met the PoT on a number of occasions to discuss potential disposal options. I met representatives of the port authority on 3 December.

On the basis of the currently available information, the levels of contamination are such that we would not be prepared to licence simple disposal of the sediments at sea. I also appreciate that land based disposal or remediation would be prohibitively expensive.

We have therefore suggested that:

(i) the PoT should carry out limited further sampling to (a) determine the characteristics of the sediment down to the proposed dredging depth and (b) more closely determine the extent of the most contaminated material. A sampling methodology is to be agreed.

(ii) with assistance from CEFAS, the PoT should prepare a methodology for confined disposal (capping of the contaminated material with clear material) at Souter Point including a strategy for monitoring the effectiveness of this approach.

Subject to the results of this work, we would then be prepared to license the disposal of at least part of the amount applied for on this basis.

Flood Protection

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the new structures for (a) flood defences and (b) flood protection are; and what assessment she has made of efficiency savings in terms of (i) costs and (ii) manpower resulting from the introduction of new structures. [142040]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the conclusions of the flood and coastal defence funding review on 12 March 2003. These include the transfer of responsibility for rivers creating the greatest flood risk to the Environment Agency; funding the Environment Agency through a single stream of Defra grand in aid; and introducing a single tier of flood defence committee by abolishing the local tier where it exists but creating additional regional committees where this is considered appropriate.

These measures are not designed primarily to secure cost or manpower savings. Rather they are designed to help achieve a more assured, streamline, effective and accountable service of flood defence and flood protection, that achieves a better reduction in flood risk nationally for the investment made.

Defra is however working with the Environment Agency on process improvement which will take account of the changes referred to above, further rationalise scheme appraisal and approval processes and reduce the proportion of overheads in scheme costs.

Fly-tipping

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total cost to landowners of clearing their land of waste that has been fly-tipped was in each of the last five years; how many convictions for fly-tipping have been secured by the Environment Agency; and what the total amount of fines paid arising from these convictions was. [142590]

Mr. Morley: No national data is available on the cost to landowners of clearing illegally dumped waste on private land.

The Environment Agency has kept separate data on fly-tipping prosecutions since the beginning of calendar year 2002. Before the time, fly-tipping was not distinguished on their database from other Environmental Protection Act (1990) s.3 and 34 offences.

Number of prosecutions—252

Fines—£228,620

2003 (to end of October)

Number of prosecutions—210

Fines—£225,702

Grand Totals (1 January 20 02—31 October 2003)

Number of prosecutions—462

GM Crops

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) on what basis the herbicide regime for use on GM maize was chosen for the farm-scale trials; what role Aventis (now Bayer) had in its choice; what international research was conducted to establish whether this was a commercially realistic regime to control weeds; and what research she has conducted on whether farmers in other countries use more aggressive herbicide mixes; [142304]

(2) what arrangements were made to ensure that farmers growing the GM trial crops managed them in a commercially realistic manner; and whether they were (a) required and (b) allowed to respray if the crop was under threat from excess weeds and was unlikely to produce an optimum yield. [142305]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The herbicide regime used by farmers growing GM maize in the farm-scale trials was proposed by the product manufacturer, AgrEvo (now Bayer Crop Science). The way farmers could then use the product was further specified under the terms of the draft product label in line with the experimental approval. The draft product label gave farmers the freedom to apply more than one application of the herbicide if they required, providing it was within the specified crop growth stage limits.

The experimental approval assumed use of the herbicide under UK conditions. No research was conducted on the method of use of this or any other herbicides in other countries as this was not considered necessary.

The Scientific Steering Committee overseeing the farm-scale evaluations (FSEs) were content from the outset that the proposals for the use of the pesticide provided by the manufacturers and specified in the draft product label were capable of delivering cost-effective weed control under UK conditions. A full audit of herbicide use was conducted as part of the FSEs and published as part of the results (Champion et al. 2003). This paper also gives details of the number of GM maize fields that received more than one application of herbicide. In the published results it was concluded that cost-effective weed control had been achieved. This conclusion was endorsed by the steering committee and was further validated by the publishing journal through their peer-review process.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the Royal Society was asked to check the methodology of the farm-scale evaluation research, with particular regard to the selection of the herbicide regimes. [142423]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The Royal Society was not asked to check the methodology of the farm-scale evaluations. The independent scientific steering committee was established for this purpose, and the committee endorsed both the methodology generally and the herbicide regimes in particular. The work was again independently validated by the publishing journal, The Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society (Biological Sciences) that operates independently of the Royal Society through its peer review process.

GM Nation Debate

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will set up a review of the performance of the Central Office for Information in the GM public debate to investigate whether there has been mismanagement or incompetence; [142245]

(2) what assessment she has made of the implications for the GM Nation debate of constraints on funding. [142246]

Mr. Morley: The debate was acknowledged as an innovative process and a learning experience for all involved. We are currently working with the independent Steering Board and COI to consider what lessons can be learned from the GM Public Debate process. We will publish our conclusions in due course.

Hazardous Waste Directive

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what work was undertaken on preparation for the Hazardous Waste Directive in the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions; [142517]

(2) when her predecessor Department was informed of the (a) requirements and (b) implementation date of the EU Hazardous Waste Directive. [142518]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The European Commission approved the Hazardous Waste Directive in December 1991. In common with the negotiation of other European Directives, the Government took an active part in proceedings, but there is no detailed record of the amount of work spent on preparation for this particular Directive by the then Department of the Environment.

The implementation date for the Directive as 27 June 1995 which was set out in an amendment to the Directive approved by the European Commission on 27 June 1994. The Department would have been aware of the Directive's requirements as it was negotiated.

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many staff who worked on the EU Hazardous Waste Directive in the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions transferred to her Department to continue this work. [142519]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The European Commission approved the Hazardous Waste Directive in December 1991. Its requirements are currently transposed in England by the Special Waste Regulations 1996, but these are to be replaced by new regulations for hazardous waste in 2004. The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra) was established in June 2001 and all staff that had worked on hazardous waste policy issues in the Department for Environment, Transport and the Regions transferred to Defra to continue this work. The Hazardous Waste Branch of Waste Management Division takes the lad on these issues as well as policy work on the transfrontier shipment of waste and consists of eight staff.

Kyoto Protocol

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the implications for UK environment policy of the statement made by the Russian authorities on 2 December on the Kyoto Protocol. [142793]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The Government believe that the Kyoto Protocol, with its binding targets and timetables, is an essential first step in international action to tackle climate change, though of course much greater cuts in greenhouse gasses will be needed.

President Putin stated at the World Conference on Climate Change in Moscow in early October that the Russian Government was still analysing the economic implications of ratifying the Kyoto Protocol. The statement made by President Putin's economic adviser on 2 December does not appear to be an official statement of policy, and we look forward to a decision from the Russian Government when they have completed their assessment of the Kyoto Protocol.

The Secretary of State and I are attending the ninth Conference of the Parties on the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change in Milan, where Parties will be putting the finishing touches on preparations for entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol.

Marine Protection

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the (a) work, (b) resourcing and (c) institutional membership of the Marine Environment Monitoring Group. [141668]

Mr. Morley: The Marine Environment Monitoring Group (MEMG), formerly the Marine Pollution Monitoring Management Group, is a group of representatives from the Government organisations with marine environmental protection monitoring obligations. The group is chaired by a representative from the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS). Its aim is to ensure that monitoring of the marine environment is conducted in a co-ordinated way, is as cost-effective as possible and meets national and international requirements.

MEMG has no specific resources. The Departments and agencies who are members support the work of the group, and carry out the monitoring which it seeks to co-ordinate, as part of their own operations.

The core members of MEMG are:

Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Sciences
Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs
Environment Agency
Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (Northern Ireland)
Environment and Heritage Service (Northern Ireland)
Fisheries Research Services Marine Laboratory, Aberdeen
Scottish Environment Protection Agency
The National Assembly for Wales (Environment Division)
Scottish Executive Rural Affairs Department
Sir Alister Hardy Foundation for Ocean Sciences
Joint Nature Conservation Committee
IACMST Marine Observations Action Group

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what resources her Department has committed to support the work of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea. [141669]

Mr. Bradshaw: No specific resources are committed directly to support the work of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea (ICES) other than an annual subscription of approximately £130,000. However, an indirect resource commitment to ICES arises from the participation of scientists from the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS), a Defra agency, in ICES science and advisory working groups, and in the governance of ICES itself. These working groups cover areas of marine and freshwater fisheries, aquaculture, the environment and the ecosystem. The Current chairs of the Resource Management Science Committee and the Advisory Committee on the Ecosystem are currently also CEFAS scientists.

My predecessor, my hon. Friend the member for Scunthorpe (Elliot Morley) also signed, on behalf of the UK, the "Copenhagen Declaration" in 2002 in celebration of 100 years of ICES, wherein we affirmed our continuing support for ICES.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what regulatory impact assessments have been prepared by her Department in respect of agreements made on the control of radioactive substances under the OSPAR Commission; and if she will place copies in the Library. [141670]

Mr. Morley: The Department published the UK Strategy for Radioactive Discharges 2001–2020 in July 2002. This constitutes the UK national plan for achieving the objective of the OSPAR Strategy with Regard to Radioactive Substances and it includes a regulatory impact assessment. Copies of the UK Strategy are in the Library.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which OSPAR priority areas in the radioactive materials sector have been volunteered to date by the United Kingdom as ones on which UK scientists will undertake basic scientific work as the lead country for OSPAR; which other areas are being considered for volunteer research; and if she will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with OSPAR. [141671]

Mr. Morley: UK experts are closely involved in the work programme of the OSPAR Radioactive Substances Committee. Current tasks for which the UK is the lead country are the preparation of proposals for reporting on discharges of radioactive substances from oil and gas installations and proposals for harmonised reporting procedures for inputs of radioactive substances from the non-nuclear sector.

UK experts have also participated in three intersessional working groups to establish the baseline situation regarding radioactive substances in the marine environment, against which progress in achieving the objective of the OSPAR Strategy with regard to Radioactive Substances will be assessed. In addition, a

UK expert is a member of the Radioactive Discharges Expert Assessment Panel, which examines trends in discharges from nuclear installations.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what joint assessment and monitoring is being undertaken by UK-based scientific institutions on behalf of OSPAR; and if she will publish a list of current research projects in collaboration with OSPAR. [141672]

Mr. Morley: OPSAR agreed a revised Joint Assessment and Monitoring Programme at the Commission meeting in Bremen in June. A copy is in the Library of the House, and is available on the OSPAR website www.ospar.org. A large number of scientific institutions provide data which is used to fulfil the reporting requirements in respect of UK waters. These include the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquatic Science, the Environment Agency, English Nature, and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, and the equivalent bodies in the devolved Administrations.

The Department has an extensive research programme on marine environmental issues, and most projects will in one way or another inform the UK's input into the work of OSPAR. In some cases, such as the development of a number of Ecological Quality objectives, this work is being done by the UK on behalf of OSPAR as lead country; in other cases, the research will inform the UK's input to debate within OSPAR. A list of the 74 projects currently in the programme can be found on the Defra website at www.defra.gov.uk/research/project_data/Default.asp.

Recycled Products

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proportion of the Government's total procurement of materials and products comprised recycled products in each year since 1997; and what the projections are for (a) 2003, (b) 2004 and (c) 2005. [142593]

Mr. Morley: Figures on recycled products and materials bought by the Government are not collected centrally and doing so would incur a disproportionate cost. In regards to the Government's current position on buying recycled paper products, I refer my hon. Friend to the Answer given to the hon. Member for Guildford (Sue Doughty) on 4 December 2003, Official Report, column 146W. Data on recycled paper bought by Government is available in the "Sustainable Development in Government" and "Greening Government" reports, which are available online at www.sustainable-development.gov.uk/sdig/reports/index.htm. Copies are also available in the Library.

Government is currently developing sustainable procurement targets under the "Framework for Sustainable Development on the Government Estate". The targets and online guidance will be published by Spring next year.

Recycling

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, whether the processed output from mechanical biological treatment works counts towards local authority recycling targets. [142339]

Mr. Morley: Mechanical biological treatment [MBT] describes a range of processes with the common purpose of treating residual waste after material recovery, to prepare it for final disposal. Where this results in the recovery of further materials that are sent for recycling or a compost that meets the criteria set for the composting indicator then these outputs will count towards local authority Best Value targets for recycling and composting.

Regional Waste Plans

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the status of a local authority waste plan if its policies are in contravention of a regional waste plan. [142307]

Keith Hill: I have been asked to reply.

Local planning authorities are required, in formulating the policies in their development plans, to have regard to regional planning guidance as well as to current national policies. Planning Policy Guidance Note 10 (PPG10), "Planning and Waste Management", sets out a number of matters that waste planning authorities should take into account in developing the waste planning strategy for their area including regional planning guidance on waste management. PPG10 also expects waste planning authorities to plan for a provision of waste management facilities that is consistent with forecasts of local and regional requirements, as well as other planning considerations.

The weight attached to policies in a development plan depends upon the stage of plan preparation or review, increasing as successive stages are reached. Where an adopted or approved development plan contains relevant policies, section 54A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 requires that an application for planning permission or an appeal shall be determined in accordance with the plan, unless material considerations indicate otherwise.

Rural Transport

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the future of the Rural Transport Partnership grants. [142433]

Alun Michael: The Countryside Agency's Rural Transport Partnership grant scheme runs until March 2004, as set out in the 2000 Rural White Paper. The Agency has recently reviewed the scheme and the outcome will feed into the Agency's and Defra's decisions on the future direction and funding of the programme. It is hoped to announce the result with the Agency's settlement in the New year.

Sustainable Development

Julia Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action she is taking to ensure that her Department's bid to the forthcoming Government spending round contributes towards the UK's objectives on sustainable development. [140493]

Alun Michael: Defra's key principle is sustainable development which involves balancing economic, social and environmental considerations and is consistent with the wider approach of government as a whole. In Defra an Integrated Policy Appraisal (IPA) tool, which provides a systematic framework for the identification of the environmental, social and economic impacts of a policy, is actively promoted within the department. We will apply the IPA tool to our spending plans in SR04.

Timber

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs by what means the policy for purchasing timber and timber products of (a) the Department, (b) the Centre for Science Laboratory, (c) the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science, (d) the Pesticides Safety Directorate, (e) the Rural Payments Agency, (f) the Veterinary Laboratories Agency, (g) the Veterinary Medicines Directorate, (h) the Forestry Commission, (i) the Countryside Agency and (j) English Nature ensure that they are obtained from legal and sustainable sources. [141333]

Mr. Morley: Details of the policy for purchasing timber are published on the Sustainable Development in Government Site. The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs operates in accordance with this policy by using the model contract specification clause devised by Defra on behalf of all central government departments. This clause is designed to ensure that timber and timber products from legal and sustainable sources are supplied and that contractors provide documentary evidence to prove compliance.

Defra's Estate Strategy and Services Division is responsible for all major works and estate management on the Defra estate and that of the Pesticides Safety Directorate, the Rural Payments Agency, the Veterinary Laboratories Agency and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate. Adherence to the timber policy for the Department and these executive agencies falls to this central body of staff, which is fully appraised of the timber purchase policy.

The central Science Laboratory and Centre for Environmental Fisheries and Aquaculture are responsible for their own buildings and maintenance. They have also been made aware of the policy and have systems in place to ensure observance.

The Countryside Agency has confirmed that it has adopted the Government's policy on Timber Procurement for all construction and fitting-out contracts, as evidenced by the inclusion of "Sustainable Sources Only" Condition/Clause within Invitation to Tender/Contract Specification document.

The Forestry Commission is the Government Department responsible for forestry policy throughout Great Britain. All the woodland it manages (over 800,000 hectares) has been independently certified as being sustainably managed. On procurement, the Commission implements Government guidance to ensure that timber and timber products it purchases are only from legal and sustainable sources and records details of all such purchases.

English Nature has confirmed that it too is seeking to purchase timber from legal and sustainable sources and that its contracts are drafted to ensure compliance with this policy.

Water Supplies

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what statutory responsibilities apply to (a) owners of private water supplies and (b) local authorities to ensure that water supplied for domestic consumption meets legal requirements in respect of (i) lead content and (ii) coliforms; what action they are required to take to ensure that water supplies which fail to meet required standards are improved; and if she will make a statement. [142446]

Mr. Morley: Any person who supplies water in connection with a commercial use is under a general duty of care to consumers, whether the supplier is a commercial supplier or is someone who offers occasional bed and breakfast facilities in their own home.

A local authority has a general duty to take steps to keep itself informed about the wholesomeness and sufficiency of water supplies, including every private water supply, to premises in their area. A supply is normally wholesome if it meets the standards set by the Private Water Supplies Regulations 1991, which include a maximum permitted concentration for lead and a standard of nil coliform bacteria.

Local authorities have a duty to monitor private water supplies at the frequencies set out in the Private Water Supplies Regulations 1991. Frequency depends on daily volume of supply or numbers of consumers. There is no statutory monitoring of private supplies that serve single dwellings solely for the daily domestic use of the occupants. Authorities prefer to advise such consumers informally where a supply is unwholesome.

Where a private supply is unwholesome, a local authority may serve a private supply notice, specifying remedial steps, or one or more "relevant persons". The steps may, for example, include installing a water treatment system, replacing lead pipework or taking protective measures at the source to prevent contamination. Such persons may be owners or occupiers of premises supplied by the private supply, or of premises where the source of the supply is situated, or persons exercising management or control in relation to the source.

Tees Estuary

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, what inspection has taken place since their arrival to establish whether alien species are present in the ships which have arrived in Hartlepool for decommissioning by Able UK. [142334]

Mr. Morley: No inspections have yet been carried out to establish what organisms are present in the ships. Samples of the ballast water will be required to be taken for inspection and analysis before any discharge of ballast water is authorised.

TREASURY

Influenza

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many children in the age groups (a) 0 to four and (b) five to 14 have died of influenza in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [142965]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 9 December 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking how many children in the age groups (a) 0–4 (b) 5–14 have died of influenza in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

The latest available data are for 2002. Figures for the ten years 1993 to 2002 are therefore given in the table below.

Deaths from influenza[1], England and Wales, 1993 to 2002[2]

[1] Selected using code 487 from the International Classification of Diseases Ninth Revision for 1993 to 2000 and codes J10-J11 from the International Classification of Diseases Tenth Revision for 2001 and 2002.

60-year-olds

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many single (a) women and (b) men will reach the age of 60 years between 21 September and 25 December. [143078]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Mr Len Cook to Mr Steve Webb, dated 9 December 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the number of single women and single men who will reach the age of 60 years between 21 September and 25 December 2003.

It is estimated that there will be 20,400 single women and 17,100 single men in England and Wales who will reach the age of 60 during this period. Single has been defined to include single (never married), widowed and divorced.

These figures are estimates. They have been derived using the latest national population projections produced by the Government Actuary's Department.

Data from the Office for National Statistics on the pattern of births in 1943 indicates the proportion of the projected total number of 59-year old men and women in June 2003 who will reach the age of 60 between 21 September and 25 December 2003. Date from the national population projections by marital status produced by the Government Actuary's Department have been used to estimate the proportion who are single.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many single (a) women and (b) men will reach the age of 80 years between 21 September and 25 December. [143079]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Steve Webb dated 9 December 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the number of single women and single men who will reach the age of 80 years between 21 September and 25 December 2003.

It is estimated that there will be 29,500 single women and 9,800 single men in England and Wales who will reach the age of 80 during this period. Single has been defined to include single (never married), widowed and divorced.

These figures are estimates. They have been derived using the latest national population projections produced by the Government Actuary's Department.

Data from the Office for National Statistics on the pattern of births in 1923 indicates the proportion of the projected total number of 79-year-old men and women in June 2003 who will reach the age of 80 between 21 September and 25 December 2003. Data from the national population projections by marital status produced by the Government Actuary's Department have been used to estimate the proportion who are single.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143100]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Lord Privy Seal and Leader of the House today.

Companies' Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to propose legislation to require companies to publish in their annual reports a table showing the annual pre-tax profits and tax paid in each country. [142707]

Dawn Primarolo: The legal requirements for companies' published annual accounts are covered by the Companies Act which is within the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry. I am not aware of any plans on their part to change the legislation in the way you suggest.

Computers (Tax Relief)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what definition of computer is used by the Inland Revenue for the purposes of the changes to tax relief on employer-loaned computers introduced in the March 1999 budget. [142248]

Dawn Primarolo: The tax law (section 320 of the Income Tax (Earnings and Pensions) Act 2003) which sets out the benefits tax exemption for computers loaned to employees by employers does not define the term. In cases of doubt the Inland Revenue will have regard to the particular facts. In addition to the computer itself, the exemption also covers printers, scanners and other devices designed for use with a computer.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps Her Majesty's Customs takes to check imported postal packets; and how many cases of (a) imports of banned items and (b) potential tax evasion were detected in the last three financial years. [142422]

John Healey: HM Customs and Excise control imported postal packets at the Royal Mail's two international postal depots at Coventry and Mount Pleasant.

Customs controls are applied to all postal packets imported into the UK from outside the European Union using well-established risk assessment techniques to identify consignments for examination. In addition, Customs examine declarations affixed to packets to ensure that the correct customs duty, excise duty and VAT are charged and collected. This process includes risk-based testing of packets with incomplete or missing declarations.

Customs records do not identify the number of individual packets on which tax may have been evaded as a result of mis-description or under-evaluation.

Packets containing banned items, including drugs, tobacco products, obscene material and firearms, are seized by Customs. The following table gives the numbers of packets containing banned items which were seized in the last three years.

	Packets identified and seized
2001–02	20,008
2002–03	18,218

Euro

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent work of the Standing Committee on Euro Preparations. [143234]

Ruth Kelly: The Chancellor's Standing Committee on Euro Preparations met on 23 October. It welcomed new members appointed by the Chancellor, and discussed next steps for preparations, the third outline National Changeover Plan and the work of the new Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland Euro Preparations committees. They also considered the seventh Report on Euro Preparations, which was published by HM Treasury on 18 November.

Minutes of the meeting will be available shortly on www.euro.gov.uk.

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent work of the (a) Scottish, (b) Welsh and (c) Northern Ireland euro preparation committees. [143235]

Ruth Kelly: Information about the work of the Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland Euro Preparations Committees was published in Chapter 3 of the Seventh Report on Euro Preparations, issued by HMT on 18 November. Minutes of the meetings are available at www.dfpni.gov.uk (Northern Ireland), www.wales.gov.uk (Wales) and www.scottishsecretary.gov.uk (Scotland).

Film Industry

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the titles of each film production which has benefited from film industry tax relief for each year since 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [142299]

Dawn Primarolo: Details of individual films that have benefited from tax relief cannot be disclosed for reasons of taxpayer confidentiality. Exemption 15 (Statutory and other restrictions) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information applies. There are two main reliefs, section 42 of the Finance (No.2) Act 1992 and section 48 of the Finance (No. 2) Act 1997, available for expenditure incurred on the production or acquisition of the master version of a British qualifying film. DCMS certifies British qualifying films under the terms of the Films Act 1985. A list of qualifying films for the period since 1997 has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Iraq

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to re-assess Iraq's debt repayments to the UK to assist the reconstruction of the country. [141558]

Mr. Boateng: The Government has made clear that we are seeking a fair and sustainable solution to Iraq's debt problems.

We believe the most effective way to deliver a solution is for the International Monetary Fund, World Bank, and other responsible international organisations, to complete first their assessment of Iraq's needs, resources and obligations. That would then be followed by a comprehensive debt restructuring by the Paris Club of official creditors and comparable treatment from other official and private creditors. G7 finance ministries have asked creditors to make their best efforts to complete the process by the end of 2004.

The Government believes that Iraq's debts should be dealt with under the new "Evian approach" to debt restructuring agreed by the Paris Club in October, which offers a long-term solution for countries with the most serious debt problems, including debt reduction where a need is clearly demonstrated. The Prime Minister has made clear that he hopes creditors will be generous in recognising Iraq's needs for the future.

London Infrastructure

Linda Perham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will take steps to increase investment in London's infrastucture in response to projected population increases; [143029]

(2) what assessment he has made of the need for an increase in investment in London's infrastructure to address projected population increases. [143251]

Ruth Kelly: Spending plans were set out in the 2002 Spending Review for 2003–06, which included significant resources for infrastructural investment in all areas of the UK, including in London. The allocation of these resources takes in to account a number of factors, some of which relate to population. The Spending Review 2004 will also take into account these factors.

Public Sector Efficiency Review

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the terms of reference of the Gershon public sector efficiency review; and whether that review is able to consider the value for money of different (a) project management methods and (b) financing mechanisms. [142227]

Mr. Boateng: The Government have asked Peter Gershon to undertake an independent review of efficiency across public services. He has identified six areas of activity to focus on, and these are the areas that he believes will have the greatest impact on efficiency. They are procurement, back office functions, transactional services, productive time, policy, finance and regulation of the public sector and policy, finance and regulation of the private sector. Further details are set out in the consultation paper which was issued on 20 October, and which was made available to the House on that day.

Regional Emphasis Documents

Linda Perham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the Regional Emphasis Documents to be submitted to his Department by 31 December. [143028]

Mr. Boateng: The Treasury does not intend to publish the Regional Emphasis Documents, which are an input to Spending Review 2004. The documents are being produced jointly in each English region outside London by the Government Office, Regional Development Agency and regional chamber. In London, the Government Office, London Development Agency and Greater London Authority are producing the document. It is for the institutions in each region to decide whether to make the documents publicly available.

Supermarkets

Matthew Green: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings have taken place between his Department and representatives of (a) Tesco, (b) Sainsbury's and (c) Asda, including Asda's parent company Wal-Mart in the last 12 months; and what the (i) date and (ii) subject of each meeting was. [143022]

John Healey: Treasury officials and Ministers frequently meet with representatives of all kinds of businesses at many kinds of events. The Department has had a number of meetings with these supermarkets to discuss a variety of subjects in the last year.

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information his Department has supplied to the US authorities to help them with their investigations into tax avoidance schemes designed by accountancy firms. [142718]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue cannot comment on particular cases. However, the Government regard exchange of information as essential in combating tax evasion and avoidance. The Inland Revenue regularly provides appropriate information under the provisions of agreements that provide for exchange of information.

Tax Credits

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the time scale is for the repayment of tax credit overpayments; [142252]

(2) what methods of repayment of tax credit overpayment are available; [142253]

(3) how many people in (a) Jarrow constituency, (b) South Tyneside, (c) Tyne and Wear, (d) the North East and (e) the UK have received tax credit overpayments. [142254]

Dawn Primarolo: Overpayments of tax credits are identified when circumstances and income for the tax year are known and the award is finalised. Therefore no figures for the number of families with overpayment are yet available. During the year, awards of tax credit may be adjusted when changes of circumstances are reported or to prevent an overpayment arising at the end of the year.

The Inland Revenue's Code of Practice 26 explains how overpayments identified at the end of the year are recovered, and over what period.

Tax Penalties

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the yield in each year since 1997 was of (a) tax penalties and (b) interest on overdue tax accruing to (i) the Inland Revenue and (ii) Customs and Excise; and what percentage of total tax revenue this represented. [142249]

Dawn Primarolo: The information is as follows:

Inland Revenue

Details of the yield, to include additional tax, interest and penalties resulting from the Inland Revenue's work tackling non-compliance are set out in the Inland Revenue Annual Reports, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library. While separate details of late filing penalties are shown, details of the full amount of other penalties included in yield figures shown are not available and could be ascertained only at disproportionate cost.

Receipts from interest on overdue tax in the accounting years from 1997 are shown in the following table. Figures for 2002 will not be available until the Board publishes its annual report shortly.

	Total receipts (£ million)	Interest receipts (£ million)	Percentage
1997	102,431.5	230.1	0.23
1998	116,237.9	260.1	0.22
1999	125,888.9	321.1	0.26
2000	117,298.2	319.0	0.27
2001	117,842.7	327.2	0.27

Customs and Excise

The table contains information published in the Customs and Excise Annual Report. The report for 2002–03 is yet to be finalised for publication.

	All taxes and duties (£ million)[1]	Fines and penalties (£ million)	Interest (£ million)[2]	Penalties and interest as percentage total yield
1996–97	82,381	82	28	0.13
1997–98	90,136	90	33	0.14
1998–99	94,033	96	37	0.14
1999–2000	97,699	98	49	0.15
2000–01	102,282	103	39	0.14
2001–02	104,874	88	41	0.12
2002–03	108,895	106	36	0.13

[1] Does not include penalty or interest receipts.

[2] Interest is charged only on incorrect tax declarations where it represents commercial restitution.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the current interest rates (a) charged on overdue tax and (b) paid on money owed to taxpayers are; and how these figures have changed since the latest rise in base rates by the Bank of England. [142250]

Dawn Primarolo: The information is to be found on the Inland Revenue's website at http://newinternet.inrev.gov.uk/rates/interest.htm.

VAT (Children's Clothes)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to revise the criteria for the size of children's clothes subject to VAT. [142181]

John Healey: Following a review which the Government undertook with the industry and others, the scope of the zero rate was simplified and modernised in Budget 2001 to reflect more accurately the size of the average 13-year-old child. There are no plans to revise the criteria further.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Alcohol Bans

Richard Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness in tackling antisocial behaviour by the designation by local community safety partnerships of alcohol-free zones in public places; [142406]

(2) if he will list the local authorities which have banned the consumption of alcohol in designated public places where the premises concerned are not licensed. [142407]

Ms Blears: Section 12–16 of the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001 (CJPA) came into force on 1 September 2001. The provisions in the Act allow local authorities to designate areas to restrict public drinking where there is evidence that nuisance is alcohol related. In such designated areas the police may use their discretionary powers to confiscate all alcohol where they reasonably believe that continued drinking in that place will lead to further disorder or nuisance. An assessment has not been undertaken on the effectiveness of designation orders.

Under the CJPA a place is not a designated public place or a part of such a place if it is a licensed premises or a registered club. As of June 2003, over 70 local authorities had notified the Home Office that they have made designation orders under Section 13 of the CJPA to restrict antisocial public drinking in areas that have experienced alcohol-related disorder or nuisance. The local authorities were listed in the response given to my hon. Friend the Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) on 18 June 2003, Official Report, column 257W.

Air Support Units (Police)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support he gives to police air support units; in which locations; and what bids have been submitted in the most recent round. [141196]

Ms Blears: £4 million is made available each year towards capital funding for police air support units in England and Wales.

Bids currently under consideration by the Home Office for capital funding in the next financial year have been received from the following forces:

Cambridgeshire

Cheshire

Derbyshire

Dorset

Dyfed Powys

Essex

Leicestershire

Metropolitan police

Northumbria (on behalf of the North East Consortium which includes Durham and Cleveland police)

North Wales

Suffolk

West Yorkshire

A decision on the allocation of capital funding for 2004–05 will be announced in January 2004.

Airwave Service

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, whether initial problems in the implementation of the Airwave service for the police have been overcome; and whether he is able to quantify the benefit to the police of this service as indicated in the Government's response to the 64th Report of the Committee of Public Accounts of Session 2001–02, Public Private Partnerships: Airwave. [142107]

Ms Blears: Yes. The initial problems have been overcome. The Airwave service is now available to more than half of the police forces. It is fully operational in nine police forces, and over 30,000 users are already enjoying the benefits of modern, secure, high-quality communications.

A Business Benefits project has been set up under the Airwave programme. It will provide a full quantitative analysis of the benefits of Airwave compared with previous police radio systems and will monitor the realisation of those benefits.

Anti-Social Behaviour Orders

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Anti-Social Behaviour Orders have been granted for (a) juveniles and (b) adults (i) in Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East (ii) in the Teesside region and (iii) in England. [141864]

Ms Blears: Information on the number of notifications received by the Home Office of Anti-Social Behaviour Orders (ASBOs) issued up to 30 June 2003 (latest available) is given in the table.

Number of ASBOs issued, as notified to the Home Office, within the Cleveland Magistrates Courts Committee area, from 1 April 1999 up to 30 June 2003

Area	Total issued	Total age 10–17	Total age 18+	Total age not known
Cleveland/Teesside region[1]	14	12	1	1
Of which:
From 1 April 1999 to 31 May 2000 by pfa[2]	1	0	0	1
From 1 June 2000 to 30 June 2003 by local authority area	13	12	1	0
Hartlepool BC	6	5	1	0
Middlesbrough Council	3	3	0	0
Redcar and Cleveland Council	2	2	0	0
Stockton on Tees BC	2	2	0	0
England	1,293	650	493	[3]150

[1] The Teesside region includes Hartlepool, Redcar and East Cleveland, Middlesbrough and Stockton on Tees local authority areas.

[2] From 1 April 1999 to 31 May 2000 data was collected by police force area (pfa) only on the number of orders issued or refused.

[3] Includes 104 orders issued from 1 April 1999 to 31 May 2000.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many anti-social behaviour orders have been issued in (a) the Vale of York and (b) North Yorkshire in each of the last three years. [142048]

Ms Blears: The number of notifications received by the Home Office of anti-social behaviour orders (ASBOs) issued within the North Yorkshire magistrates courts committee (MCC) area, which includes the Vale of York, up to 30 June 2003 (latest available) is given in the table.

The number of notifications, as reported to the Home Office, of ASBOs issued in North Yorkshire from 1 June 20001 to 30 June 2003 (latest available)

	Number
1 June 2000 to 31 December 2000	0
1 January 2001 to 31 December 2001	7
1 January 2002 to 30 November 2002	0
31 December 2002 to 30 June 2003[2]	2
Total	9

[1] From 1 April 1999 up to 31 May 2000 data collected by police force area (pfa).

[2] Following implementation of the Police Reform Act (2 December 2002), data for December 2002 is incorporated into the first quarter 2003 data.

Antiques Burglary

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of antiques burglary were recorded by police in the SENLAC division of East Sussex in each quarter in the last two years. [140889]

Ms Blears: This information is not collected centrally.

Asylum Law

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of people to whom clause 15 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Bill might apply. [142226]

Beverley Hughes: Clause 15 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Bill, which refers to electronic monitoring, applies to persons subject to immigration control who appear to be at least 18 years of age where a residence restriction is imposed, where a reporting restriction could be imposed and where immigration bail is granted subject to a bail bond (except where bail is granted by a police officer or the Special Immigration Appeals Commission). The number of individuals to whom this would apply would also depend on individual risk assessment and the outcome of pilots which we plan to undertake once the legislation is in place.

Bedfordshire Police Force

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers left the Bedfordshire Police Force in (a) the last year for which figures are available and (b) each of the last five years, broken down by (i) rank and (ii) length of service. [140984]

Ms Blears: The available information is given in the table.

Police officer leavers for Bedfordshire Police Force (full time equivalents)

	Association of Chief Police Officers rank	Chief Superintendent	Superintendent	Chief Inspector	Inspector	Sergeant	Constable
31 March 1999	2	—	5	1	4	6	45
31 March 2000	0	—	3	2	1	7	45
31 March 2001	1	—	1	0	2	6	62
31 March 2002	1	—	1	0	4	6	38
31 March 2003[1]	0	1	0	1	7	12	71

[1] Not comparable to previous wastage figures as data do not include transfers to other England and Wales forces and officers leaving after a period of secondment.

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers were recruited to the Bedfordshire Police Force in (a) the last year for which figures are available and (b) each of the last five years. [141003]

Ms Blears: The available information is given in the table:

Police officers joining Bedfordshire Police Force (full time equivalents)

Bedfordshire	Number
3 March 1999	36
3 March 2000	37
3 March 2001	82
3 March 2002	131
3 March 2003[1]	136

[1] Not comparable to previous recruitment figures as data include transfers from other England and Wales forces and officers returning after a period of secondment.

Burglaries (Suffolk)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many burglaries were reported to the police in Suffolk in each year since 1996–97; and how many reported burglaries in Suffolk resulted in a conviction in each year. [140610]

Ms Blears: Numbers of reported crimes are not collected centrally. The number of crimes recorded by the police are collected and published annually. Information on recorded burglaries are given in the table.

All Burglary[1] in Suffolk from 1996 to 2002–03

Year	Number of offences recorded
1996[2]	6,384
1997[2]	6,094
1998–99[3]	6,241
1999–2000	6,214
2000–01[4]	5,738
2001–02	6,346
2002–03	6,248

[1] All burglary comprises burglary in a dwelling, and burglary in a building other than a dwelling.

[2] Recorded on a calendar year basis up to 1997 and on a financial year basis thereafter.

[3] There was a change of counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998, which had the effect of increasing the number of crimes counted. Numbers of offences for years before and after this date are therefore not directly comparable.

[4] Suffolk implemented the National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS) on 1 April 2000, two years prior to the national implementation. This will have had the effect of inflating the number of crimes counted.

Number of convictions for all burglary offences in Suffolk[1] are not available before 1999–2000. The available statistics are given in the table.

Year	Number of convictions
1999–2000	414
2000–01	369
2001–02	337

Closed Circuit Television Cameras

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funds are available for installation of CCTV cameras in villages. [142170]

Ms Blears: There are currently funds available for the installation of CCTV in all locations, including villages, under the Building Safer Communities Fund. The Building Safer Communities Fund is allocated by the Home Office to Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships to enable them to tackle local crime priorities through a number of interventions, including CCTV. For 2003–04 the Building Safer Communities Fund has provided Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships with £72.3 million.

Community Support Officers

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many community support officers served (a) St. Helens, (b) Merseyside and (c) the North West region in each year since 1992. [141290]

Ms Blears: The Community Support Officers (CSO) initiative began in September 2002. Accordingly between 1992 and September 2002, there were no CSOs in St. Helens, Merseyside and the North West region.

The table gives a breakdown of CSO deployment in the North West region from December 2002 to date and a projection for April 2004.

Force	31 December 2002	1 April 2003	[1]Recruitment to date	[2]1 April 2004
St. Helens	0	8	10	20
Merseyside	0	40	64	100
Total North West Region	21	278	357	426

Crime (St. Helens)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimate he has made of the number of (a) violent crimes, (b) gun-related crimes and (c) burglaries which were drug-related in Merseyside in each year since 1992; [141288]

(2) how many reported crimes there were in St. Helens in each year since 1992, broken down by major category. [141289]

Ms Blears: Statistical data on numbers of offences recorded in different areas do not indicate which may have been committed due to drug taking. However, results from the NEW-ADAM research programme of interviewing and drug testing arrestees between 1999 and 2000 sheds some light on the links between drugs and crime in 16 sites throughout England and Wales. Summary data published in 2001 found that:

(a) 56 per cent. of arrestees tested positive for an illegal drug with up to 29 per cent. testing positive for opiates (including heroin) and/or cocaine (including crack);

(b) of those arrestees who reported using illegal drugs in the year prior to arrest, 40 per cent. acknowledged a link between their drug use and offending. Past year users of heroin and/or cocaine/crack were nearly twice as likely (78 per cent.) to acknowledge a link.

(c) Those not reporting any drug use in the last year reported an average of 46 acquisitive crimes (including theft, burglary, shoplifting, fraud, handling stolen goods, drugs supply and prostitution offences) over the same period. Drug use in general and especially use of heroin and/or cocaine/crack (hcc), was associated with much higher levels of offending. Among hcc users, respondents reported an average of 432 acquisitive crimes. This was nearly ten times higher than for non-drug users.

However, it should be noted that because an arrestee tested positive for drugs it does not necessarily mean that the consumption of drugs caused the crime to be committed. As a result, while the NEW-ADAM study advanced our knowledge of the links between drugs and crime, it will always be difficult to calculate precisely what proportion of crime is drug-related.

In September 2003, the Home Office Arrestee Survey commenced at 60 randomly selected custody suites in England and Wales. The survey is ongoing, and involves interviewing and drug testing a representative sample of around 9,000 arrestees per year about their offending and drug use. The survey will enable research into the links between drugs and offending and will also provide robust data at a national level to allow tracking of the Home Office Public Service Agreement target to reduce drug related crime.

Numbers of crimes recorded by the police in St. Helens are collected and published at Basic Command Unit (BCU) level. At this level, data is available from 1999–2000 to 2002–2003, and the number of crimes recorded are published for six key offence groups, as given in the table.

Number of crimes recorded in St. Helens Basic Command Unit from 1999–2000 to 2002–2003

	Year
Offence	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03
Violence against the person	1,693	1,795	1,913	2,406
Sexual offences	109	153	125	192
Robbery	171	168	214	190
Burglary in a dwelling	1,550	1,669	1,569	1,655
Theft of a motor vehicle	2,000	1,923	1,650	1,654
Theft from a vehicle	1,680	1,725	1,652	1,822

[1] Merseyside implemented the National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS) on 1 April 2002. This will have had the effect of inflating the number of crimes counted. Therefore, following the introduction of the Standard, numbers of recorded crimes are not directly comparable with previous years.

Crime Figures

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how may crimes were committed per head of population in West Derbyshire police force areas in the last five years for which figures are available; [141427]

(2) how many deaths there have been because of (a) dangerous driving, (b) driving under the influence of illegal drugs and (c) driving under the influence of alcohol in (i) West Derbyshire and (ii) East Midlands in each year since 2001. [141429]

Ms Blears: Information on the total number of crimes in West Derbyshire is not available centrally. Recorded crimes per head of population relating to relating to the Derbyshire Constabulary area is given in the table.

Number of crimes recorded by the police per 1,000 population

	Derbyshire
1998–99[1]	87
1999–2000	88
2000–01	84
2002–03[2]	108

[1] There was a change of counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998, which had the affect of increasing the number of crimes counted. Numbers of offences for years before and after this date, and figures calculated from them, are therefore not directly comparable.

[2] The National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS) was introduced in the Derbyshire Constabulary area in April 2002. Nationally, the NCRS has had the effect of increasing the number of rimes recorded by the police. Therefore, following the introduction of the Standard numbers of recorded crimes and figures derived from them are not comparable with previous years.

Statistics on the number of deaths caused by dangerous driving, driving under the influence of illegal drugs and driving under the influence of alcohol, are not available.

Forensic Science Service

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the proposed privatisation of the Forensic Science Service. [141861]

Ms Blears: We are not proposing to privatise the Forensic Science Service (FSS). The reasons for the decision to transform the FSS into a Public Private Partnership (PPP) were set out in the Home Secretary's statement to the House on 17 July. The actions we are taking to establish a successful PPP will ensure that the FSS will continue to compete successfully in partnership with government, while continuing to protect the public interest and deliver major benefits to the wider criminal justice system.

We have accepted the recommendation of the independent Review of the FSS that the National DNA Database should remain exclusively under public sector control. Arrangements for the future ownership, governance and management are currently subject to consultation between Association of Chief Police Officers, the Association of Police Authorities and the Home Office.

Colin Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies have been carried out to estimate the future level of investment needed by the Forensic Science Service in the years 2004 to 2007. [141933]

Ms Blears: Internal and external studies have been undertaken in order to estimate the future level of investment needed by the Forensic Science Service (FSS) in the years 2004–07.

Each year the FSS reviews its short, medium and long-term investment plans as part of its internal corporate and business planning process.

The recent Review of the FSS led by Robert McFarland in 2002–03 for the Home Office assessed the future level of investment needed by the Agency from an external perspective.

Additionally, the FSS's requirements in the area of investment will be reviewed as part of the move to establish it as a Public Private Partnership.

Colin Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what legislation is required to alter the status of the Forensic Science Service in line with the proposed Government plans for the service. [141934]

Ms Blears: The transformation of the Forensic Science Service into a Public Private Partnership will require the revocation of The Forensic Science Service Trading Fund Order 1998.

Colin Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the terms of reference are for the Development and Remuneration Committee of the Forensic Science Service. [141935]

Ms Blears: The Development and Remuneration Committee of the Forensic Science Service is responsible for advising on the organisation of the agency, the staff reward and recognition strategy, and its management and succession planning.

The Committee also reviews and makes recommendations regarding non-executive directors' fees and expenses, and the terms and conditions of the Chief Executive and the Executive Board.

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will publish the terms of reference of the Home Office Review of the Forensic Science Service. [142191]

Ms Blears: I have arranged for a copy of the Final Report of the independent review of the Forensic Science Service to be placed in the Library.

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will publish a timetable for the implementation of the recommendations of the Home Office Review of the Forensic Science Service. [142192]

Ms Blears: The implementation of the recommendations of the independent review of the Forensic Science Service, including the timetable for its transformation into a Public Private Partnership, are currently the subject of detailed discussions with key stakeholders.

Gender-specific Drug Treatment

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to create a specialist gender-specific drug treatment service for women in the community. [141623]

Caroline Flint: The National Treatment Agency is implementing Models of Care, which lays down a national framework for the commissioning and provision of local drug services. Models of Care sets quality standards, including on services for women and those with dependent children.

The NTA has also commissioned the University of Central Lancashire and Drugscope to work directly with drug services in three regions on meeting the needs of specific groups including women with dependants.

All Drug Action Teams are expected to review provision for under represented groups on an annual basis as part of their treatment planning.

High Crime Areas

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what efforts are being made by his Department to encourage the reporting of crime in high crime areas. [140468]

Ms Blears: We are encouraging more people to report crimes in all areas by improving the way in which crimes reported to the police are recorded. The National Crime Recording Standard, formally introduced in all forces in England and Wales in April 2002, aims to bring greater consistency to the way in which crime is recorded by the police and to ensure a more victim centred approach to crime recording.

There have also been crime specific initiatives aimed at increasing the numbers of such crimes reported to the police, particularly, domestic violence and sexual offences. For example, the British Crime Survey shows that there was a 5 per cent. Increase in the proportion of violent crimes being reported to the police in 2002–03 compared with the previous year.

With a total sample size of 40,000 interviews a year, more emphasis is now being placed on the British Crime Survey as a way of measuring crime, as it covers unreported and unrecorded crime as well as offences which are reported to the police. As the survey is unaffected by changes in the level of public reporting to the police or police recording, it provides a more accurate picture of crime across England and Wales.

Iraq

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many UK civilian police officers have been operating in Iraq in each month since May; and what plans there are for future deployment. [141147]

Mr. Rammell: I have been asked to reply.

There are currently 11 UK civilian police officers in Iraq, in both Baghdad and Basra. The first four officers were deployed in July. They were joined by six more officers in October and one in November. We intend to deploy 24 police officers soon to the Regional Police Training Academy in Basra to help train new recruit to the Iraqi Police Service.

Knives

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information his Department records on the types of knives used in assaults and other criminal offences; and what assessment he has made of the trends; [141365]

(2) how many woundings involving knives were reported in which (a) the perpetrators and (b) the victims were aged (i) under 16, (ii) 16 to 18 and (iii) over 18 in the last five years for which figures are available. [141366]

Ms Blears: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions his Department has had with Chief Constables on the use of stop and search powers to tackle the carrying of knives. [141549]

Ms Blears [holding answer 3 December 2003]: There have been no recent discussions between the Home Department and Chief Constables on the use of stop and search powers specifically to tackle the carrying of knives.

However, we have consulted the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) on the revision of PACE Code A. It provides the guidance for police officers on the use of the powers of stop and search, including the powers to stop and search for offensive weapons and dangerous instruments. This guidance has recently been revised—a new version came into force on 1 April 2003. A further revision will come into force in April 2004. ACPO will be consulted on future revisions.

A stop and search sub group has been set up under the Lawrence Steering Group to look at issues around stop and search. ACPO are represented on that group. The sub group's work includes considering ACPO guidance to the police on their powers to stop and search for offensive weapons and dangerous instruments under section 60 Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994.

Neighbourhood Watch Scheme

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will make a statement on the relationship between the police and neighbourhood watch schemes. [140891]

Ms Blears: The police play a crucial supporting role for Neighbourhood Watch at a local level. This includes providing advice on how to set up schemes and assisting with administration and publicity. In some cases co-ordinators and scheme members work as part of a "Watch Support Group" in police premises.

Watch schemes can be vital partners of the police in the fight against crime. Their role in preventing crime, supporting victims and reporting crime is a key one.

The Government along with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the National Neighbourhood Watch Association are building on this relationship to ensure that those who give their time to their local Neighbourhood Watch schemes and their communities will get as much support as possible from the police.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how much funding was provided by central Government to the Neighbourhood Watch Scheme in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [140892]

Ms Blears: Neighbourhood Watch is a movement of over 155,000 local schemes covering around six million households. Local schemes are independent and largely self-financing. Police support for schemes can be considerable but its monetary value has not been calculated.

The Home Office supports the National Neighbourhood Watch Association. For the last three years it sponsored their annual conference at a cost of £80,000pa. The organisation is largely self-financing with funding from the private sector. Last year the Home Office provided a grant of £150,000 and this year it has provided £200,000 to date. This was to assist the Organisation during a period of transition between private sponsors.

The Home Office also pays for the production of a range of Neighbourhood Watch Publications, including a training manual for scheme co-ordinators, worth around £100,000 each year.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many Neighbourhood Watch schemes there are in England and Wales; and what estimate he has made of how many people belong to them. [140893]

Ms Blears: The 2000 British Crime Survey (BCS) estimated that there were over 155,000 Neighbourhood Watch Schemes in England and Wales covering more than six million households. National Neighbourhood Watch Association estimates that there are approximately 10 million Neighbourhood Watch members in England and Wales.

A copy of the 2000 BCS Findings on Neighbourhood Watch has been placed in the Library.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of Neighbourhood Watch schemes. [140894]

Ms Blears: The British Crime Survey contains a number of questions about Neighbourhood Watch, including an assessment of its effectiveness. The findings of the 2000 British Crime Survey have been published and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Police

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what incentives he is providing to attract police officers who are of continuing value to the service to continue beyond 30 years of service. [142109]

Ms Blears: The Police Negotiating Board (PNB) Agreement of May 2002 included outline provisions for flexible arrangements that would give managers in the police service scope to retain officers who are entitled to retire with maximum pension benefits where they wish to do so. The main points of the 30+ scheme subsequently agreed by the PNB are:

Retirement from the force with the option of commuting part of one's pension for a tax-free lump sum;

Re-engagement at former rank and pay level;

Pension abatement lifted to allow for any replacement allowances lost on retirement to be made good;

Eligibility for Special Priority Payments and Competency Related Threshold Payments on the same basis as other officers;

Officer ceases to be a member of the Police Pension Scheme but can accrue further pension benefits by taking out a personal pension.

The 30+ scheme has been piloted in a selection of forces in England and Wales since December 2002. A total of 15 forces are currently participating and the initial response to the scheme has been generally positive, both from officers and forces. We are currently reviewing the progress of this scheme and will send a report to the PNB later this month about extending the scheme nationally.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued to police forces in relation to police officers' membership of or affiliation to (a) political parties and (b) other political organisations; and if he will place copies in the Library. [141806]

Ms Blears: Schedule 1 to the Police Regulations 2003 states that "A member of a police force shall at all times abstain from any activity which is likely to interfere with the impartial discharge of his duties or which is likely to give rise to the impression among members of the public that it may so interfere; and in particular a member of a police force shall not take any active part in politics".

Copies of Police Regulations 2003 are in the Library (Statutory Instrument No. 527 of 2003).

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations have taken place over the last year about the formula for the police financial settlement. [140580]

Ms Blears: The policing community was consulted in August and October 2003 on the potential impact of changes in data used in the formula.

To provide stability in police funding following major changes for 2003–04, no changes to the structure of the police funding formula have been made for 2004–05 so formula change has not been the subject of consultation.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional police officers have been recruited in (a) England and (b) East Sussex in the last five years; and what percentage increase this represents in each case. [140890]

Ms Blears: The available information is given in the table:

Total police strength[1]

31 March	England	[2]Sussex
1999	117,195	2,847
2000	115,324	2,822
2001	116,548	2,855
2002	120,073	2,893
2003	124,158	2,989
% change 31 March 1999 to 31 March 2000	5.9%	5.0%

[1] Full time equivalent

[2] Figures are available for the Sussex Police Force as a whole and not East Sussex as requested.

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been (a) killed and (b) injured by drivers (i) failing to stop and (ii) evading arrest in each of the last 10 years; and how many of those injured have retired from the police service as a result. [141326]

Ms Blears: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. Data on homicide of police officers where the method is described as being struck by a motor vehicle and the circumstances as resisting arrest or a reckless act involving a motor vehicle are listed in the following table:

Currently recorded homicides of police officers struck by a motor vehicle

	Circumstances
	Resisting arrest	Reckless act involving a motor vehicle

Rural Crime

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received on the incidence of rural crime, with particular reference to farm land; [141244]

(2) what representations he has received on the effectiveness of (a) Farm Watch and (b) other rural initiatives to defeat crime; and what support Farm Watch receives from police forces. [141245]

Ms Blears: I am not aware of any representations concerning the effectiveness of Farm Watch, other rural crime initiatives, or concerning rural crime with regard to farmland. The Government are committed to tackling rural crime and has a £30 million Rural Policing Fund, specifically intended to enhance policing in rural areas.

Most rural forces have Watch schemes in place to tackle rural crime. North Yorkshire Police fully supports Farm Watch and the force has three dedicated Watch Co-ordinators supporting the scheme.

Sexual Assaults

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sexual assaults were recorded in each Basic Command Unit area of each metropolitan police force in each year for which Basic Command Unit information has been available. [141195]

Ms Blears: Numbers of sexual assaults are not available at Basic Command Unit (BCU) level, although the total number of sexual offences have been published at this level. The metropolitan police forces are taken to be the Metropolitan Police Service, City of London, West Midlands, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, West Yorkshire, South Yorkshire and Northumbria. The published information is available via the Research Development Statistics (RDS) website, at the following locations:

http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/pdfs/1201data3.xls

http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/pdfs2/hosb703sup2.xls

The National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS) was introduced across England and Wales in April 2002. Some forces adopted the principles of the Standard prior to this date. Of the eight metropolitan forces, both Greater Manchester (January 2002) and West Midlands (April 1999) adopted the Standard early. Broadly, the NCRS had the effect of increasing the number of crimes recorded by the police. Therefore, following the introduction of the Standard, numbers of recorded crimes are not comparable with previous years.

Speed Cameras (Vandalism)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many speed cameras have been vandalised in each year from 1998 to 2002. [142238]

Caroline Flint: The information is not recorded centrally by the Home Office. We understand from informal reports that such acts are isolated incidents.

Speeding

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which speed camera resulted in the highest number of prosecutions in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002. [140826]

Ms Blears: Information on the number of prosecutions for speeding offences detected by type of camera device used or individual camera location are not collected centrally.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hand-held speed-detecting radar guns are in operation in the UK, broken down by (a) police force and (b) Safety Camera Partnership. [142236]

Caroline Flint: The information is not available centrally. It is a matter for chief officers of police to decide on the number and type of speed detection devices to purchase from the overall funds allocated to them.

Vehicle Crime

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if his Department encourages the fitting of window security reinforcement systems as part of the campaign to reduce vehicle crime; and if he will make a statement; [141517]

(2) what plans he has to achieve a reduction in vehicle crimes in which vehicle windows are broken to secure entry. [141518]

Ms Blears: The Home Office New Car Security Guidance published in 1998 encouraged car manufacturers to fit glazing that would resist attack by methods commonly used by criminals for a minimum of 30 seconds. This standard applies whether conventional laminated glazing or security film is fitted. Officials are considering the merits of using the recently issued German test standard to measure whether products meet this Home Office requirement. In addition, any glazing (laminated or when fitted with security film) has to meet the appropriate standards set out in the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986, Directive 92/22/EEC and UN/ECE Regulation 43 to ensure safety and durability. We will encourage the fitting of any laminated glazing or security film that meets statutory requirements and makes a significant contribution to vehicle crime reduction.

We aim to raise motorists' awareness of the benefits of laminated glazing through Home Office publicity material, particularly the booklet "Steer Clear of Car Crime" and our website www.secureyourmotor.gov.uk. We also provide links from our Department for Transport websites to the insurance industry website (www.ncsr.co.uk) which provides motorists with information about their assessment of each car's ability to resist criminal attempts to gain entry.

Victims (Compensation)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for widening access to compensation for victims of crime. [142172]

Ms Blears: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 8 December, Official Report, column 235W.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Art Acquisition

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since

1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by his Department since 1997 has been; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by his Department through sales of works of art has been since 1997. [142355]

Mr. Pearson: The annual amount spent on the acquisition of Works of Art by the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments in each financial year since 1997 is detailed in the table. The single most expensive piece of art purchased in that period has been a painting entitled 'Red Chard' at a cost of £7,650. No revenue has been raised through sales of works of art since 1997.

	Paintings (including prints)	Sculptures (including textiles)	Total
1997–98	21,200	1,800	23,000
1998–99	35,500	3,800	39,300
1999–2000	53,000	6,000	59,000
2000–01	30,000	—	30,000
2001–02	30,050	2,950	33,000
2002–03	23,500	2,500	26,000

Benefit Fraud

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to prevent benefit fraud in Northern Ireland. [142666]

Mr. Spellar: I would refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Strangford (Mrs. Robinson) on 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 266W.

Cory Report

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to consult the families concerned prior to the publication of the Cory Report; and if he will make a statement. [143184]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Government are committed to publishing Justice Cory's report as soon as possible, in line with the judge's terms of reference. It remains my priority to inform the families as soon as possible in advance of publication, while bearing in mind my obligations to Parliament.

Disabled Persons Parking Scheme

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons those with a colostomy in Northern Ireland no longer qualify for the Disabled Persons Blue Badge Scheme; if he will reverse this decision; and if he will make a statement. [142665]

Mr. Spellar: I have asked the Chief Executive of Roads Service to write to the hon. Lady in response to this question. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Domestic Central Heating

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many oil-fired domestic central heating installations there are in Northern Ireland. [143170]

Mr. Spellar: The Northern Ireland House Condition Survey 2001 found that 377,800 homes in Northern Ireland have oil-fired central heating systems. A further 61,500 homes have dual-fired central heating, where in the great majority of cases oil was the primary fuel.

Evacuated Dwellings Scheme

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many police officers in Northern Ireland have had their homes purchased under the scheme to Purchase Evacuated Dwellings as a result of terrorist threats in each year since the scheme was established. [143185]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Gentleman when the figures have been compiled, a copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Homelessness

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were registered homeless in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement on the measures he is taking to address homelessness in Northern Ireland. [142675]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is as follows:

Financial year	Number accepted as homeless
2002–03	8,580
2001–02	7,374
2000–01	6,457
1998–99	4,997

The Government are fully committed towards helping those unfortunate enough to become homeless and while the figures show an annual increase, last year the Northern Ireland Housing Executive re-housed half of all homeless households within three months and 94 per cent. within 12 months. This year the Government plan to fund the provision of 213 new units in Northern Ireland, specifically for homeless families and single people, at a total cost of around £13.5 million. It is also overseeing the implementation of new arrangements for providing housing support services which include provision to help sustain and improve the existing support services provided to homeless people. The Northern Ireland Housing Executive has published the Northern Ireland Homeless Strategy and is working in partnership with all of those who have a part to play in tackling the problem of homelessness. In addition, an inter-departmental, cross sectoral Promoting Social Inclusion Review Group has been set up to consider how to ensure, firstly, that the risk of homelessness is reduced and secondly, that the full range of appropriate services is available to homeless people.

Midwives

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how many (a) part-time and (b) full-time midwives were serving in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement on the recruitment of midwives in Northern Ireland. [142668]

Angela Smith: The information requested is as follows:

Number of part-time and full-time midwives working in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years

	Part-time		Full-time
	Count	[1] WTE	Count	WTE
September 1999	668	437.89	563	563.00
September 2000	706	461.83	506	506.00
September 2001	738	477.92	497	497.00
September 2002	758	492.76	498	498.00
September 2003	769	500.56	508	508.00

Human Resource Management System

The Department currently commissions 40 places per annum on an 18 month shortened pre-registration midwifery training programme for registered nurses and the current group of students will complete their course in March 2004. A further group of 40 students commenced training in November 2003. In addition the DHSSPS as a new initiative has commissioned 15 places on a three year direct entry pre-registration midwifery programme in September 2003.

Monitoring Commission

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether allegations of activities by the Provisional IRA and members of Sinn Fein in (a) Colombia and (b) Florida can be investigated by the International Monitoring Commission. [142775]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on 18 November 2003, Official Report, column 774W.

Plastic Baton Rounds

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of plastic baton rounds ordered by the outgoing Northern Ireland Police Authority in November 2001 have (a) been delivered and (b) passed their active shelf life. [142186]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Chief Constable has advised me that no baton rounds were ordered on behalf of the Police Service of Northern Ireland during November 2001.

Prescription Fraud

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he has taken to tackle prescription fraud in the NHS in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [141849]

Angela Smith: The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, together with the Health Boards and the Central Services Agency, has been making considerable efforts to reduce losses through patient exemption fraud.

The key actions taken to date include:

The establishment of a dedicated Counter Fraud Unit to co-ordinate work to tackle prescription fraud;

The introduction for pharmacists of point of dispensing/treatment checks to confirm exemption from charges;

The introduction of a Fixed Penalty Charge Scheme for those who make false claims for free prescriptions. There have been some 500 charges imposed this year.

In sustaining efforts to further reduce patient exemption fraud it is planned to take the following actions:

The implementation of the criminal charge element of the Fixed Penalty Charge regulations. This will provide for a fine, upon conviction, of up to £2,500 for those who have been found to be persistently misclaiming exemption from health service charges; and Renewed publicity early in the new year regarding the Fixed Penalty Charge Scheme and the various categories of exemption that apply across the Family Health Services.

The indications are that the measures introduced over the last few years have contributed to reducing the losses by some £6 million per annum. While this reflects significant progress, we will continue to work for further improvements to ensure that these funds are not denied to the health service.

School Transport Bill

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce changes in home-to-school transport in Northern Ireland in line with proposals in the School Transport Bill in Great Britain. [142213]

Jane Kennedy: I have no plans at present to introduce changes in home-to-school transport in Northern Ireland in line with proposals in the School Transport Bill in Great Britain.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Child Support Agency

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether a lone parent in receipt of income support who receives a lump sum payment of arrears of child maintenance owing to delays in processing by the Child Support Agency will be able to carry forward unused amounts of child maintenance premium to set against the maintenance received. [143108]

Mr. Pond: Under the new child support scheme child maintenance premium is attributed to the same period as the payment of maintenance. Thus, if a non-resident parent pays £120 in child support, representing six weeks' liability of £20 per week, the child maintenance premium will be £60 (£10 x 6).

Health and Safety

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what representations he has received from the Health and Safety Commission about whether public sector sickness and absence should be a priority area; and if he will make a statement. [140648]

Mr. Browne: The Department has received representations from the Health and Safety Commission (HSC) on rolling out a programme of work addressed at improving health and safety performance in the public sector. We have agreed with them that this will become one of HSC's priority programmes.

A major element of HSC's "Government Setting an Example" programme will be supporting public sector organisations to reduce work related sickness absence through the development and dissemination of exemplary good practice in managing risks to occupational health, in particular musculo-skeletal disorders and stress.

The most recent analysis of sickness absence in the Civil Service for 2002 reports that mental illness and musculo-skeletal disorders are a major contributor to absence. HSE's stress management standards pilot includes organisations in the public sector. The pilot will end in Autumn 2003 and evaluation will continue until 2004.

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what progress has been made in addressing the health and safety needs of small and medium sized enterprises in the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement on the funding of further measures. [141036]

Mr. Browne: During the last year, the Health and Safety Commission (HSC) has taken a number of extra steps. This year the Commission reappointed a Commissioner specifically to represent small businesses.

It also piloted a grant scheme, providing matched funding for training and mentoring for micro businesses. The scheme finishes in December 2003, with an evaluation report expected early in 2004. HSC will evaluate the results of this scheme, comparing it with other initiatives, before making any recommendations about extending initiatives in the future.

The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) promoted new ways to promote positive models of health and safety through the use of new technology with well-tried methods, eg a CD Rom containing case studies and an electronic benchmark questionnaire. Both are supported by a managed visit programme whereby small businesses can learn and experience good practice.

Housing Benefit Subsidy Reform

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his written statement of 1 December 2003, Official Report, column 49WS, on housing benefit subsidy reform, how the new subsidy system for housing benefit and council tax benefit will be implemented, with particular reference to transitional relief; and what the arrangements will be for payment of the administration grant. [143212]

Mr. Pond: The new subsidy system will be introduced on 1 April 2004 to all local authorities in England, Wales and Scotland. All claims relating to the 2004–05 subsidy year will be made under the new rates and rules. We issued a subsidy Circular (S9/2003) to authorities on 1 December to explain all the detailed changes; a copy of this circular is available in the Library.

Although the overall levels of funding under the new system will be cost neutral compared to the old system, we recognise that individual authorities may gain or lose under the new arrangements. A transitional protection scheme has therefore been put in place. At the end of 2004–05 subsidy claims from each local authority will be compared with the amounts of subsidy they would have received had they claimed under the subsidy rules in place in 2003–04. The scheme will ensure that in the first year no authority will lose more than 1 per cent. of the funding which they would have received had the rates not changed.

Details of individual allocations to authorities of administration grant for 2004–05 will be issued in a circular by the end of the month. The administration grant will be paid to authorities in 12 monthly instalments from April 2004.

New Deal for Disabled People

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will publish statistics for New Deal for Disabled People job broker programmes regularly on the internet. [141498]

Mr. Browne: New Deal for Disabled People statistics are currently published quarterly on the New Deal website. The latest figures are available at: www.newdeal.gov.uk/documents/disabled/performancelatest.doc

Pension Credit

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners he estimates have yet to apply through the Pension Credit scheme in (a) West Derbyshire, (b) the East Midlands and (c) the UK; and what efforts are being made to simplify the Pension Credit process to make it easier for pensioners to claim their entitlement. [141438]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the form requested, but we estimate that around 300,000 pensioner households in the East Midlands region and around 3.8 million pensioner households in Great Britain are eligible for Pension Credit. The table gives the numbers of pensioner households and individuals in West Derbyshire, the East Midlands and Great Britain receiving Pension Credit at 17 October 2003. The number of pensioner households in Great Britain receiving Pension Credit had increased to approximately 1.97 million by 31 October.

The application process for Pension Credit has been designed to be straightforward for pensioners and their family and friends, who may apply on their behalf. The Pension Credit application line (0800 99 1234), which is the main method of applying, is working well and has taken over 1.3 million calls (to the end of October) since it became operational on 7 April. The Pension Service is able to offer alternative ways of applying to suit individual circumstances, including a textphone number and a paper application form. We are working closely with partner organisations to ensure that they can obtain paper application forms, through the Pension Service's local service, for those who want them. The local service can also arrange to see pensioners face-to-face either in a local surgery or, where appropriate, in the pensioner's home.

We continue to review and improve the application process in the light of experience.

Pension Credit recipients at 17 October 2003

Area	Pension Credit pensioner households	Pension Credit individuals
West Derbyshire parliamentary constituency	2,185	2,505
East Midlands Government Office Region (GOR)	130,935	155,725
Great Britain	1,902,715	2,247,605

1. Figures in the table have been rounded to the nearest five.

2. The parliamentary constituency and the GOR are assigned by matching postcodes against the relevant ONS postcode directory.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in what way the size of the lump sum available to an individual at age 70 to those who defer drawing their retirement pension will relate to the weekly retirement pension entitlement at age 65 of that individual. [143107]

Malcolm Wicks: We intend that the lump sum will comprise the total of the state pension given up during the period of deferment, plus a rate of return. Further details will be available when the Pensions Bill is published.

Research

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list the research conducted by his Department comparing a New Deal 25 plus unit of delivery and an Employment Zone in terms of (a) outcomes, (b) costs and (c) other factors; if he will place the findings in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [140481]

Mr. Browne: As with all our welfare to work programmes, Employment Zones are subject to extensive evaluation. The following reports have been published and placed in the Library: Working Age Evaluation Report 124—a qualitative study of Zone operations, published in July 2002; Working Age Evaluation Report 139—a qualitative study of Employment Zone and New Deal 25 Plus Personal Advisers, published in August 2002; Working Age Report 175—an economic study on the wider labour market impact of Employment Zones, and Working Age Report 176—a cohort study comparing characteristics and outcomes of Employment Zone participants with those of similar long-term unemployed clients published on 28 November 2003.

Report No. 176 compares the outcomes of Employment Zone and New Deal 25 Plus. However, this study does not provide us with a national evaluation of New Deal 25 Plus, but compares Employment Zone outcomes with New Deal 25 Plus outcomes in disadvantaged areas which are similar to the Employment Zone areas.

We keep all our programmes under on-going review to ensure they provide the most effective approach to helping long-term unemployed people into work.

Shell Brent Bravo

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to set up an inquiry into the deaths on the Shell Brent Bravo rig on 11 September. [140668]

Mr. Browne: A rigorous and detailed investigation into the two deaths on the Brent Bravo offshore installation on 11 September 2003 is already under way by both the Police and the Health and Safety Executive. The Health and Safety Executive will send their report to the Procurator Fiscal before the end of 2003. The Police will independently report to the Procurator Fiscal. Decisions on legal proceedings and Fatal Accident Inquiries are a matter for the Crown. The Health and Safety Commission does not consider it appropriate to seek the Secretary of State's consent for a public inquiry in addition to the investigations in progress.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Sellers' Packs

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister in relation to the proposed seller's packs what the Government's estimate is of the (a) average cost, (b) number of properties that will be involved, (c) total cost, (d) number of surveyors required, (e) number of transactions accelerated and (f) number of transactions that would otherwise be aborted in a calendar year. [142008]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister estimates that:

(a) The average cost would be £365 at current prices: made up of £300 for a home condition report and energy survey; £200 for local searches; £10 for office copy entries; and legal fees of £125 for pack assembly.

(b) The proposals would affect around 1.8 million homes put on the market each year. The total cost would be £1.14 billion. Most of this cost is already incurred under the current arrangements, although a majority of these are currently borne by the buyer rather than the seller.

(c) Between 7,500 and 8,500 surveyors will be needed altogether, to be met from surveyors already in place and others to be recruited and trained before implementation.

(d) The provision of vital information at the beginning of the process should ensure that almost all transactions will be accelerated.

(e) and (f) A reduction in the failure rate 10 per cent. is achievable thus avoiding over 380,000 aborted transactions per year. Our research suggests that over 580,000 transactions fail between offer acceptance and exchange of contracts (almost 30 per cent. of the total).

Tenancy Deposit Scheme

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of (a) the estimated total number of disputes requiring adjudication under a tenancy deposit scheme and (b) the estimated costs of those procedures. [142827]

Keith Hill: The estimated maximum number of disputes is 127,000 per year. Extrapolating from jurisdictions which have compulsory deposit schemes, the figure is 19,000 per year. On the second part of the question, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 8 December, Official Report, column 350W.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his latest estimate is of (a) the rate of alleged unreasonable withholding of deposits by landlords or agencies and (b) the cost of their retrieval. [142828]

Keith Hill: On the first part of the question, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Gower (Mr. Caton) on 10 November, Official Report, column 164W.

On the second part of the question, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 350W.

Transitional Protection Scheme

Mr. Dennis Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what assumptions will be made in the operation of the transitional protection scheme concerning the use of the option of housing authorities to apply to his Department for a special direction to transfer any amount of the 2001–02 Housing Revenue Account to the General Fund; [142822]

(2) whether he plans to consult on the possible ways in which the transitional protection scheme will operate; [142824]

(3) if he will provide before 1 January 2004 exemplifications of the impact of the Transitional Protection Scheme at an individual local authority level based on the latest available audited data on interim grant claims for 2003–04. [142826]

Keith Hill: Following publication of the rules of the scheme, authorities would have to write in to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister specifying how much they wished to transfer between the Housing Revenue Account (HRA) and General Fund in 2004–05. So long as this amount fell within the maximum amount permissible to them under the rules of the scheme, a direction would be issued to that effect. An authority would be able to apply for a direction for 2004–05 at any time before the accounts for that year were closed.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is consulting at present on proposals for the transitional protection scheme. Details of the proposed maximum amount transferable based on the audited figures for 2001–02 have been provided at an individual authority level with the current consultation on the draft HRA Subsidy Determination 2004–05. The closing date for consultation is 16 December 2003. The Office intends to issue the final rules of the scheme, including confirmed maximum amounts transferable by each authority in 2004–05, before 1 January 2004.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent of the areas which are under Taliban or Jihadist control in Afghanistan. [142863]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Although scattered elements of Al Qa'ida and the Taliban remain in Afghanistan and continue to mount attacks against international and Afghan targets, the perpetrators cannot be said to control the areas in which they operate. Many attacks are carried out by insurgents who cross between Pakistan and Afghanistan. Others are mounted on a hit-and-run basis by groups within Afghanistan. Extremists are undoubtedly attempting to establish bases from which to operate. But successful military operations conducted by the Coalition and units of the Afghan National Army are preventing them from doing so. Apparent isolated instances of low-level control generally amount to no more than evidence of Taliban intimidation of local communities.

Burma

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much (a) heroin and (b) methamphetamine he predicts will be produced by Burma this year; and how much he estimates will reach the UK. [140919]

Mr. Rammell: The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) estimated that 81,400 hectares of land were utilised for opium production in Burma in 2002. The UNODC figures for 2003 are not yet confirmed and initial indications suggest that they may show little overall change from 2002.

Burma is believed by UNODC to be one of the largest producers of methamphetamines in the world.

Despite Burma being a major producer of heroin and methamphetamines, there is no evidence that either of these substances is trafficked to the UK in significant quantities from Burma.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the involvement of the Burmese Junta in (a) heroin and (b) methamphetamine production and export, with particular reference to the new factory 15 miles west of Maeken. [140920]

Mr. Rammell: There are reports that some production and trafficking of opium from Burma is carried out with the knowledge of the Burmese authorities. The Burmese authorities' overall response to the continued production and export of heroin and methamphetamines has been limited. According to figures from the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) Burma is the world's second largest source of heroin and one of the largest sources of methamphetamines.

I have no specific information relating to a methamphetamine production facility near Maeken, although I am aware that UNODC reports indicate that such facilities exist in Burma.

Central Asian Drugs Action Plan

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Central Asian Drugs Action Plan since it was signed; how much the UK has contributed to it; and if he will make a statement. [141352]

Mr. Rammell: We welcome and support the aims of the European Union's action plan to help tackle the issue of drugs in central Asia. The plan covers Kazakstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Ukbekistan and should also be seen in the context of significant UK and EU action in Afghanistan, which is the main source country for heroin trafficked through central Asia. The UK does not directly fund the action plan. However we provide bilateral assistance to countries in the region which supports the plan's overall aims and objectives.

Colombia

Clare Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the UK ambassador to Colombia supported the President of Colombia's claim that human rights NGOs were supporters of terrorists. [141510]

Mr. Rammell: Our ambassador and I have repeatedly expressed our concerns to the Colombian Government about blanket condemnation of Human Rights groups and made clear that if there are credible allegations of inappropriate conduct by certain groups they should be investigated by judicial process.

Human Rights (Syria and Iran)

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what talks he has had with his counterparts in (a) Syria and (b) Iran regarding human rights in those countries. [140934]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary makes a point of raising our grave concerns about both countries' human rights record whenever he is able to. In 2003 he has done so with his Iranian counterpart on 6 February, 29 June and 24 September. He has not met the Syrian Foreign Minister this year. But we regularly raise human rights concerns with Syria, both bilaterally and in conjunction with EU partners. I spoke of Syria's human rights failings in a Syria adjournment debate on 2 July and my hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Mike O'Brien) raised the issue with President Bashar al-Assad during his visit to Damascus on 5 March.

Iraq

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many families of the Iraq Governing Council were living in Iraq before the Allied invasion this year; and how many are living in Iraq. [140910]

Mr. Rammell: A number of families of Iraqi Governing Council members were living in Iraq prior to military action, and others returned when hostilities ceased. This number changes as the families come and go.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the contracts which the Office of the Iraq Programme reported in November 2002 had been approved but for which no funds were available due to political disagreements between the governments of the US and UK and the then government of Iraq; what these contracts were for; and if he will make a statement. [141117]

Mr. Rammell: Gaps in funding for approved contracts were due to insufficient revenues from Iraqi oil exports, exacerbated by the former regime's unilateral decision on several occasions to halt exports. These contracts covered a range of sectors. The UN regularly urged the Iraqi Government to prioritise its requirements and ensure that minimal funds required to fund priority sector contracts were available, but the former regime refused to do so. Instead, Saddam Hussein continued to abuse the Oil For Food Programme, ordering many non essential goods, such as equipment for a new Olympic sports stadium.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is his policy that NATO should have a role in Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [141119]

Mr. Rammell: NATO currently provides limited support to the Polish-led Multi-National Division in south central Iraq. We do not envisage NATO taking on a major role in Iraq in the short term, although we do not rule out further involvement at some stage.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Coalition forces are taking to deal with shortages of medicine in Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [141181]

Mr. Rammell: Coalition forces are not responsible for the distribution of medicines in Iraq, but assist where appropriate. The public health system was left an empty shell by the former regime, but since May the Iraqi Ministry of Health has estimated that 15,000 tons of pharmaceuticals and medical supplies have been delivered. New drug supply systems are not yet fully operational. Until the supply accounting and reporting systems are in place, some difficulties will continue to occur.

Work is under way in the Iraqi Ministry of Health to develop a national drug formulary. This will form the baseline for future purchases throughout the country and will improve the sourcing of drugs. The Iraqi Ministry of Health, the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA) and the World Health Organisation are also furthering a complete review of missing drugs and supplies. This is scheduled to finish in three months.

These initiatives provide the best and only ways to ensure that full medical supplies are getting through to the Iraqi people and we will continue to support them.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Coalition forces are taking to deal with waste water being pumped untreated into rivers in Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [141182]

Mr. Rammell: The Coalition has carried out emergency repair and rehabilitation work on several waste water treatment works in Iraq. Coalition partners have also partly funded UNICEF's environmental and sanitation programme in Iraq, with the UK's Department for International Development (DFID) contributing £6,835,187. DFID has also given £16,500,000 to the Red Cross movement, whose work includes water and sanitation activities.

We understand that a request to the US Congress for $675 million specifically for waster water treatment has been successful and will be invested (by the Coalition's Programme Management Office) over the next two years.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's estimate is of the numbers of Muslims killed directly or indirectly by Saddam Hussein since 1979, based on additional information discovered since 1 May. [141282]

Mr. Rammell: From 1979 Saddam Hussein's regime was involved either directly, or indirectly in the deaths of hundreds of thousands of people, the large majority of whom were Muslims. These deaths occurred during conflicts with neighbouring countries and through internal repression. Since 1 May, a large quantity of documentation has been found in Iraq relating to killings and persecution by the former regime. We are working with Iraqi Ministries and other organisations to analyse this documentation. Until this work is complete, a final figure will not be known.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many mass graves have been discovered in Iraq since 1 May; and what estimate he has made of the number of people buried in each of those graves. [141283]

Mr. Rammell: Since 1 May, some 270 mass graves have been reported to the Coalition Provisional Authority, with more sites still being discovered. Of these, about one third have been assessed so far, with one third of these confirmed as mass graves. The UK has seconded a forensic team to the CPA to co-ordinate and prioritise forensic work. From documentary and physical evidence found so far, it is estimated that around 300,000 people may be buried in mass graves in Iraq, although the true number will not be known until full investigations have been completed.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence of torture and killing of Iraqi citizens under the regime of Saddam Hussein have been discovered in Iraq since 1 May. [141284]

Mr. Rammell: Since 1 May, both physical and documentary evidence has been found which details the torture and killing of Iraqi citizens under Saddam Hussein's regime, including systematic abuse in police stations and prisons. UK secondees in the Coalition Provisional Authority Office of Human Rights and Transitional Justice are helping to analyse documentary evidence and take personal testimonies of human rights abuses by the former regime.

Kuwait

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what negotiations he is having with Kuwait over the future operation of border crossings at Safwan. [141048]

Mr. Rammell: The UK is not currently engaged in direct negotiations with Kuwait about the Safwan border crossing. Nevertheless, there is a continued dialogue between the Coalition and Kuwait on ways to reduce delays in border crossings. We are awaiting Kuwaiti reaction to a draft Memorandum of Understanding prepared by the US Army in consultation with the Headquarters of Multi-National Division (South East). The MOU aims to ensure the smooth flow of traffic across the border while meeting Kuwaiti requirements for adequate security measures.

Middle East

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons the Government abstained in the vote on 16 September on Syria's draft resolution that Israel desist from any act of deportation and cease any threat to the safety of the elected president of the Palestinian Authority. [140591]

Mr. Rammell: The draft resolution before the UN Security Council on 16 September did not recognise both parties' obligations under the roadmap. It could have been detrimental, had it been adopted, to the implementation of the roadmap. As our Permanent Representative to the UN said at the time, we regret that the Security Council was unable to pass a balanced resolution. But the resolution's sponsors would not accommodate UK amendments intended to achieve a better balance, and the UK therefore abstained. A resolution on the situation of President Arafat was subsequently put to an Emergency Special Session of the UN General Assembly. European Union proposals for a more balanced text were then accepted and the UK, with our EU Partners, voted for the resolution.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has made clear the Government's view that expelling or harming President Arafat would be wrong and counterproductive. Israel should not allow its justified anger at the continuing violence to lead to actions that would undermine both the peace process and its own interests.

Olympic Bid

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that Ministers representing the United Kingdom abroad are adequately briefed on the London 2012 Olympic bid. [140507]

Mr. Rammell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on 3 December 2003, Official Report, column 64–65W. As she has made clear, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have in place arrangements for overseas missions to alert our Public Diplomacy Policy Department to relevant visits by Ministers so that appropriate briefing on the London 2012 bid can be provided.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office are represented on the working group of officials set up to provide advice to London 2012 on the Government interests in the bid and to Ministers on matters relating to the bid, which the Secretary of State also mentioned in her answer.

Timber

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what means the policy for purchasing timber and timber products of (a) the Foreign Office and (b) each of its overseas missions, ensures that they are obtained from legal and sustainable sources. [141334]

Mr. Rammell: Our procurement policy follows the best practice guidance set out by Defra.

The requirement to purchase only legal and sustainable timber and timber products is laid down in the FCO's purchasing manual, which applies to all staff and contractors procuring such materials on behalf of FCO and to those making major purchases on behalf of overseas missions.

We also mandate the use of the Defra model contract clause on timber source verification in applicable contracts. This is designed to ensure that only timber or timber products from legal and sustainable sources is supplied.

We are considering the practicalities of extending this policy to cover minor building works and furniture purchase which our overseas missions fund from their devolved budgets.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what visits (a) she and (b) Ministers in her Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if she will make a statement. [143163]

Tessa Jowell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House.

Art Acquisition

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much her Department has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by her Department since 1997 has been; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by her Department through sales of its works of art has been since 1997. [142353]

Estelle Morris: In the seven financial years since 2 May 1997 the Government Art Collection has spent a total of £679,657 from its Programme Vote on the purchase of paintings and sculpture. This breaks down as follows:

Financial year	Paintings	Sculpture
2 May 1997 to 1998	72,919	15,800
1998–99	61,594	8,460
1999–2000	84,879	38,588
2000–01	43,269	12,866
2001–02	73,922	9,488
2002–03	111,564	68,444
2003 to 2 December 2003	77,732	132

The single most expensive work of art cost £63,450; for security purposes it is not possible to give the details of this item.

The Government Art Collection has sold no works of art from its holdings since May 1997.

Digital Satellite Television

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action she is taking to encourage BBC, ITV and Channel 4 to broadcast their audio-described programmes on digital satellite as soon as possible. [141994]

Estelle Morris: I understand there are still technical and commercial issues to be solved by broadcasters, manufacturers and platform operators before the BBC, ITV and Channel 4 audio-described programmes are available on satellite. But DCMS officials are working within the Digital Television Action Plan to ensure that audio-description can be received on all platforms.

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport whether it is the policy of her Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on Departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142803]

Mr. Caborn: DCMS has a catering contract for staff restaurant facilities and hospitality. While the contractors are encouraged to use Fair Trade products the extent to which they are sold is dependent on the commercial success of so doing. Where Fair Trade products have been accepted by the customers as representing good quality and value for money, they continue to be sold. When renewing the contract in the spring of 2004 DCMS will stipulate that Fair Trade goods should be an option wherever possible.

Flying Scotsman

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations she has received about the possible sale by Flying Scotsman plc of the Flying Scotsman locomotive. [142314]

Estelle Morris: In addition to the letter I have received from the hon. Member for the Vale of York, I have received one other letter about the possible sale of the Flying Scotsman locomotive.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will (a) declare the Flying Scotsman as an historic item of national importance and (b) take steps to prevent the sale abroad of the Flying Scotsman. [142315]

Estelle Morris: An historic train can only be listed under the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990 if it can be demonstrated that it has a longstanding permanent home. Moveable objects cannot be added to the list. With regard to a potential sale, I have no locus to intervene in the sale of private property, but if sold to an overseas purchaser the locomotive would of course be subject to the normal export licensing procedures.

National Lottery

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the total spending on the National Lottery was in each Northern Ireland constituency in each of the past five years; and what proportion of this money was allocated to good causes in Northern Ireland. [142678]

Estelle Morris: Information on total National Lottery sales is not available by constituency. The available information about National Lottery sales by postcode area is set out in a table placed in the Library, in response to a question from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West (John Barrett).

The information needs to be interpreted with care, since it is dependent on a number of factors, including the Post Office's updating of postcode information on a quarterly basis. The table shows total sales since the lottery started, including year to date sales up to the end of September 2003. The data has been extracted from Camelot's sales database and will not directly reconcile to Camelot's financial reporting.

It is worth noting that the funds that the National Lottery generates for the good causes are shared between 15 distributing bodies—some of which are UK-wide, while others operate only in one of the four home counties—in fixed proportions. There is no necessary correlation between the way in which the proceeds are divided between the 15 distributing bodies, or the way in which grants are allocated by each of the distributors, and the level of ticket sales generated in particular areas. The address of a lottery grant recipient is not necessarily a reliable guide to the area or region which is benefiting from the expenditure (for example, London-based organisations often receive lottery grants but spend the money elsewhere).

Information on the value of grants awarded is not available as a proportion of sales. The following table shows the amount of money awarded to good causes in Northern Ireland in each of the past five calendar years. This is derived from the Department's Awards Database, which is based on information supplied by the distributing bodies.

Amount of money awarded to good causes in Northern Ireland in each of the past five calendar years

	Amount
1998–99	42,069,683
1999–2000	66,137,769
2000–01	32,330,494
2001–02	56,012,802
2002–03	42,560,640

Timber

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport by what means the policy for purchasing timber and timber products of (a) the Department and (b) the Royal Parks Agency ensures that they are obtained from legal and sustainable sources. [141344]

Mr. Caborn: DCMS and the Royal Parks Agency have sustainability as a major consideration in all procurement. Contracts for the supply of timber or timber products specify the need for Forest Stewardship Council or equivalent certification. Recent purchases of timber desks at DCMS had full Forest Stewardship Council certification and World Wildlife Fund accreditation.

Trafalgar Square

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport who owns Trafalgar Square. [142864]

Mr. Caborn: Trafalgar Square is land owned by The Queen in Right of the Crown It is managed by the Greater London Authority under section 383 of the Greater London Authority Act 1999. Westminster City Council owns the roads around Trafalgar Square including the pedestrianised area of the North Terrace.

TRANSPORT

London Congestion Charge

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the total direct cost to UK businesses of the London congestion charge since its introduction. [142142]

Mr. McNulty: We are following the scheme's progress with interest. However, it is the responsibility of the Mayor and Transport for London (TfL) to monitor the scheme's effects, including its impact on business and the economy. TfL's spring 2004 congestion charging annual report will report the full impacts of the scheme and we shall study this carefully.

A419

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what accidents have taken place in the last 10 years on the A419 between (a) Cirencester and Swindon and (b) Cirencester and Nettleton Bottom due to cross-over accidents; and what plans he has to review the types of central reservation. [142011]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Archie Robertson, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Archie Robertson to Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown dated 9 December 2003:

I have been asked by David Jamieson to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about cross-over accidents on the A419 between Cirencester and Swindon and Cirencester and Nettleton Bottom.

On the A419 between Cirencester and Swindon, three cross-over accidents occurred between April 1996 and September 2003. There were no such accidents on the Cirencester to Nettleton Bottom section of the road during the same period.

One of these accidents was on a section of road which, due to design constraints, is without central reserve safety fencing. An improvement to the route at this location is included in the Government's Targeted Programme of Improvements. A second accident occurred on the section of the road through Cricklade where, at the time of the accident, there was no safety fencing in place. However, the Agency has recently completed an improvement scheme which included the provision of safety fencing at this location. The third, and most recent accident occurred at a location with safety fencing. We are investigating and reviewing the causes.

Airports

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what public consultations are planned within the next two years on further airport construction and expansion in the UK. [142636]

Dr. Howells: Following our consultation on the Future Development of Air Transport in the UK, we will shortly be publishing a White Paper setting out our conclusions and our proposals.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the Government's policy is on ring-fencing landing slots at major London airports for the exclusive use for (a) Liverpool John Lennon Airport services and (b) other regional services; and what plans he has to review this policy. [142179]

Mr. McNulty: The issue of access to London airports for regional services will be addressed in the air transport White Paper.

Blue Badges

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to change the system for issuing blue badges for disabled drivers; [143043]

(2) whether he has any plans to reform the powers of inspection over disabled blue badges to police. [143044]

Mr. McNulty: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 1 December 2003, Official Report, column 4W, on the plans to change the Blue Badge Scheme.

With regard to powers of inspection, we are committed to introducing a specific power for the police, traffic wardens and local authority parking enforcement officers to inspect badges. We are also looking at the feasibility of establishing a national database of badge holders; the introduction of smartcard technology; increasing penalties for abuse and misuse of the Scheme.

The power to inspect, and a number of other measures, will need to be introduced through primary legislation and we are looking for a suitable legislative opportunity to do so. Meanwhile, we are already working on the changes that require secondary legislation, taking forward a number of research projects and drafting new guidance for local authorities to accompany the changes. We aim to implement the changes at the earliest opportunity.

Civil Servants (Disabled Staff)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many senior civil servants in his Department are disabled staff expressed (a) in actual terms and (b) as a percentage of whole-time equivalent. [143045]

Mr. McNulty: There are no senior civil servants in the Department for Transport who have declared a disability to the Department.

Consultation

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of regulations introduced by the Department have been subject to a consultation period of less than 12 weeks since the introduction of the Code of Practice on Consultations. [142484]

Mr. McNulty: There is not always a direct correlation between government consultations and individual regulations. For example, there would not be a consultation prior to certain statutory instruments introducing temporary local speed limits.

The Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultation came into effect on 1 January 2001. The Department for Transport was established on 29 May 2002.

In the period from 29 May 2002 to 31 December 2002 the Department published 28 consultations under the Code, of which one was less than 12 weeks.

These figures do not include consultations that were carried out by the Department's Executive Agencies.

A full list of consultations on transport issues that have taken place from May 2002 (as DfT) and from before (as DTLR) can be found on the Department's website www.dft.gov.uk.

Crash Barriers

Mr. Mackay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times (a) steel barrier systems and (b) concrete barrier systems on trunk roads and motorways were breached in the latest year for which he has figures. [142757]

Dr. Howells: Information on the number of times (a) steel barrier systems and (b) concrete barrier systems on trunk road and motorways in England have been breached is not available.

The standard recording procedure for injury accidents does not record detail of the type of barrier hit. No data is available for non-injury accidents.

The Highways Agency is not aware of any breaches of concrete barrier on trunk roads or motorways in England. However, this may be influenced by the relatively small proportion of this type of barrier on the network.

Mr. Mackay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account is taken of whole-life maintenance costs in the procurement process for barrier systems used on motorways and trunk roads. [142758]

Dr. Howells: The Highways Agency requires its Agents to take account of whole-life costs as part of the scheme and programme development process for motorway and trunk roads in England. However, the procurement process for barrier systems on motorways and trunk roads in England does not currently take explicit account of whole-life maintenance costs.

The Highways Agency is looking to address this through a current research project considering the performance characteristics of different barrier types, as well as the whole life construction, maintenance, repair and replacement costs, including traffic delay costs and safety risks to operatives carrying out the work. This research is expected to be completed in early 2004 and will help in the understanding of the key factors to be taken into account in the procurement process.

Mr. Mackay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account is taken of (a) congestion costs and (b) the potential danger to the workforce during repairs to barrier systems when bids for barrier contracts are at tender stage. [142759]

Dr. Howells: The Highways Agency's tender assessment process for barrier systems does not currently take formal account of congestion costs or the potential danger to the workforce during repairs to barrier systems when evaluating bids for barrier contracts at tender stage.

The Highways Agency is looking to address this through a current research project considering the performance characteristics of different barrier types, as well as the whole life construction, maintenance, repair and replacement costs, including traffic delay costs and safety risks to operatives carrying out the work. This research is expected to be completed in early 2004 and will help in the understanding of the key factors to be taken into account in the bid evaluation process.

Mr. Mackay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to review the type of barrier systems in use on (a) motorways and (b) trunk roads in England and Wales. [142761]

Dr. Howells: Since the 1960s, the former Department of Transport, and more recently the Highways Agency, have spent significant amounts developing barrier systems for use on the UK motorway and trunk road network. Products include tensioned and untensioned steel barrier, wire rope barrier and concrete barrier. Over the years, these systems have been placed on the network in varying amounts. There are now sufficient lengths of these different barrier types on the network to obtain data on their respective in-service performance levels. This data is currently being collected and used to support research into the whole-life cost and safety-effectiveness of different types of barrier on motorways and trunk roads.

The research is considering the performance characteristics of different barrier types, as well as the whole life construction, maintenance, repair and replacement costs, including traffic delay costs and safety risks to operatives carrying out the work. This research is expected to be completed in early 2004 and will help in the understanding of the optimum systems for use in different situations on the motorway and trunk road network.

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been undertaken on the use of barriers to prevent lorries leaving the road in the event of an accident such as that which occurred recently on the A3 through Guildford. [143012]

Mr. Jamieson: The Highways Agency has undertaken detailed research into the use of barriers and accidents involving single vehicles leaving the nearside of English roads. This has demonstrated that there are no significant shortcomings in the current standard for safety barriers and that the barrier provision strikes the right balance between the risks or errant vehicles leaving the road and the risks of impact with safety barriers themselves.

Complementary research is currently being undertaken to examine the performance standard requirements for central reserve barriers. It is expected that the results from this research will give a better understanding of the factors and criteria influencing the choice of safety barrier.

Drink-driving

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many car drivers and passengers have died in drink-driving accidents in (a) December and (b) January in (i) England and (ii) each region in each of the last six years. [141576]

Mr. Jamieson: The following table shows the numbers of fatally injured car drivers and passengers in an accident that involved at least one driver or rider with a blood alcohol concentration over 80mg/100ml or whose breath test result was positive or who failed to provide a breath test.

Numbers of fatally injured car drivers and passengers

Identity Cards

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications of the introduction of compulsory identity cards for his Department. [142414]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department is continuing to discuss with the Home Office and others the programme of work announced by the Home Secretary on 11 November, including the implications for driving licences.

Invalid Tricycles

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to amend section 20 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 and the Use of Invalid Carriages on Highways Regulations 1988 to allow a mechanically propelled invalid tricycle which is capable in other circumstances of travelling at more than eight miles per hour to be used on public footways at a speed of less than eight miles per hour. [142201]

Mr. McNulty: "Invalid Carriages" as they are known in law, provide invaluable independent mobility to many disabled and older people. The Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 permits the use of these vehicles on footways and their maximum permitted speeds are set out in the Use of invalid Carriages on Highways Regulations 1988. These vehicles must not travel faster than 4mph on footways and must be incapable of exceeding 8mph on the level under its own power on carriageways. These speed limits are fixed with the safety both of the users of these vehicles and of other road users and pedestrians in mind.

We are currently conducting a comprehensive review of the legislation beginning with a research study to establish basic facts about current usage and to canvass views of users and other key stakeholders. Subject to the outcome of this investigation we will be considering what changes may need to be made to current legislation governing the construction and use of these vehicles on the highway. The question of speed limits will be included in this review.

Ports

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps the Government are taking to comply with the International Ship and Port Facility Code; how many ships and ports have reached the required standard; and what estimate he has made of the date by which the UK will have met these obligations. [141911]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department for Transport's Transport Security Directorate (TRANSEC) is carrying out a programme of assessments of all the UK ports which fall within the scope of the IMO International Ship and Port Facility Security (ISPS) Code, leading to the approval of Port Facility Security Plans and implementation of security measures. TRANSEC is also approving Ship Security Plans (SSPs) and issuing International Ship Security Certificates (ISSCs) for UK flagged cruise ships and ferries. The Maritime and Coastguard Agency is approving SSPs and issuing ISSCs for the UK flagged cargo fleet.

The Government expect that all UK ports and UK flagged ships will comply with the required ISPS standards by the deadline date of 1 July 2004.

Railways (Litter)

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what recent discussions he has had with (a) Network Rail and (b) train operating companies on the collection of litter; [142514]

(2) what standards apply to the levels of cleanliness in and around rail stations; and what fines can be levied for failure to maintain railway premises free of litter. [142515]

Mr. McNulty: No recent discussions have taken place over the collection of litter at stations. It is a condition of station access agreements between the train operating companies and Network Rail, that the station and any adjoining road frontage be kept free from refuse, and in a clean and tidy condition.

Section 91 and 92 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 confers powers on councils and magistrates courts to enforce the duty to clear litter from railway land. Where litter abatement orders or notices are not complied with, those responsible would be guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a maximum Level 4 fine.

Re-signalling Project (Dorset)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the safety aspects of the Dorset re-signalling project. [142787]

Mr. Darling: None. I understand that the project was approved following the submission to Her Majesty's Railway Inspectorate (HMRI) by Network Rail of a rigorous safety case. This document demonstrated compliance to Network Rail's Railway Safety Case and safety management systems. The scheme also followed the rail industry internal approval process, which included the appointment of an independent safety assessor. Network Rail and HMRI have conducted regular reviews throughout the project.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the Dorset re-signalling project to be completed; and if he will make a statement on the timetable of the project from tendering to completion. [142788]

Mr. Darling: Network Rail advises that the project will be commissioned during the week ending 14 December 2003. The timetable from the tendering process to completion has been 42 months.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what training has been made available to drivers and signallers to operate the new signal system in the Dorset region; and when that training will be complete. [142789]

Mr. Darling: Network Rail advises that it has completed training for all signalling staff required to operate the new signalling system including its associated radio systems. Nework Rail has provided training packs which include route learning videos, to enable driver training to be carried out by the train companies who operate along this section of railway—English Welsh and Scottish Railway, South West Trains and Virgin Trains. They have indicated that this training will be complete prior to project commissioning.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which parties were involved in the decision to go ahead with the Dorset re-signalling project; when the decision was taken; and what information was available at the time on the comparative safety of the available signalling systems. [142791]

Mr. Darling: Network Rail advises that the Dorset Coast signalling project uses tried and tested technology already in use elsewhere in Europe. The decision to proceed with the project was taken during the early part of 2000 by Railtrack. This followed extensive consultation involving Her Majesty's Railway Inspectorate, signalling suppliers, train operating companies and the then infrastructure maintenance contractor Balfour Beatty Rail Infrastructure Services.

An assessment was carried out during this time comparing existing systems to the selected system from a safety, performance, reliability and maintenance perspective. The findings of this assessment were satisfactory.

Road Accidents

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were (a) killed and (b) seriously injured in road accidents in each year since 1997. [142232]

Mr. Jamieson: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Fatal and serious road accident casualties: GB 1997–2002

	Fatalities	Serious
1997	3,599	42,984
1998	3,421	40,834
1999	3,423	39,122
2000	3,409	38,155
2001	3,450	37,110
2002	3,431	35,976
Total	20,733	234,181

South Coast Multi-Modal Study

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) in respect of the recommendations relating to rail in the South Coast Multi-Modal Study, how many (a) are being implemented, (b) have been ruled out by the Strategic Rail Authority, (c) have been ruled out by train operating companies and (d) have not yet been subject to decision; [142340]

(2) in respect of the recommendations relating to roads in the South Coast Multi-Modal Study, how many (a) are being implemented, (b) have been ruled out and (c) have not yet been subject to decision. [142341]

Mr. McNulty: Our 9 July 2003 response to the South Coast Multi-Modal Study, which was sent to MPs within the South East as part of an announcement package, set out in detail where we have asked for further work to be undertaken by the respective delivery agencies. This includes where we have asked for schemes to be taken forward, where we have asked for schemes to be considered further or where to look at alternatives. Implementation of all schemes included in the announcement is subject to the successful completion of all necessary consultation and statutory procedures.

The Highway Agency, Local Authorities and the Strategic Rail Authority are taking this work forward in liaison with interested parties.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the total cost was of the South Coast Multi-Modal Study. [142342]

Mr. McNulty: The total cost of the South Coast Multi-Modal Study (SoCoMMs) including call-off contract is around £1.8 million, excluding VAT.

Speed Cameras

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 1 December 2003, Official Report, column 7W, on speed cameras, how many people were (a) killed and (b) seriously injured at the camera sites within the pilot areas. [142233]

Mr. Jamieson: Data and analysis are described in the Department's report. Numbers of killed and seriously injured (KSI) casualties are added together for sites in six areas. Sites were phased in so have different numbers of months of data.

For sites with two years of after data, there were 0.66 KSI casualties per year per site before cameras and 0.36 KSI per year per site afterwards. For sites with one year's data it was 3.83 to 2.02 KSI per site per year.

Train Punctuality

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to monitor reliability and punctuality on train performance into Paddington station, with specific reference to the performance of First Great Western, in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [142234]

Mr. McNulty: The Strategic Rail Authority monitors the performance of all train operating companies and publishes statistics in its quarterly "National Rail Trends" publication, copies of which are placed in the Library of the House. The next edition covering performance to the end of September 2003 will be published later this month. Information is provided for the services of each operator in aggregate, not by specific destination stations.

Transport Projects (St. Helens)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which projects have been (a) wholly and (b) partly funded by his Department in St. Helens since 1997; when each project was announced; when it started or was expected to start; what funding was provided by (i) Government and (ii) a third party; what third party provided funding; what the target group of the project was; what the projected outcome of the project was; and what the name of the project was. [141275]

Mr. McNulty: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows capital expenditure projects in St. Helens since 1992. Maintenance-related projects are too numerous to list here.

Project	Financial year started	Government funding (£000)	Outcomes
St. Helens Bus Station	1992–93	2,200	Quality Bus Corridor
St. Helens Linkway	1992–93	8,037	Transport Corridor Improvements
Earlestown Station	1993–94	180	Refurbishment
St. Helens Subway Design	1994–95	8	Design for subway to industrial development
IT St. Helens Bus Station	1995–96	132	IT equipment to provide information at bus stations
St. Helens Rail Station	1995–96	38	Refurbishment/upgrade
St. Helens Junction Study	1996–97	114	Study of useage
St. Helens Junction	1998–99	599	Developing major scheme
Lea Green New Station	1997–98	2,293	New Station Construction

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what central Government expenditure has been allocated by his Department in (a) St. Helens and (b) Merseyside in each year since 1992. [141301]

Mr. McNulty: The following table shows allocations to St. Helens and across all five Merseyside authority areas since the 1997–98 financial year:

Financial year	Allocations to St. Helens	Allocations to five Merseyside authorities
1997–98	934	8,752

2003–04	4,508	39,501

Comparable information is not available for the period prior to 1997.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the level of government expenditure on (a) rail, (b) bus and (c) road infrastructure was in (i) St. Helens, (ii) Merseyside and (iii) the North West region in each year since 1992. [141302]

Mr. McNulty: The information is not available in the form requested. During the period 1997–98 to 2005–06, St. Helens are committed to spend a total of £14 million on a range of integrated transport schemes. During the same period the total commitment by all five Merseyside authorities on integrated transport schemes is £126 million. In addition to this, funding has been provided direct to enable Merseytravel to deliver schemes with a total value of £417 million across Merseyside during the same period.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the projects assisted by central Government expenditure which (a) have been started and (b) are expected to start on (i) rail, (ii) bus and (iii) road infrastructure in (A) St. Helens and (B) Merseyside in each year since 1992. [141303]

Mr. McNulty: The following table shows capital expenditure projects in St. Helens from the 1992–93 financial year onwards:

A total of 336 integrated transport schemes taken forward in Merseyside since 1992; too many to list individually here.

Trunk Roads (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many stretches of new trunk road have been opened in (a) Stroud and (b) Gloucestershire in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [143030]

Mr. Jamieson: North facing slip roads were added to M5 Junction 12 in Gloucestershire as part of a full rebuilding of the junction. The work was completed on 27 November 2002.

There have been no other new stretches of trunk road opened in Stroud or Gloucestershire in the last three years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Anti-retroviral Drugs (Illegal Trade)

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what action her Department is taking to combat the illegal trade in anti-retroviral drugs; [142145]

(2) what estimate she has made of the value of anti-retroviral drugs traded illegally in each of the last five years. [142146]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No specific estimate has been made of the value of anti-retroviral drugs traded illegally in the last five years.

However, with the increased emphasis on trade in differentially priced drugs—including anti-retroviral drugs—to developing countries, it is likely that there will be an increase in the number of attempts made by unscrupulous traders to divert differentially priced drugs from their intended markets in developing countries to markets in developed countries in order to take advantage of the higher prices (and therefore higher profit margins) which can be obtained in markets in developed countries.

It is important that we address this issue, both in order to ensure that such drugs reach the people in developing countries who need them most and to ensure that diverted drugs do not undermine the market in developed countries which is necessary to allow for further research and development into new drugs.

The Government have consistently supported suitable measures to combat the diversion of differentially priced drugs. We have supported the introduction of a new EU Regulation intended to combat the diversion of differentially priced drugs; worked with our G8 colleagues to secure commitments to action on this issue at the G8 summit in Evian; and ensured there were suitable provisions addressing the issue of diversion in the recent agreement in the WTO on how countries with insufficient manufacturing capacity in the pharmaceutical sector can make effective use of the compulsory licensing provisions in the WTO TRIPS Agreement.

Art Acquisition

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much her Department has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by her Department since 1997 has been; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by her Department through sales of its works of art has been since 1997. [142354]

Ms Hewitt: There has been no significant expenditure on works of art by the Department since 1997 nor any sales.

Auditing

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assessment she has made of the effects of raising the audit exemption threshold to £5.6 million; and if she will make a statement; [140887]

(2) what assessment she has made of the impact of raising the audit exemption threshold to £5.6 million on the business environment, with particular reference to (a) standards of business behaviour, (b) quality of financial information available to stakeholders and (c) levels of economic crime. [140888]

Ms Hewitt: The Government estimate that raising the audit exemption threshold has the potential to save small companies around £94 million a year. There are inevitably risks as well as benefits associated with raising the threshold. The Government concluded, following consultation, that these risks are small and are outweighed by the benefits in terms of costs savings and greater flexibility for small businesses. The Government's consultation document on the proposal contained a draft impact assessment discussing the risks and benefits. The consultation document "Raising the Thresholds", which was published on 11 July 2003, is available on the Department's website at http://www.dti.gov.uk/cld/published.htm. A final version of the impact assessment will also be available there in due course.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what visits (a) she and (b) Ministers in her Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if she will make a statement. [143156]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House today.

Biotechnology

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the availability of long-term sources of finance in the biotechnology industry. [140517]

Ms Hewitt: The Government has taken a number of steps to improve the financial environment for the biotechnology industry. The R&D Tax Credit system, has benefited many bioscience companies. UK-based companies can also take advantage of the DTI's business support products. Four products have been launched to date, all of which may be of use to biotechnology companies:

Small Firms Loan Guarantee

Grant for Investigating an Innovative Idea

Grant for Research and Development

Knowledge Transfer Partnerships

The Higher Education Innovation Fund (£187 million over 2004–05 and 2005–06) and Public Sector Research Exploitation Fund (£15 million over 2004–05 and 2005–06) are examples of Government's support for commercialisation of research.

Commercial funding of the industry through financial markets is essential, however, for its long-term success. Government will normally intervene only in financial markets where it can identify a clear market failure, but where such failures are identified, the track record of intervention is strong. For example the UK High Technology Fund (UKHTF), an element of the £180 million Enterprise Fund was announced in 1998. Other initiatives include the Regional Venture Capital Funds launched on a national basis for England through the Small Business Service in 2002, and funds set up by the Regional Development Agencies and Devolved Administrations to tackle localised market failures.

The UK has the most liquid capital markets in Europe and the most developed venture capital sector in the world after the USA. Optimism about the long-term prospects for bioscience is starting to return to public markets after a global downturn and good UK biotechnology companies are still receiving venture capital investment. The UK is also home to some of the world's largest pharmaceutical companies, providing long-term finance for biotechnology companies through deals to purchase or license technology.

The Government is not complacent, however. The DTI and Department of Health prompted the establishment of the Bioscience Innovation and Growth Team, to identify and clarify the issues that are critical to the future competitiveness of the UK biosciences sector. The BIGT report was published in November 2003 and includes recommendations on the flow of seed capital, improvement of public sector technology transfer activity, and the provision of a favourable regulatory and fiscal environment. The Government will examine these recommendations carefully and respond to them all in due course.

Business Start-ups

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many Government schemes, and how much state funding, have assisted business start-ups in 2001 to 2003 (a) in Middlesbrough South and East Cleveland, (b) in Teesside and (c) in the United Kingdom. [141863]

Jacqui Smith: Advice and support to business start-ups are provided by a range of organisations in the region. This includes DTI's Small Business Service and Business Link Organisations (and the Small Firms Loan Guarantee), ONE NorthEast (the regional development agency), local authorities, universities, community organisations, and Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise. Support for investment projects can be accessed by start-up businesses through DTI's Regional Selective Assistance (administered by ONE NorthEast—the regional development agency) and the Small Business Service's Enterprise Grant. Training and skills support is provided through Business Link Organisations and Local Learning and Skills Councils. Funding comes from a range of sources including central Government, European Structural Funds, and local authorities. It is not possible to identify easily the value of assistance accessed by start-up businesses within the overall totals of advice and support.

The available statistics for the value of assistance to start-up businesses in the areas requested are as set out.

The value of Business Link Organisation for Tees Valley's "Start Right in Business" scheme is shown in the following table. This is the closest available match to the geographic analysis requested. There is no national equivalent.

European Structural Funds are available through the North East of England Objective 2 Programme 2000–06.

Specific measures within the programme are designed to assist business start-ups.

1. Measure 1.1—Growing New Businesses and Marrying Entrepreneurs with Ideas. Is funded regionally as follows:

Funding

	£ million
European Regional Development Fund (ERDF)	26.904
Public Sector Funds (includes other Government funding)	28.783
Private Sector Funding	1.479

The target number of Small to Medium Enterprises (SMEs) to be assisted is 9,973. From 2001 to date grant offered regionally totals £16.476 million and 1,628 SMEs have been assisted, of which 184 (Grant Value £3.968 million) are in Teesside.

2. Measure 1.2—Providing Access to Finance for Entrepreneurs. Is funded regionally as follows:

Funding

	£ million
European Regional Development Fund (ERDF)	14.121
Public Sector Funds (includes other Government funding)	8.796
Private Sector Funding	8.553

The target number of SMEs to be assisted is 2,065.

From 2001 to date grant offered regionally totals £1.616 million and 554 SMEs have been assisted, of which 32 are in Teesside.

European Social Fund (ESF) funding is also available to assist with the training needs of beneficiaries associated with new SMEs.

3. Measure 1.4—Entrepreneurial Attitudes and Skills. Is funded regionally as follows:

Funding

	£ million
European Social Fund (ESF)	9.866
Public Sector Funds (includes other Government funding)	9.866
Private Sector Funding	2.192

From 2001 to date offers worth £1.941 million have been made regionally, with 4,355 people trained, of which 1,611 (Grant Value £0.650 million) are in Teesside.

Arts Council England North East operates the Cultural Business Venture, providing support to the cultural sector for business expansions including start-ups. Additional funding is provided by ONE NorthEast and European Structural Funds Objective 2 programme. The following figures show the value of assistance offered. There is no national equivalent.

Canada Lottery

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action the Government are taking to protect people from being defrauded by people purporting to represent the Canadian Lottery. [142856]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Office of Fair Trading (OFT) launched a consumer awareness campaign on 3 December in response to the increase in telephone marketing scams originating from Canada.

The OFT is working closely with the Canadian authorities to ensure prompt and effective action is taken against these scams.

The campaign includes a telephone hotline set-up by the OFT to collect evidence which the Canadian authorities can use to prosecute the scam operators.

Employment Rights

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations she has received from (a) overseas companies and (b) British companies regarding the rights of overseas workers to pursue unfair dismissal claims against their employers under the Employment Rights Act 1996; [142839]

(2) if she will make a statement on the recent Employment Appeal Tribunal ruling on the rights of overseas workers to pursue unfair dismissal claims under British employment law. [142852]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Department has received representations on behalf of one company with bases in Great Britain and overseas.

The Employment Rights Act 1996 confers the right to complain of unfair dismissal. When territorial limits in the Act were abolished in 1999, the Government's intention was that employees working overseas would be able to claim unfair dismissal only if there was a proper connection with Great Britain. The employment Appeal Tribunal has confirmed that this is the test which the employment tribunals must apply.

European Molecular Biology Organisation

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what UK contributions at current prices have been made to the European Molecular Biology Organisation in (a) each of the last three years and (b) the current year; what contributions are proposed for the next three years; and what assessment she has made of the benefits the UK has gained from its contributions. [141753]

Ms Hewitt: The UK government, through grant-in-aid to the Medical Research Council (MRC), contributes to the European Molecular Biology Conference (EMBC) which is the funding body for the European Molecular Biology Organisation (EMBO). The UK's contributions for the last three years and the current year are as follows:

Euros

Year	Actual contribution	Contribution at 2003 prices
2000	1,224,222	1,291,063
2001	1,466,010	1,531,246
2002	1,502,628	1,531,246
2003	1,531,246	1,531,246

EMBC management is proposing an increase, over the next three years, of around 18 per cent. extra in 2004 rising to 44 per cent. extra in 2006 (about £700,000 per annum extra for the MRC). This is currently under discussion with EMBC and the UK contributions are not therefore known.

It is a matter for the MRC to decide/agree what level of subscription they should pay to EMBC, taking into account other commitments and priorities. They undertake periodic reviews of the relevant EMBO schemes in preparation for EMBC budget discussions. The main benefits of participation are association with, and access to, prestigious and well-run fellowships schemes that have added value to the development of the European molecular biology.

Family Friendly Employment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what (a) training and (b) support is provided to managers to help them to institute family-friendly employment procedures; [141886]

(2) what information and support is available for employers regarding flexible working arrangements for employees; [141887]

(3) what plans the Government have to provide specialist guidance for small and medium enterprises, with particular reference to effective family-friendly working practices among small firms. [141888]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 8 December 2003]: An extensive package of support and guidance to help businesses implement and benefit from the laws for working parents has accompanied their introduction in April this year.

This includes:

Detailed guidance incorporating standard letter templates, summary flowcharts and 'how to' hints and tips.

Interactive web-based guidance via the TIGER website (www.tiger.gov.uk)

A case studies booklet "Flexible Working—The Business Case: 50 Success Stories" giving real examples of how businesses have introduced flexible working practices and how they have benefited. Half of those featured are small businesses.

Specific information concerning the payment of statutory maternity, paternity and adoption pay for employers is available on the Inland Revenue website (www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/employers/during.htm). In addition, information on the new laws was sent to all employers registered with the Inland Revenue (1.5—1.7 million copies) in August 2002.

An awareness raising campaign incorporating national newspaper and online adverts aimed specifically at business. Further adverts are planned early next year in the national press and specialist business publications. The DTI also intends to mail in excess of 100,000 SMEs to further raise awareness and facilitate uptake and signpost them to further information.

A series of six seminars for Business Link advisers on family-friendly policies run by the DTI in the spring of 2003. A Business Link factsheet on flexible working, tailored specifically for SMEs, is also available.

A number of projects in partnership with external stakeholders. For example DTI supported a joint partnership project by the Federation of Small Business (FSB), British Chambers of Commerce (BCC) and the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. An awareness raising poster was circulated to 155,000 FSB members and 1,300 BCC branches, and a collection of case studies promoting the business case for flexible working in smaller businesses and giving examples of good practice was developed. (Getting it Right: Improving work-life balance in your business.)

Free confidential advice to employers via the Acas helpline service (08457 474747), which is signposted on guidance and advertising.

A programme of seminars, reaching almost 10,500 employers throughout the UK, run by Acas during the first quarter of 2003. They continue to run seminars on all issues relating to working parents as part of their core seminar programme.

The Government's work-life balance campaign, which actively promotes family-friendly working practices across the workplace. Part of the non-legislative agenda for employment relations policy, the campaign focuses on researching and disseminating best practice to industry and business.

All guidance material is accessible through the DTI website: www.dti.gov.uk/workingparents.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps the Government are taking to promote the take-up of family friendly options at work by men. [142659]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 8 December 2003]: In April this year, the Government introduced new laws for working parents which cover fathers as well as mothers, including the right for fathers of children aged under six or disabled children under 18 to request flexible working and the right to two weeks paid paternity leave. These new rights together with the existing rights to parental leave and time off for dependants recognise that men increasingly want to play a greater role in the family and provides them with more choices for doing so.

To facilitate take-up, the Government are running an on-going awareness raising campaign which includes national newspaper adverts targeted specifically at fathers. In addition posters have been circulated to CAB's GP's surgeries and libraries. We are working in partnership with stakeholders to raise awareness. We provided support to the charity, Fathers Direct for their pilot magazine aimed at new fathers—'Dad', launched in five different maternity units in April 2003 and distributed to all new fathers coming into contact with those units.

The Government's Work-Life balance campaign also encourages employers to adopt best practice and provide family-friendly policies right across the work force.

Gas Bills

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the average household gas bill was in (a) England and (b) each English region in each financial year since 1996–97. [142273]

Mr. Timms: Information on average gas bills is regularly published by my Department in "Quarterly Energy Prices", available at www.dti.gov.uk/energy/inform/energy_prices/index.shtml. The available information is as follows:

Average annual domestic gas bills: England and Wales

Notes:

1. Figures for 1996 and 1997 are not available for England and Wales as the survey from which regional information is produced began in 1998.
2. Bills relate to total bill received in the year e.g. covering consumption from Q4 of the previous year to Q3 of the named year.
3. All bills are calculated using an annual consumption of 18,000 kWh. Figures are inclusive of VAT.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to encourage manufacturing investment in the UK. [140949]

Ms Hewitt: We published the Government's Manufacturing Strategy in May 2002—the first such strategy for 30 years—which we developed in partnership with industry, trade unions and other stakeholders, following a summit meeting on the challenges facing manufacturing held in December 2001.

By maintaining a stable macroeconomic climate, together with measures such as reforming capital gains tax; making permanent enhanced capital allowances for small and medium sized firms; introducing the R&D tax credit for small and large firms; establishing Regional Venture Capital Funds; and extending the Small Firms Loan Guarantee, we are providing a climate conducive to investment for the long term in UK manufacturing.

Insolvency Service

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much revenue has been generated by the Insolvency Service in each year since 1997; and what the cost of administering the Insolvency Service has been (a) in each year since 1997 and (b) in each quarter of 2003. [143142]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Income and Expenditure of the Insolvency Service as reported in its Annual Report and Accounts since 1997 was:

£000

	Income from fees	Investment income	Expenditure
1997–98	37,495	50,980	78,538
1998–99	41,935	47,500	78,159
1999–2000	45,341	43,400	80,512
2000–01	51,270	45,100	80,314
2002–03	58,674	34,800	90,332

Investment Income derived from the Insolvency Services Investment Account was surrendered to the Consolidated fund in accordance with Section 405 of The Insolvency Act 1986. 2003–04 is the last year of this funding regime. A new financial regime will be introduced on 1 April 2004 under the Enterprise Act 2002. Under the new financial regime investment income will be paid to creditors and The Insolvency service will seek to cover its case administration costs in full through a revised fees structure.

In year financial monitoring and management control information is being produced monthly. These unaudited figures are not directly comparable with previous years as they include the costs and income of the Redundancy Payments Service together with estimates of non-cash and other charges that can only be known at year-end.

International Trade

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the impact of EU trade rules on developing countries. [142169]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The overall impact of EU trade arrangements on developing countries is determined by a number of factors. The European Union offers preferential access to European markets to developing countries under the Cononou Agreement with African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) countries, the 'Everything But Arms' initiative for Least Developed Countries and the Generalised System of Preferences for Developing Countries. In addition to preferential arrangements, other instruments have a direct or indirect impact on developing countries, including anti-dumping measures, the common agricultural policy, sanitary and phytosanitary measures, and technical regulations. The impact of such factors differs from country to country, and there is little research on the aggregated net effect either on specific developing countries or on developing countries as a group.

We continue to work closely with the European Commission and other member states to ensure the greatest benefit to developing countries of increased international trade through, for example, the WTO negotiations on the Doha Development Agenda, and Economic Partnership Agreement negotiations under the Cotonou Agreement.

Iraq

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representatives from her Department are in Iraq; how many representatives of her US counterparts are in Iraq; and if she will make a statement on the effect on UK industry of the numbers. [140534]

Ms Hewitt: There are five staff from my Department working in Iraq. Three are seconded to the Coalition Provisional Authority, including one responsible for trade development. Two are based in the British Office to promote trade relations with Iraq. A further staff member will go to Basra early in the New Year to promote trade. We have had positive feedback for my Department's work to support British firms in Iraq and we will continue to work with all interested British firms as well as with trade associations and other industry bodies. I am not in a position to comment on US Government staffing for Iraq.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the level is of Iraq's debt to the UK which was accrued up to the point of the fall of Saddam Hussein; how much has been written off; what the nominal repayment due each year is; and what debt repayments were made in each year since 1997. [141557]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: ECGD has unrecovered claims of around £623 million arising from contracts with Iraq signed prior to the first Gulf conflict in 1991. This amount does not include interest, which it is estimated could bring the figure to some £1 billion. The only monies recovered by ECGD since 1997, all through the United Nations Compensation Commission were £2.68 million in 2001–02 and £320,000 in 2003–04.

No debt has been written off but the Paris club group of creditors, including the UK, has announced that it intends to agree a comprehensive treatment of Iraq's debt problem by the end of 2004. In the meantime no payment of these arrears of debt will be sought.

The Government have made it clear that it is seeking a fair and sustainable solution to the Iraqi debt problem. We believe that the debts should be dealt with under the new Paris Club 'Evian approach' which offers a long-term solution for countries with the most serious debt problems, including debt reduction where the need is clearly demonstrated.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how she intends to encourage further implementation of ISO 9001:2000 following the employment of this standard by suppliers to the Ministry of Defence. [140663]

Ms Hewitt: ISO 9001:2000 is the latest version of the quality management systems standard. It has been substantially revised to take account of modern management practice and the experience gained in industry over the past 25 years. It is already the most widely recognised management standard in the world and I am sure that the advantages and benefits of the new version will encourage its use still further. The DTI welcomes tenders from suppliers that have certification to this standard for a relevant scope but it is not a mandatory requirement and it is acceptable for a potential supplier to use other means to demonstrate how it has implemented its quality policy.

Motor Industry

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations her Department has received from the motor industry regarding possible membership of the euro. [142127]

Jacqui Smith: I have had discussions with many companies from the automotive sector, and had a range of representations on whether the UK should join the euro. The Government's policy on membership of the single currency is unchanged. The determining factor is the national economic interest, as assessed by the Government's five economic tests.

Pension Payments

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will initiate an inquiry into the reasons underlying the number of pensioners receiving their state pension by means of direct payment into a Post Office card account on 6 September. [141519]

Mr. Timms: No. The reasons for opting for a Post Office account are a matter for individual customers. The Department of Work and Pensions provides customers with all the information that they need to choose the type of account into which they want to have their pension or other benefit paid, including those with Post Office access. It is for the customer to take the final decision on which account is best for them in their own particular circumstances.

Posting of Workers Directive

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidelines she gives under the

Posting of Workers Directive; whether collective agreements in construction will be enforced; and if she will make a statement. [142418]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Guidance on the Posting of Workers Directive is available on the DTI website. Unlike most EU countries, the UK has a voluntarist system of collective employment relations. Collective agreements in construction are not universally applicable and accordingly are extended by law to cover employers and workers not party to them. These collective agreements are, therefore, not covered by the Directive, which we have fully implemented in the UK.

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she last met representatives from trade unions representing construction industry workers to discuss the Posting of Workers Directive, with particular reference to its implication for (a) collective agreements and (b) health and safety. [142436]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 8 December 2003]: I meet the TUC periodically to discuss various issues, including matters relating to the construction industry. I am meeting representatives from the Transport and General Workers Union on 10 December, and I will be discussing the Posting of Workers Directive among other issues.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to change the targets for the purchase of renewable energy by UK companies. [142130]

Mr. Timms: The Government have set a target that, by 2010, 10 per cent. of sales from licensed electricity suppliers should come from renewable sourced electricity. There are no plans to change this target.

The Renewables Obligation, enforced under the Renewables Obligation Order 2002 in England and Wales, and the Renewables Obligation (Scotland) Order 2002, is the main mechanism which the Government have introduced to help achieve the growth necessary to reach this target. The Obligation will remain in place until 2027, and licensed electricity suppliers are required to supply a specified and growing proportion of their sales from renewable sourced electricity each year. The level of the Obligation was 3 per cent. in its first year of operation, and now stands at 4.3 per cent. and is set to rise to 10.4 per cent. in the 2010–11 period.

The Government have recently announced their intention to bring forward proposals to raise the levels of the Obligation for the years beyond 2010–11, by further annual increases, reaching 15.4 per cent. in the 2015–16 period. This is a further sign of our commitment to developing the renewables industry.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of companies have met their targets for the purchase of renewable energy in the last 12 months. [142147]

Mr. Timms: Under the terms of the Renewables Obligation Order (2002), and the Renewables Obligation (Scotland) Order 2002, licensed electricity suppliers in Great Britain are required to supply specific proportions of their electricity sales from renewable sourced electricity—with the aim of reaching the target of 10.4 per cent. in the period 2010–11.

For the year to April 2003, the level of the Obligation was set at 3 per cent. (The current level is 4.3 per cent.). Suppliers demonstrate their compliance with the Obligation through presenting Renewables Obligation Certificates (ROCs) to Ofgem. If they do not present ROCs in this way, they must buy out all or part of their obligation target. Payments made to this buyout fund are then subsequently recycled to those suppliers who have demonstrated their compliance through the ROC mechanism.

The proportions of suppliers meeting their obligations through (1) complete fulfilment and (2) partial fulfilment are shown in the tables.

Suppliers and the 3 per cent. Renewables Target in England and Wales (Renewables Obligation)

	Number	Percentage
Suppliers reaching 3 per cent. target	12	31
Suppliers partially meeting 3 per cent. target	11	29
Suppliers failing to meet any of 3 per cent. target	14	40

Suppliers and the 3 per cent. Renewables Target in Scotland (Renewables Obligation Scotland)

	Number	Percentage
Suppliers reaching 3 per cent. target	15	54
Suppliers partially meeting 3 per cent. target	4	14
Suppliers failing to meet any of 3 per cent. target	9	32

Taking all licensed electricity suppliers in Great Britain together, the proportion of the Renewables Obligation met by the actual supply of renewables in 2002–03 was 58.9 per cent.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the cost to UK companies of meeting current targets for the purchase of renewable energy. [142148]

Mr. Timms: The costs of the Renewables Obligation, the Government's main policy instrument for the achievement of our 10 per cent. renewable energy target for 2010, are expected to be passed on by electricity supply companies to electricity consumers across the industrial, commercial and domestic sectors. The Government estimates that, by 2010–11, the impact of the Renewables Obligation on electricity prices will be the equivalent of an average increase of 4.9 per cent. in real terms over actual 1999 prices.

Standardisation

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures she is taking to push standardisation as part of an export and growth drive. [140536]

Ms Hewitt: The National Standardisation Strategic Framework (NSSF) sets out to promote standardisation to the benefit of business, government and society. Within this Framework, the British Standards Institution (BSI) is aligning its activity in international standards making (ISO standards) to changing British business interests. An objective stated in the NSSF is to "Optimise the use of standardisation as an international gateway to achieve more open markets, reduce technical barriers to trade, UK trading advantage, technology transfer and international development objectives". We are currently determining how best to pursue this objective. It may be that promotion of UK or European standards will form part of the Government's support for certain sectors of UK business in key export markets.

Timber

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by what means the policy for purchasing timber and timber products of (a) the Department, (b) Companies House, (c) the Employment Tribunals Service, (d) the Insolvency Service, (e) the National Weights and Measures Laboratory, (f) the Patent Office, (g) the Radiocommunications Agency and (h) the Small Business Service ensures that they are obtained from legal and sustainable sources. [141341]

Ms Hewitt: The Department's London headquarters estate (including SBS) operates an environmental management system certified to ISO14001. This environmental management system (EMS) sets out the policy and procedure to be followed in the procurement of timber products. The EMS requires timber to be FSC or equivalent certification. All other buildings within the DTI HQ estate but outside of London are subject to the same procurement criteria.

Letter from David Smith to Mr. Barry Gardiner, dated 9 December 2003:

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has asked me to reply on behalf of the Radiocommunications Agency to your Parliamentary Question detailing by what means the policy for purchasing timber and timber products ensures that they are obtained from legal and sustainable sources.

I can confirm that, where the Agency has had the need to procure timber products, it has followed the Department's strict guidelines on purchasing from qualified and certified organisations. All of the Agency's timber products are purchased from suppliers who have satisfied the Department's and the OGC's strict monitoring and inspections regime on producing goods from legal and sustainable sources.

Letter from Alison Brimelow to Mr. Barry Gardiner, dated 9 December 2003:

I am replying to this parliamentary question, tabled on 28 November 2003, regarding the policy of purchasing timber and timber products.

The Patent Office does not purchase timber direct from any suppliers. However, furniture is purchased through the Office of Government Commerce's (OGC) Buying Solutions Framework Agreement where it is a requirement that preferred suppliers hold the relevant Forestry Stewardship Council (FSC) certification. Where we engage the use of contractors for minor building work requirements, they must provide evidence that timber products are sourced from managed and sustainable sources.

In addition, the Patent Office is presently working towards an environmental management system certified to EN ISO 14001.

Letter from Dr. J. W. Llewellyn to Mr. Barry Gardiner, dated 9 December 2003:

The Secretary for Trade and Industry has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory (NWML) to your question on what means the policy for purchasing timber and timber products of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory ensures that they are obtained from legal and sustainable sources.

The National Weights and Measures Laboratory (NWML) is part of the DTI HQ estate and thus is within the scope of the Department's environmental management system, which is certified to ISO 14001. This management system sets out the policy and procedure for procurement of timber products and requires FSC or equivalent certification. Furniture for NWML is purchased from Kinnarps who are an approved OGC supplier. Stationery is purchased mainly from Guilbert (UK) who hold the DTI stationery contract. Where possible products are obtained from their 'environmental benefit' range.

Letter from Desmond Flynn to Mr. Barry Gardiner, dated 9 December 2003:

I refer to your question tabled on 28 November 2003 to Patricia Hewitt regarding the use of timber and timber products. I have been asked to reply to you in relation to The Insolvency Service.

Although we are not major consumers of timber products The Service's policy is always to specify to contractors and suppliers that these materials are provided from sustainable sources. We also require prospective suppliers to confirm this with their bids for our work. Timber is mainly used in office refurbishment projects whereas our office furniture these days is invariably made from melamine-faced chipbord (MFC), rather than virgin timber.

Letter from Roger Heathcote to Mr. Barry Gardiner, dated 9 December 2003:

You asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by what means the Department's policy for purchasing timber and timber products ensures they are obtained from legal and sustainable sources. I have been asked to reply on behalf of the Employment Tribunals Service (ETS), which is an Agency of the DTI.

All furniture supplies are purchased through contracts let by the Office of Government Commerce in respect of which the suppliers have already established proof of conforming with the necessary legal and sustainable requirement in respect of timber. The same requirement is built into our standard terms of contract for works services.

Letter from Claire Clancy to Mr. Barry Gardiner, dated 9 December 2003:

I am responding to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on behalf of Companies House, which is an Executive Agency of the DTI.

Companies House operates an environmental management system certified to ISO14001. This sets out the policy and procedure to be followed in the procurement of timber products. Any purchases are therefore from Forestry Stewardship Council accredited sources.

US-UK Energy Dialogue

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in the US-UK Energy Dialogue to enhance co-ordination and co-operation on energy issues between Britain and the United States of America; on what dates since 1 January she has held meetings with the United States Commerce Secretary at which the US-UK Energy Dialogue was discussed; and where each of these meetings was held. [142390]

Mr. Timms: Officials from US Departments of Energy, Commerce and State meet regularly with officials in the Department of Trade and Industry and FCO to discuss shared interests in the field of energy. Topics include security and diversity of international energy supplies, the role of energy in development, how to promote clean energy technologies to address security of supply and environmental challenges, and national energy policy. We have had detailed discussions on science and technology matters and used the existing

Memorandum of Understanding to develop joint activities on the contribution of basic science to meeting energy challenges, cleaner fossil fuels, the development of a hydrogen economy and carbon capture and storage.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has not had any meeting with Department of Commerce Secretary Don Evans to discuss energy issues this year.

Written Answers to Questions

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Parliamentary Data and Video Network

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Leader of the House whether hon. and right hon. Members will be allowed to remain remotely connected to the parliamentary network during a Dissolution of Parliament. [142800]

Mr. Hain: I understand that the Information Committee will be examining Dissolution arrangements in due course.

Catering

Mr. Dennis Turner: To ask the Leader of the House pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for North-East Hertfordshire (Mr. Heald) on 27 November 2003, Official Report, column 129, what the change in demand for the Members' Dining Room has been since the change in sitting hours of the House. [143580]

Mr. Hain: I inadvertently gave a figure of five per cent. for the increase in demand for the Members' Dining Room since the new sitting hours came into effect. The correct figure was 0.5 per cent. based on a comparison of covers served in January-October 2003 against January-October 2002. I am grateful for this opportunity to correct the record.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs when he plans to release the 1911 decennial population census for England and Wales. [141913]

Mr. Leslie: The 1911 census returns, now in the custody of the National Archives, are currently closed for 100 years by Lord Chancellor's Instrument no. 12 of 1966, on the grounds that the information was supplied in strict confidence. s5(2) of the Public Records Act 1958 provides for the extension of the normal 30-year closure period in such cases. The National Archives is, therefore, currently considering ways of making the 1911 census data generally available to the public at the end of the 100 year closure period.

Legal Finance

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how much was spent on barristers' fees for criminal legal aid in 2002–03; and how much of this was attributable to payments to QCs. [141418]

Mr. Leslie: Spending on barristers fees in the Crown court and above during 2002–03 was £317.36 million and £1.4 million for assigned counsel in the magistrates court. £0.4 million was also paid to counsel (both assigned and unassigned) for residual work not covered under the General Criminal Contract. It is estimated that of this amount, £76 million was paid to QCs. It is not possible to give a precise figure because the type of barrister is not always recorded.

Legal Advice (Matrimonial Disputes)

Gareth Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what steps the Legal Services Commission is taking to ensure adequate provision in Wales for legal advice in relation to matrimonial disputes. [142408]

Mr. Leslie: In order to ensure adequate provision of legal advice across Wales in all categories of law, including matrimonial disputes, the Legal Services Commission (LSC), the Legal Services Committee for Wales, and the local Community Legal Service Partnership monitor provision on a regular basis. Where gaps in provision are identified, the LSC can re-allocate the number of publicly funded legal matters which suppliers can start in any particular category of law, in order to meet priority needs. In addition, the LSC has just announced that solicitors in England and Wales can start an additional 20,000 legal matters by April 2004.

Supreme Court

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs whether it is his policy that the proposed Supreme Court for the UK should sit outside London on (a) an occasional and (b) a permanent basis. [142709]

Mr. Leslie: It is envisaged that the main permanent base of the Supreme Court will be in London; however, no final decision has yet been taken. That would not preclude the court sitting elsewhere in the United Kingdom from time to time when it is judged appropriate to do so.

WALES

Small Businesses

8. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, how much money was spent by the Government on assisting small businesses in Wales in 2002–03. [142076]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Assembly Government provides financial support for small businesses. The majority of this is supplied by the WDA, which contributed more than £75 million in 2002–03. In addition UK Government supports small businesses through cost saving initiatives such as R&D tax credit, the improvement of the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme and raising the audit threshold for SMEs.

Police Grant

9. Mr. Roger Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what recent discussions he has had with the Home Department about the police grant for Wales. [142077]

Mr. Touhig: My right hon. Friend and I have regular discussions with colleagues about matters affecting Wales.

Higher Education

10. Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what discussions he has had with the Education Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales Government concerning the funding of higher education courses in England for students from Wales. [142078]

Mr. Hain: Welsh students are currently eligible to apply for fee remission grants to cover tuition costs and for income contingent loans for living costs. From 2004–05, students will also be eligible for the new HE grant of up to £1,000.

Barnett Formula

11. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what discussions he has had with (a) the Treasury and (b) the National Assembly for Wales Government on the outcome of the Yvonne Watts v Bedford Health Authority case on the Treasury block grant for Wales under the Barnett formula. [142079]

Mr. Touhig: As the Government is appealing against the ruling in this case, it would not be appropriate for me to speculate on the final outcome of the case. However, funding for the NHS in Wales is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales, which is free to allocate resources from within the block grant as it sees fit. The Government has no current plans to review the Barnett formula which has produced fair and transparent settlements over the years.

Flooding

12. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary about flooding in Wales. [142080]

Mr. Touhig: My right hon. Friend and I have regular discussions with Assembly Secretaries about issues affecting Wales, including flooding and flood prevention measures. The Assembly has recently consulted on new flood defence management arrangements for Wales.

Police Funding

13. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary about police funding in Wales. [142081]

Mr. Touhig: My right hon. Friend and I have regular discussions with colleagues about matters affecting Wales.

Community Support Officers

14. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many community support officers there are in Wales. [142082]

Mr. Touhig: Funding has been made available for 113 Community Support Officers in Wales.

In July I met with a group of Community Support Officers based in my own constituency who are already coming to be recognised as a valuable part of the local policing team.

Parliamentary Constituencies

15. Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has made to the Boundary Commission for Wales about the fifth general review of parliamentary constituencies in Wales. [142083]

Mr. Hain: None.

Art Acquisition

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by his Department since 1997 was; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by his Department through sales of its works of art has been since 1997. [142363]

Mr. Hain: The Wales Office was established in 1999. Since then the Department has not purchased or sold any works of art. However, my office does showcase a collection of Welsh artwork loaned to both our offices in Gwydyr House and Cardiff by the Government Art Collection and National Museums and Galleries.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143158]

Mr. Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave yesterday as Leader of the House of Commons, at column 355W.

Council Tax

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the average council tax in Wales is in 2003–04. [142575]

Mr. Hain: Figures published by the National Assembly on 25 March show that the average band D council tax for 2003–04 is £837.

EU Landfill Directive

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the National Assembly for Wales to ensure Wales plays its part in meeting the commitment to the EU Landfill Directive target of 25 per cent. of 1995 levels by 2010. [140815]

Mr. Touhig: My right hon. Friend and I have regular discussions with Assembly Secretaries about matters affecting Wales. In June 2002, the Assembly published a comprehensive national waste strategy for Wales: "Wise about Waste". It contains challenging targets for local authorities to increase their recycling and composting of municipal waste to 40 per cent. by 2010. The Assembly has also issued guidance to local authorities to assist the development of their own municipal waste management strategies. There has been some early and encouraging progress showing significant increases in recycling and composting: for example eight authorities have reported achieving the initial 15 per cent. target for 2003–04 by 2002–03.

EU Structural Funds

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with colleagues in the National Assembly for Wales Government on the repatriation of European funds. [140538]

Mr. Hain: I have regular discussions with colleagues in the National Assembly for Wales on the future of European structural funds, and I am keeping abreast with the latest developments.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Treasury on the repatriation of European structural funding. [140539]

Mr. Hain: I have regular discussions with the Treasury on the future of European structural funds, and I am keeping abreast with the latest developments.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the Welsh gross domestic product per capita figures are since 1990. [141162]

Mr. Hain: The available information is given in the following table. Gross value added (previously known as gross domestic product) is only available at the prevailing price levels in each year.

Gross value added per capita in Wales, current basic prices:

Per capita

	Amount
1990	7,212
1992	7,742
1993	8,106
1994	8,565
1995	9,020
1996	9,427
1997[1]	9,860
1998[1]	10,273
1999[1]	10,593
2000[1]	10,987
2001[1]	11,396

Job Creation

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs have been created in Wales since 1997 in (a) the public and (b) the private sector. [141161]

Mr. Touhig: Comparing the 12 months to August 2003 with 1997, there has been an increase of 49,000 people employed in the public sector and 61,000 employed in the private sector in Wales.

Labour Force Survey

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many visits he has made to Bangor in his capacity as Secretary of State for Wales. [142574]

Mr. Hain: I regularly visit different parts of Wales and have been to Bangor twice in my capacity as Secretary of State for Wales.

Neath Port Talbot Hospital

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the meeting he had with health officials on 7 November on the future of the Neath Port Talbot Hospital. [141164]

Mr. Hain: I attended this meeting as a constituency engagement as the Member of Parliament for Neath.

Owain Glyndwr (Commemoration)

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with his colleagues in the National Assembly for Wales Government on the organisation of events to commemorate Owain Glyndwr in 2004. [140542]

Mr. Touhig: I have regular meetings with Assembly Secretaries on a range of issues affecting Wales.

I understand that a number of organisations have made representations to the National Assembly about this anniversary. The assembly is considering how the event should be commemorated.

Regiments

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh regiments he has visited in 2003. [142573]

Mr. Hain: I recently met Brigadier Iain Cholerton prior to him taking up his new post as commander of the senior royal regiment of Wales. I also met with his predecessor. We discussed the possibility of a visit in the near future.

DEFENCE

Al Yamamah Contract

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who determines the (a) prices, (b) specifications and (c) standards of the items set out in the Al Yamamah contract; and by what procedures prices, specifications and standards are revised. [142584]

Mr. Ingram: Al Yamamah is a Government-to-Government agreement. Its content and all revisions are negotiated and agreed between officials of the United Kingdom and Saudi Arabian Governments.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what liaison he has had since 3 November with the Serious Fraud Office on the allegations made by Mr. Edward Cunningham relating to the Al Yamamah programme. [142113]

Mr. Ingram: None.

Bearskins

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many bearskins the Army has purchased in each of the last five years; and whether these bears are (a) killed in the wild and (b) farmed for their skins. [141855]

Mr. Ingram: A total of 694 bearskin caps have been procured over the last five years.

Calendar year	Caps procured
1998	54
1999	166
2000	232
2001	63
2002	179
Total	694

The pelts used in the manufacture of bearskin caps are purchased through a licensed agent and imported under licence from Canada. We understand from manufacturers that the pelts are supplied from bears hunted as part of the quotas established under the Canadian Provinces' conservation plans.

One bear pelt can make on average between one and two caps. A cap refurbishment programme has been in place since 2001 with the aim of reducing the requirement for new caps to a minimum. A total of 430 caps have been refurbished since this programme began.

Deepcut Barracks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role Ministry of Defence Police officers have had in the reopened police investigation of deaths at Deepcut barracks; and how many potential witnesses were canvassed and interviewed by military personnel in the investigations into the deaths of (a) Mr. Sean Benton, (b) Cheryl James, (c) Mr. Geoff Gray and (d) Mr. James Collinson. [143128]

Mr. Ingram: In response to a request from Surrey Police, two Ministry of Defence Police Detective Constables were seconded to the Surrey Police team for the duration of their investigation into the Deepcut deaths. During the secondment the two officers have been at all times under the full operational control of that Force. The details of the investigations are matters for the Surrey Police.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the (a) costs and (b) offsetting receipts of government-to-government defence export programmes are included in the administration and sales promotion expenses of the Defence Export Services Organisation staff in the central Top Level Budget. [142416]

Mr. Ingram: The costs and offsetting receipts of government-to-government defence export programmes are included in the Administration and Sales Promotion expenses of the Defence Export Services Organisation staff in the Central Top Level Budget. Details of these expenses are published in Table 11 (Export of Defence Equipment) of Cmd 5912, the Government's Expenditure Plans (Ministry of Defence) 2003–04 to 2005–06.

Eurofighter Typhoon

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the contracts will be awarded for the second tranche of the Eurofighter project; how much the contracts will be for; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay. [142303]

Mr. Ingram: Intense work is under way involving our partner nations and industry to enable contracts for the second tranche of Eurofighter Typhoon aircraft to be placed as soon as possible. The cost to the United Kingdom is expected to be of the order of £5,000 million. Under the original schedule, the contracts had been due to be placed during 2003 but the programme, including the delivery of Tranche 1 aircraft, has been subject to delay. We are determined to ensure that Industry's proposals for Tranche 2 are soundly based to deliver capability to a schedule against which the Royal Air Force can plan with confidence.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the planned interchangeability of weapons between the Eurofighter Typhoon aircraft ordered by the four partner nations. [141978]

Mr. Ingram: It will be physically possible to fit and operate any weapon that has been integrated with Typhoon on any nation's Typhoon aircraft, although not all nations would necessarily have the airworthiness clearance and training to use any weapons. There are currently no plans for one nation to use weapons bought by another.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether gun safety indicators will be fitted to the RAF's operational Eurofighter Typhoon aircraft. [141979]

Mr. Ingram: We currently have no requirement for Typhoon to be armed with a gun. For overall armament safety there is a Remote Position Indicator for the Master Armament Safety Switch (MASS), which removes power from all the armament systems on the aircraft, and confirms to the groundcrew, before they approach the aircraft, that the MASS has been set to safe.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the speed limitations caused by the external carriage of weapons on the Eurofighter Typhoon; and whether the merits of an internal weapons bay in this respect have been assessed. [141980]

Mr. Ingram: Assessments have been carried out to determine the flight limitations necessitated by the thermal effects of high-speed carriage of weapons on the Eurofighter Typhoon. The merits of an internal weapons bay were assessed during the early design phase of the aircraft. However, this arrangement was rejected because the aircraft was designed primarily for the air superiority role where the rapid availability of weapons mounted on external pylons offers greater operational advantage.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the weapons suspension points on the RAF's operational Eurofighter Typhoon aircraft will be compatible with Military Standard 1760; and if he will make a statement. [141982]

Mr. Ingram: All the weapons suspension points on the RAF's operational Eurofighter Typhoon will be compatible with Military Standard 1760.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether a competition process is intended between bidders for a mid-life update to the RAF's Eurofighter Typhoon aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [141983]

Mr. Ingram: Typhoon's incremental acquisition strategy means that enhancements to the aircraft's capabilities will be incorporated progressively after its initial entry into service. It is too early in the Typhoon programme to consider whether a formal mid-life update for the aircraft might be needed or how it might best be achieved.

Future Strategic Tanker Aircraft Programme

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the implications are for the UK's acquisition of air tanker aircraft of the US Department of Defense's re-examination of the equivalent programme. [142779]

Mr. Ingram: None.

Hawk Jet Trainer

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made in finalising the contractual arrangements between his Department and BAe Systems in respect of the acquisition of Hawk 128 Advanced Jet Trainers. [141990]

Mr. Ingram: Good progress has been made to date with BAE Systems. A contract for risk reduction activities is expected to be signed before the end of the year. Negotiations towards a final contract for Hawk 128 continue.

Hercules

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the C-130K Hercules airframes, giving the out-of-service dates of each. [142604]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 8 December 2003]: Based on current predictions it is expected that the RAFs Hercules C-130K fleet will be retired around the end of this decade. The out of service dates for individual aircraft have yet to be decided.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work is planned to upgrade the C-130K fleet; whether this will include upgrading of the wings; and what effect such upgrades will have on the out-of-service dates of each aircraft. [142638]

Mr. Ingram: On current plans it is expected that the RAF's Hercules C-130K aircraft will be progressively withdrawn from service from around the end of this decade to be replaced by A400M aircraft. Consequently there is no upgrade programme for the C130K fleet. However, a small number of aircraft have had their capabilities enhanced to meet the demands of recent operations in Afghanistan and Iraq. This did not include upgrading of their wings.

Israel

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on the supply to Israel of (a) weapons and (b) machine parts that can be used to enhance that country's (i) nuclear and (ii) biological weapons capability. [142335]

Mr. MacShane: I have been asked to reply.

As with export licence applications for all other countries, licences for the supply of strategic goods to Israel are assessed on a case-by-case basis against the Consolidated EU and National Export Licensing Criteria. The criteria ensure that proper consideration is taken of the risk of the goods being used for either internal repression or external aggression. The assessment includes careful consideration of the possible, as well as the stated, end-use of any equipment supplied.

The Government would not issue an export licence that was in contravention of the criteria.

Marine Navigational Aids PFI

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the public private partnership/private finance initiative project for the provision of MoD marine navigational aids is to be concluded; and what the cost to the Department has been; [142535]

(2) if he will list the parties involved in the public private partnership/private finance initiative project for the provision of MoD marine navigational aids; [142536]

(3) what consultation he has had with (a) the Maritime and Coastguard Agency, (b) Trinity House, (c) the Northern Lighthouse Board and (d) the Commissioners for Irish Lights regarding the public private partnership/private finance initiative contract for the provision of marine navigational aids. [142537]

Mr. Ingram: The future provision of Marine Services, which includes work relating to marine navigational aids, is the subject of a PPP/PFI Acquisition programme. These services are currently provided by Serco Denholm, under a Government Owned-Contractor Operated (GOCO) arrangement and by the Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service (RMAS). The RMAS are currently responsible for the laying/recovery and annual maintenance of some 205 navigational buoys around the coast of the British Isles. Under current plans, the design authority for navigational buoys and the supply of related mooring materials will also be transferred to the successful bidder.

Invitations to Negotiate have been issued to Serco Denholm Ltd and a consortium led by Babcock Naval Services Ltd. The RMAS have also been given the opportunity under the Acquisition programme to compete for a package of work similar in scope to their current portfolio. Announcement of the preferred option is planned in early 2005 with the conclusion of the PPP/PFI programme expected in Autumn 2005.

Maintenance of MOD navigational buoys represents a small part of the future provision of Marine Services programme and it is not possible to identify separately the management costs for this aspect alone.

Discussions took place with the General Lighthouse Authorities (GLAs), Non-Departmental Public Bodies sponsored by the DfT, in 2001 to determine whether there was scope for the GLAs to take over the maintenance and upkeep of MOD UK navigational buoys. However, it was subsequently decided not to proceed as such an arrangement would provide little benefit to the MOD. No further discussions on this matter have taken place either with public or private sector bodies.

National Defence Industries Council

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the industrial members of the National Defence Industries Council; what the criteria are for their appointment; and if he will make a statement. [141843]

Mr. Ingram: The industry members of the National Defence Industries Council (NDIC) currently are:

Sir Richard Evans: Chairman, Defence Industries Council and Chairman, BAE Systems plc
Mr. Andrew Davies: Vice President Defence, Intellect
Mr. Martin Jay: President, Society of Maritime Industries
Sir David Lees: Chairman, GKN plc
Mr. Nick Prest: Chairman, Defence Manufacturers Association
Mr. Gordon Page: President, Society British Aerospace Companies
Dr. Sally Howes: Secretary, Defence Industries Council
Mr. Simon Frost: Chairman, Claverham Group
Mr. Alex Dorrian: Chief Executive Officer, Thales Defence Ltd.
Mr. Colin Green: President of Defence Aerospace, Rolls-Royce plc
Mr. Tony Pryor: Chairman Devonport Management Ltd., and Chief Operating Officer Europe and Africa, Kellogg Brown and Root

The NDIC is the senior body that provides a focus for regular consultation between the Ministry of Defence and industry on questions of defence supply and procurement of mutual concern, and defines areas for joint study.

Appointment to the NDIC is at the discretion of the Secretary of State. The industry membership comprises the senior representatives of the four main trade associations, senior industrialists, representatives of the service sector and representatives of small and medium-sized enterprises, who are invited on an individual basis.

Qatar

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether BAE Systems sought the advice of the (a) Ministry of Defence and (b) the Defence Export Services Organisation on whether commissions for Shaik Hamad bin Jassin bin Jaber al-Thari were legitimate in connection with a defence equipment package for Qatar signed in 1996. [142412]

Mr. Ingram: No evidence has been found in available records of advice being sought from the Ministry of Defence (including the Defence Export Services Organisation) on the question of commission payments in connection with a defence equipment package for Qatar signed in 1996.

Recruitment

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the armed forces recruitment budget was spent in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [142676]

Mr. Caplin: The total recruiting budget for each Service in each year since 1997–98 was as follows:

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03
RN/RM	25.4	28.5	28.7	30.8	33.1	29.9
Army	53.9	48.1	53.0	55.2	65.5	71.8
RAF	27.4	30.6	27.4	28.2	29.7	31.0

The proportion of the recruiting budget spent by country was:

Percentage

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03
RN/RM
England	81	81	81	80	81	81
Wales	6	6	6	6	5	6
Scotland	11	11	11	12	12	11
Northern Ireland	2	2	2	2	2	2
RAF
England	27	25	29	29	29	29
Wales	2	2	3	3	3	3
Scotland	4	4	5	5	5	5
Northern Ireland	3	1	1	1	1	1

The remainder of the budget was taken up by National recruiting campaigns and Central costs. The Army's recruiting budget is managed centrally and cannot be broken down in the format requested.

Territorial Army (Balkans)

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army personnel are serving in the Balkans. [143345]

Mr. Caplin: As at 1 December 2003, 182 Territorial Army personnel were mobilised for service in the Balkans.

Tornado

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why new shoulder weapons pylons were not procured for the upgrade of Tornado GR1 aircraft to GR4 standard; and if he will make a statement. [141981]

Mr. Ingram: The shoulder weapon pylons on the Tornado GR1 were upgraded to Tornado GR4 standard as part of the Tornado GR1 mid-life upgrade programme. There was therefore no requirement to procure new shoulder weapon pylons.

Warships

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list significant (a) accidents and (b) fires on RFA Argus within the past six months. [143259]

Mr. Ingram: There have been no accidents on RFA Argus in the last six months. However, the ship is currently undergoing a refit and on 2 December a small fire occurred during work on her boiler. Damage was limited to the boiler and Argus is expected to return to service, as planned, early next year.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Occupational Pensions

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what help he can offer pensioners who have lost money because the occupational schemes of their insolvent employers have been administered under the Pensions Act 1995 since 6 April 1997. [142110]

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what the Government's policy is on establishing a compensation fund for payments backdated to 1997 to pension scheme members who would be entitled to final salary pensions where the scheme (a) has been wound up and (b) is being wound up where there are insufficient assets fully to meet the scheme pension liabilities; [142378]

(2) what proposals the Government have to make the proposed Pension Protection Fund retrospective from the introduction of the Pensions Act 1995. [142382]

Malcolm Wicks: The Government have great sympathy for the pension scheme members who have suffered pension losses due to their insolvent company's scheme winding up underfunded. These cases have highlighted the need for urgent action so that their situation can be avoided in the future. This is why we are amending the priority order, introducing the Pension Protection Fund and strengthening the employer debt by introducing the full buy out provision.

When the introduction of the Pension Protection Fund (PPF) was announced on 11 June 2003, Official Report, column 683, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State stated that it would be introduced as soon as parliamentary time allows, and that it would apply to the future, not retrospectively.

Ministers have been meeting those affected by pension losses in order to understand their plight and to listen to suggestions regarding assistance ahead of the PPF's introduction. However, to provide help for those who have already lost out would raise a number of complex and difficult issues, and, as a result, Ministers have emphasised that they do not want to raise false hope in this area.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what the Government's policy is in relation to the protection of pension rights on employer insolvency under Article 8 of the EU Insolvency Directive of 1980; [142373]

(2) if he will make a statement on how the Government has complied with Article 8 of the EU Insolvency Directive of 1980. [142374]

Malcolm Wicks: Our policy in relation to Article 8 of the EU Insolvency Directive of 1980, is to safeguard certain contributions that members pay into occupational pension schemes.

We meet our obligations under Article 8 of the Insolvency Directive, as successive Governments have done since it was adopted in 1980. Under the Employment Rights Act 1996 and the Pensions Scheme Act 1993, the Redundancy Payments Directorate, on behalf of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, makes insolvency payments from the National Insurance Fund (NIF) to qualifying former employees. The amounts payable from the NIF are subject to statutory upper limits. In addition, the Pensions Act 1995 requires salary-related schemes to meet the Minimum Funding Requirement (MFR), and provides for a statutory priority order for the distribution of a scheme's assets if a scheme, that is required to meet the MFR, winds up.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what the Government's estimate is of the number of final salary pension funds that (a) have been wound up and (b) are being wound up since the introduction of the Pensions Act 1995; and how many of those employers were (i) solvent and (ii) insolvent at the time of winding-up; [142375]

(2) what estimate the Government has made of the total value of pensions lost since 1997 as a consequence of final salary pension schemes that (a) have been wound up and (b) are being wound up by (i) solvent and (ii) insolvent employers; [142376]

(3) if he will list by (a) region and (b) constituency final salary pension schemes which (i) have been wound up and (ii) are being wound up by (A) a solvent and (B) an insolvent employer in each year since 1997. [142377]

Malcolm Wicks: The Pensions Schemes Registry (PSR), administered by the Occupational Pension Schemes Regulatory Authority (OPRA), holds information on the number of final salary schemes which are currently in the winding-up process and the number of schemes which have entered and completed winding-up. The registry database is, however, limited in a number of ways as described in the footnote. Consequently, it does not provide all the information requested, though it nevertheless remains the most comprehensive source of information available on the aggregate number of pension schemes in the UK.

According to the PSR's most recent data, around 1,400 private sector final salary schemes were in the winding-up process at the beginning of September, and around 4,800 private sector final salary schemes have completed winding-up. The data does not permit any further analysis on whether these schemes have commenced/completed winding-up prior to 1997 or 1995.

It is not possible to split the above by whether they are connected to a solvent or insolvent employer. No alternative data source exists to provide this information. Also, the information collected does not facilitate analysis by region or constituency. As regards estimating the value of pensions lost (due to winding-up), this is also fraught with numerous difficulties. The extent of loss depends on many different factors—such as the maturity of the scheme (that is, the age profile and retirement status of members), and the funding position before starting winding-up. The latter in turn is highly sensitive to investment decisions and conditions in the financial markets. With no information to draw on at an aggregate level, we are unable to comment on the extent of scheme under-funding and losses arising from wind-up. The PSR, as mentioned, was not designed originally for the purposes of such analysis, and therefore does not provide information on scheme funding positions and costs.

Note:

The Pension Schemes Registry (PSR) is not designed or intended to provide a comprehensive or continuous statistical record of the status of schemes. The PSR registers schemes for tracing purposes and collects the levy from pension schemes, including those in the process of winding-up. New scheme data are being reported to the PSR on a continuous basis. Therefore, the figures are subject to continuous revision. When a scheme has changed status, the previous status of the scheme is not recorded on the Registry. Schemes have up to 12 months to notify OPRA of any status change.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what estimate the Government has made of the cost of paying compensation backdated to 1997 for pension scheme members who would be entitled to final salary pensions where the scheme is (a) wound up and (b) being wound up and where there were insufficient assets to fully meet the scheme pension liabilities. [142379]

Malcolm Wicks: It is not possible to provide an estimate of the cost of a compensation arrangement without a range of assumptions, including assumptions about the nature and level of compensation to be provided, the number of people covered and the degree of underfunding in their pension schemes.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the Government's policy is on the guarantee of members' future pension benefits of existing final salary pension schemes in the period before the introduction of the proposed Pension Protection Fund. [142383]

Malcolm Wicks: The Pensions Act 1995 makes provision for the payment of compensation to trust-based occupational pension schemes in cases of dishonesty. The compensation scheme should provide some help where the sponsoring employer is insolvent and the value of the scheme assets has been reduced as a result of dishonesty.

There is legislation currently in place that provides that, when a salary-related occupational pension scheme winds up, any deficiency in the pension fund becomes a debt on the employer. The Government have issued draft regulations designed to strengthen this protection. They state that where a scheme is wound up and the sponsoring employer is solvent, the employer should ensure that there are sufficient funds in the scheme to meet the full costs of the rights accrued by scheme members, unless doing so would put the company itself at risk.

The current legislation provides a statutory priority order for distribution of assets on wind-up. We have issued draft regulations on a revised statutory priority order that will ensure that the degree of protection offered will reflect the length of time a member has been contributing to the scheme.

We are planning for both sets of regulations to come into force in early 2004.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the Government's policy is on protecting the accrued pension rights inherent in the value of money transferred into employer defined benefit occupational pension schemes from other schemes, to prevent loss of these sums as a consequence of employer insolvency. [142385]

Malcolm Wicks: The current legislation which applies when a defined benefit occupational pension scheme winds up does not differentiate between accrued pension rights that have been transferred into a scheme, and other accrued rights that are already in the scheme. We have no plans to alter this position.

We have announced a package of measures to protect all members of defined benefit occupational pension schemes when their employer becomes insolvent. These include the introduction of the Pension Protection Fund and refinements to the priority order.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans the Government have to reduce the time taken to wind up final salary pension schemes. [142386]

Malcolm Wicks: In April 2002, we introduced legislation to speed up the time taken to wind up pension schemes. Trustees are required to make regular progress reports to the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (Opra). Opra can direct that action is taken by those responsible if it considers that the winding up is being unreasonably delayed. Other people involved in running the scheme are required to tell Opra if there are no trustees so that consideration can be given to appointing a trustee. And trustees can apply to Opra for an order to modify the scheme so that it can be wound up.

In addition, there will be proposals in the recently announced Pensions Bill for the introduction of a more hands-on role for the new Pensions Regulator which will be based on risk analysis. This approach will further facilitate the winding up of schemes and will provide welcome support for trustees.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what comparative studies the Government has carried out to establish how the cost of providing annuities to employer final salary schemes in wind-up can be of best value to scheme members. [142387]

Malcolm Wicks: The Government have not carried out studies into the use of annuities when a final-salary scheme is in wind-up. When a pension scheme is in wind-up, its trustees seek to discharge the scheme's liabilities, using annuities to secure pensioners' incomes.

Pension Credit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list the passported benefits for (a) Guarantee Pensions Credit, (b) Savings Pension Credit and (c) Council Tax Benefit. [142658]

Malcolm Wicks: The principal passported benefits for Pension Credit Guarantee Credit and Pension Credit Savings Credit are in the following table.

Benefit/Scheme	Administration	Department	Passported by Pension Credit Guarantee Credit	Passported by Pension Credit Savings Credit alone
Assisted Prison Visits	England, Scotland and Wales	Home Office	Yes	No
Court Fees Exemption	England and Wales	Department for Constitutional Affairs	Yes	No
Dental Treatment	England, Scotland and Wales	Department of Health	Yes	No
Discretionary Grant for the Disabled	England	Office of the Deputy Prime Minister	Yes	No
Discretionary Grant for the Disabled	Wales	Welsh Assembly	Yes	No
Home Energy Efficiency Scheme	England	Department for Environment Food and Rural Affairs	Yes	Yes
Home Energy Efficiency Scheme	Scotland	Scottish Executive	Yes	Yes
Home Energy Efficiency Scheme	Wales	Welsh Assembly	Yes	Yes
Improvement and Repair Grants	Scotland	Scottish Executive	Yes	No
Milk Tokens for Pregnant partners	England, Scotland and Wales	Department of Health	Yes	No
Optical Vouchers and Sight Tests	England, Scotland and Wales	Department of Health	Yes	No
Seat Belts—no need to pay for medical evidence for exemption	England, Scotland and Wales	Department for Transport	Yes	No

Legal Aid—Pension Credit Guarantee Credit and Pension Credit Savings Credit will be disregarded in the assessment for financial eligibility for Legal Aid.

People who qualify for a guarantee credit only or who qualify for a guarantee credit and a savings credit will generally get help through Housing Benefit towards all of their eligible rent payments, provided these are reasonable, minus deductions for any non-dependants living with them.

People who receive only the savings credit will not be entitled to full Housing Benefit. Instead, the amount of Housing Benefit they receive will depend upon their income (including their savings credit), their personal circumstances and the amount of their eligible rent. However, the personal allowances used in the Housing Benefit calculation have been enhanced to reflect the maximum savings credit figure. This will ensure that people do not lose the gains from the savings credit in the calculation of their Housing Benefit. This enhancement will apply to all Housing Benefit claimants, aged 65 or over, irrespective of whether they are receiving the maximum savings credit or no savings credit.

Welsh further education tuition fee remission policy is at the discretion of the Further Education College. People in receipt of Pension Credit may (subject to the other criteria) be eligible for a payment from the Social Fund.

People in receipt of Pension Credit have access to the Social Fund subject to the criteria which apply to the different types of Social Fund payment available.

Pension Service

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners (a) have requested, (b) have received and (c) are currently on a waiting list to receive a home visit from the Pension Service local service; and what the average waiting time is before a pensioner can expect to receive a visit. [143082]

Malcolm Wicks: The Pension Service is primarily a telephony-based service delivered through a network of pension centres across the UK. However, for a variety of reasons, not all older people are able to conduct their business in this way and require either a home appointment or an appointment at a location convenient to them. These customers are referred to local service. During October 2003 (latest available statistics), 45,925 such customers were referred to local service from pension centres and 43,601 received home appointments.

There are no 'waiting lists'. The standard for local service is that customers will be offered a convenient home or surgery appointment within 10 working days. Latest available statistics show that this standard is being met in 96.1 per cent of cases. Home visits are sometimes postponed by the customer while relevant documents are obtained or to enable a relative to be present.

Timber

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions by what means the policy for purchasing timber and timber products of (a) the Department, (b) the Appeals Service, (c) the Child Support Agency, (d) JobCentre Plus and (e) the Pension Service ensures that they are obtained from legal and sustainable sources. [141343]

Maria Eagle: The Department's PFI Estates Partner—Land Securities Trillium—supplies the majority of timber products for the Department and all its executive agencies. They were made aware of the requirement to purchase timber from legal and sustainable sources in September 2000, by e-mail and during the regular progress meetings that are held between the Department and Land Securities Trillium.

Land Securities Trillium provide an annual report to the Department, giving information on all their suppliers, the type of timber product supplied and details of all supporting verification. This report is then subject to independent verification.

The roll out of the new Jobcentre Plus service means that there are some contracts for refurbishment of sites that are being let outside of the Department's main PFI estates contract. Details of the model contract specification were circulated to the relevant procurement team. A requirement for evidence of the sustainability of timber was included within all contracts. The Department is currently reviewing what evidence has been supplied to date.

Winter Fuel Allowance

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps are being taken to encourage men aged between 60 and 65 to apply for the winter fuel allowance for the 2003–04 winter. [142833]

Malcolm Wicks: Each year, we are able to identify most men who are likely to become newly eligible for a winter fuel payment using current departmental records and they are sent claim forms automatically with an invitation to make a claim.

An extensive publicity campaign is carried out from June each year and continues throughout the year. The campaign includes: advertisements in national and local press; a leaflet and poster made available in a variety of venues, a dedicated Winter Fuel Payment Helpline and information on the internet.

Where a person needs to claim, it is up to them whether they do so. They have until 30 March 2004 to make their claim for this winter.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what targets have been set for the number of men aged between 60 and 65 to apply for the 2003–04 Winter Fuel Allowance. [142834]

Malcolm Wicks: We expect all those entitled who are not paid automatically, including men aged between 60 and 64, to claim their entitlement to Winter Fuel Payments. In order to achieve full take up we issue claim forms to all those in the target group and publicise the availability of Winter Fuel Payments.

So far 172,790 claim forms have been issued to men aged 60–64 for this winter. All those who need to claim have until 30 March 2004 to do so.

Note:

1. Figures rounded to the nearest five.
2. Information to identify those likely to be entitled was extracted from the Departmental Central Index based on post codes.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what plans he has to revise the qualifying week for winter fuel payments; [142835]

(2) for what reason his Department chose 21 September as the final qualifying date for the 2003–04 winter fuel payment. [142836]

Malcolm Wicks: There are no current plans to change the winter fuel payment qualifying week.

The qualifying week is set in legislation for the third week in September to enable the Department to establish the correct amount of winter fuel payment and make automatic payments to the vast majority of those entitled at the time the payment is most needed.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many winter fuel payment claim forms have been issued in 2003 in the Perth constituency; and how many claim forms have been submitted. [142654]

Malcolm Wicks: The number of winter fuel payment claim forms issued so far this year to people who are likely to become eligible for a winter fuel payment in the Perth constituency is 696, and of those 446 have been returned.

We are publicising the availability of winter fuel payments and how to obtain a claim form. Those who need to claim for this winter have until 30 March 2004 to do so.

Note:

Information to identify those likely to be entitled was extracted from the Departmental Central Index based on postcodes.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many Winter Fuel Payment claim forms have been issued in 2003 in (a) Merseyside and (b) St. Helens; and how many claim forms have been submitted. [142716]

Malcolm Wicks: The number of Winter Fuel Payment claim forms issued so far this year to people who are likely to become eligible for a Winter Fuel Payment in Merseyside is 31,005, and of those 20,698 have been returned.

The number of Winter Fuel Payment claim forms issued so far this year to people who are likely to become eligible for a Winter Fuel Payment in St. Helens is 2,133, and of those 1,547 have been returned.

We are publicising the availability of Winter Fuel Payments and how to obtain a claim form. Those who need to claim for this winter have until 30 March 2004 to do so.

Note:

Information to identify those likely to be entitled was extracted from the Departmental Central Index based on post codes.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Central Heating

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what regulations are in place to ensure the safe (a) installation and (b) operation of domestic central heating systems, with particular reference to preventing pollution from oil leakages; [143068]

(2) what quality standards apply to domestic central heating oil storage tanks in (a) metal and (b) plastic; [143069]

(3) how many oil-fired domestic central heating installations there are in England. [143171]

Phil Hope: Evidence from the English House Condition Survey indicates that there are around 700,000 oil fired domestic heating installations in England.

Part J of the Building Regulations covers the pollution risks associated with the installation of domestic oil fired central heating. Ways of meeting the requirement are conveyed in Approved Document J (2002) and include compliance with BS 5410 (1997 amended 2001): Code of Practice for Oil Firing—Part 1: installations up to 45 kW output capacity for space heating and hot water supply purposes, providing secondary containment where a risk assessment indicates this is necessary, and labelling storage systems with what to do if an oil spill occurs. BS 5410 refers to BS 799 Part 5 (1987) : Specification for oil tanks for steel tanks and to the industry (OFTEC) standard OFS T100 (1995) Polyethylene oil storage tanks and bunds for distillate fuels. OFTEC has since published OFS T200 as their specification for steel tanks.

The Control of Pollution (Oil Storage) (England) Regulations 2001, SI 2001:2954 provide minimum standards for domestic tanks where the storage capacity is in excess of 3,500 litres. There are no other regulations specifically covering the prevention of oil pollution from oil leakages arising from the operation of domestic oil fired central heating systems. However, it is a statutory offence to cause or knowingly permit the pollution of "controlled waters" (which includes ground and surface waters) under the Water Resources Act 1991.

Regeneration

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidance he has issued to English Partnerships in respect of the criteria used in determining allocations to assist housing-led regeneration schemes outside housing market pathfinder renewal areas; and if he will make a statement. [140941]

Keith Hill: English Partnerships' remit was set out in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's "Sustainable communities: building for the future" which was published earlier this year.

EP's priorities for expenditure include:

The 20 per cent. most deprived wards;

The Coalfields programme;

Urban Regeneration Company areas;

Housing Market Renewal Fund pathfinder areas;

Target areas for major housing growth in the South East of England;

Strategic brownfield sites in or close to any of the above priority areas or in areas of housing pressure or housing abandonment;

Other discretionary projects that promote wider regeneration benefits, particularly where EP can add significant value.

English Partnerships is represented on all regional housing boards and takes their strategies into account when making decisions on specific projects in their regions.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will amend the financial model used by the Boundary Committee in assessing the costs of reorganising local government in the three northern regions to include (a) transitional, (b) opportunity and (c) ongoing costs of change. [142222]

Mr. Raynsford: No. The model used by the Boundary Committee looks at the "cost of being in business"—that is, the recurring costs that an authority must incur regardless of the level of service that it provides. Other costs and savings that will result from re-organisation are heavily dependent on the policy decisions of the elected representatives of individual councils and cannot, therefore, be used for modelling purposes without making assumptions about the decisions that will be taken by authorities that have yet to be created. The cost of being in business, being less dependent on such assumptions, provides a sounder basis on which to make comparisons.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to collect centrally the costs of any reorganisation of local government; and if he will make a statement. [142225]

Mr. Raynsford: It is too early to say what the cost of and potential long-term savings from reorganisation might be. It will depend ultimately on the pattern of unitary authorities introduced following referendums and on decisions that the new unitary authorities take about their organisational structure. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will discuss how any costs will be funded with local authorities and the Local Government Association nearer the time.

Housing Market Renewal

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will respond to the bids for resources from the market renewal pathfinders; and if he will make a statement. [142994]

Keith Hill: The nine market renewal pathfinders are each required to submit a strategic scheme to outline their proposals on how they plan to spend the Housing Market Renewal fund that they are bidding for and address the issues of low demand. These schemes are assessed by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in negotiation with the pathfinder and independently scrutinised by the Audit. Following successful negotiations and a satisfactory report from the Audit Commission the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will allocate a proportion of the Housing Market Renewal Fund to a scheme.

£125 million has already been allocated to the Manchester Salford pathfinder for implementation of its scheme over the next two and a half years. Strategic schemes from two other pathfinders, Newcastle Gateshead and Merseyside, have been received and are being assessed by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Audit Commission. Others are expected over the next few months.

Regional Assemblies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to change the voting system in reorganised single tier authorities which may be established following the referendums on regional assemblies; and if he will make a statement. [142572]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans for reorganisation to affect the voting systems in English local government.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent representations he has received from organisations in the North West urging the Government to extend the powers and functions of the proposed regional assembly; and if he will make a statement. [142798]

Mr. Raynsford: Since it was announced which regions would proceed first towards referendums on 16 June 2003 the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has received four representations from organisations in the North West region asking the Government to extend the powers of the proposed regional assembly. In addition three individuals urged greater powers.

Right to Buy Scheme

Jon Trickett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister in what circumstances the Government will overrule a local council's decision as to a property's exemption from the right to buy scheme. [142909]

Keith Hill: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister may overrule a Council's decision in relation to the Right to Buy in only one circumstance.

Under paragraph 11 of Schedule 5 of the Housing Act 1985, a landlord may deny a social tenant's application to buy his or her home on the grounds that the dwelling is particularly suitable for occupation by the elderly, having regard to its location, size, design, heating system and other features, and if it was let to the tenant or a predecessor in title of his for occupation by a person who was aged 60 or more (whether the tenant or a predecessor or another person). In determining whether the dwelling is particularly suitable, no regard shall be had to the presence of any feature provided by the tenant or a predecessor in title of his.

Paragraph 11(4) provides that the question shall be determined by the Secretary of State if the tenant applies to him within the period of 56 days from notification of the landlord's decision. If on receiving such an appeal, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister considers that the property does not meet the criteria set out in paragraph 11, he can determine that the Right to Buy application should proceed. The main points on which my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will normally expect to be satisfied before determining that a property is in fact particularly suitable for occupation by the elderly are set out in Department of the Environment Circular 13/93. They are that:

there should be easy access on foot to the dwelling; access is unlikely to be regarded as easy, in an area which is not hilly, if it is necessary to climb three or more steps (in addition to the threshold) and there is no handrail the accommodation should be on one level in the case of a flat above ground floor level there should be access by lift there should be no more than two bedrooms

there should be adequate arrangements for heating the living room and at least one bedroom the dwelling should be located reasonably conveniently for shops and public transport, having regard to the nature of the area.

My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will also consider other features to which his attention may be drawn.

Jon Trickett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many local council decisions on exemption from the right to buy scheme he has overruled since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [142910]

Keith Hill: Secure tenants denied the Right to Buy by their landlords under paragraph 11 of Schedule 5 of the Housing Act 1985, on the grounds that their homes are particularly suitable for occupation by elderly persons, may appeal to my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister. The numbers of such appeals determined since 1997 are set out in the table (the figures do not include invalid or withdrawn appeals):

	Appeals accepted	Appeals refused	Totals
1997	46	106	152
1998	53	121	174
1999	70	150	220
2000	55	120	175
2001	53	179	232
2002	71	243	314
2003 (as at 4 December)	112	303	415

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to make smoke alarms in rented property a legal requirement. [142776]

Phil Hope: The Housing Bill 2003 provides that a local housing authority can impose as a condition for a house in multiple occupation to be licensed under Part 2, or for any house subject to selective licensing under Part 3 of the Bill, that the property is equipped with smoke alarms. Schedule 4 of the Bill provides that it is mandatory condition that where smoke alarms are installed they are properly maintained.

Tenancy Deposit Scheme

Mr. Steen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will respond to the Select Committee on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's recommendation that a tenancy deposit scheme should be introduced; and if he will make a statement. [142866]

Keith Hill: The government published its response to the Select Committee on 10 November 2003.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will establish a fast track procedure to enable tenants' deposits withheld by private landlords after the termination of their contract to be speedily returned. [142867]

Keith Hill: As indicated by the government's response to the Select Committee on the Housing Bill of 10 November 2003, we are considering detailed proposals.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he is taking to encourage the take-up of apprenticeships. [141885]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The Government are wholly behind Modern Apprenticeships as a high quality work-based learning option for young people. We are fully committed to implementing the reforms recommended by the Modern Apprenticeships Advisory Committee under Sir John Cassels, which included a major boost to the marketing of MAs, and to more recent Skills Strategy announcements. Under Sir Roy Gardner a business-led Modern Apprenticeship Task Force is taking a key role in promoting MA to employers and thereby contributing to increased take-up. We have adopted a PSA target for 2004 of 28 per cent. of young people entering a Modern Apprenticeship before the age of 22. We have made sufficient resources available to ensure that we meet this target and are on course to achieve it.

LEA Staff (Assault)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to introduce a national incident reporting system for recording physical assaults on (a) teachers and (b) other local education authority staff. [141810]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Employers are already required to report to the Health and Safety Executive incidents, including ones resulting from acts of physical violence, which cause injuries to staff resulting in more than three days' absence from work. Local education authorities and other employers of school staff also have their own reporting arrangements. The Government have no plans to add to these systems.

Civil Servants

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many senior civil servants in his Department are disabled expressed in actual terms and as a percentage of FTE staff. [143067]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My Department has two senior civil servants who have declared a disability. This equates to 1.3 per cent. of FTE staff.

School Exclusions

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children have been excluded from (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) special schools in (i) Portsmouth, South and (ii) England in each year since 1999–2000. [141348]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The information requested is shown in the table.

Higher Education

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the paper by the hon. Members for The Wrekin (Peter Bradley) and for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead) on the funding of higher education; and if he will publish his assessment. [142539]

Alan Johnson: I shall be writing to my hon. Friends concerning their proposal. A copy of this letter will be placed in the House Library in due course.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will meet the vice chancellors of (a) South Bank University, (b) University of Glamorgan and (c) University College Wales, Newport to discuss the future of higher education. [142540]

Alan Johnson: I have frequent meetings with vice chancellors in which our proposals for the future of higher education are discussed. However, as a devolved matter, issues related to higher education institutions in Wales such as the University of Glamorgan and University College Wales are a matter for the Welsh Assembly.

Jeff Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many universities he expects will be in a position to offer bursaries to students from poorer backgrounds under the Government's new higher education funding proposal; [142902]

(2) what his estimate is of the percentage of students from poorer backgrounds who could qualify for a bursary under the new higher education funding proposals. [142956]

Alan Johnson: We are considering and discussing the contents of access agreements and the duties of the Office for Fair Access, and will make a statement in due course.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what grants OFFA will be involved in distributing and on what basis; and where its funding will come from. [143072]

Alan Johnson: We have no plans for the Office for Fair Access to distribute any grants. It will be a regulatory body, not a funding body.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether it is his policy to intervene to prevent universities charging the full top-up fee to its students. [142516]

Alan Johnson: We propose that all universities will be able to charge variable fees of up to 3,000 from academic year 2006/07, provided they have an Access Agreement approved by the Office for Fair Access.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received from (a) student representative bodies and (b) the university sector in Scotland on the subject of top-up fees. [142730]

Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from various stakeholders in Scotland on the subject of variable fees.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what written representations he has received from the First Minister of Scotland on the subject of top-up fees. [142765]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 8 December 2003]: My right hon. Friend has had a number of discussions with the First Minister of Scotland on the subject of variable fees and other higher education issues.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether he plans to link the threshold for repayment of tuition fees to (a) the cost of living and (b) average earnings. [143176]

Alan Johnson: We will set out the Government's policies on repayment thresholds for student loans in the new year in the Regulatory Impact Assessment, which will set out the financial implications of the policies announced in the Higher Education White Paper.

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what consultation there has been with mature entrants to university on the impact of variable tuition fees. [142601]

Alan Johnson: The Department has received a number of representations from a variety of sources following the publication of the White Paper. We have taken steps to stimulate debate about the future of higher education among all interested groups. We want to encourage able students of all ages to take advantage of a university education. Under our proposals for variable tuition fees, every graduate would repay according to their personal financial circumstances regardless of their age.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many universities have indicated their intention to waive fees for students embarking on (a) science, (b) engineering and (c) mathematics degrees; and if he will make a statement. [142785]

Alan Johnson: It will be for higher education institutions themselves to decide what level of fees they set for each of their courses from 2006/07 onwards, between £0 and £3,000. I would expect them to consider a range of factors in doing so, including the likely impact of their decisions on demand by students for their courses.

Student Loans

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of average earnings the threshold for repayment of a student loan was at (a) the time it was introduced and (b) the latest date for which figures are available. [143175]

Alan Johnson: The first point at which borrowers could be required to repay income contingent loans was April 2000. At that time the threshold of £10,000 was 44 per cent. of average earnings (£22,475[1]). In April 2003 the threshold (£10,000) was 40 per cent. of average earnings (£25,134[1]).

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Insolvency Directive (Legal Action)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the Government's estimate is of the cost of defending the legal action that the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation and Amicus brought in relation to the implementation of Article 8 of the 1980 European Insolvency Directive. [142502]

Malcolm Wicks: I have been asked to reply.

At such an early stage in the proceedings, it is not possible to provide an estimate of the costs of defending the action brought by ISTC and Amicus.

Audit

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with (a) UK firms and (b) representatives of the accountancy profession on the decision to raise the audit exemption threshold to £5.6 million; and if she will publish the minutes of such meetings. [140884]

Ms Hewitt: On 11 July 2003 the Government published a consultation document on the proposal to increase the audit exemption threshold. The consultation document was sent to some 870 organisations, businesses and individuals, including UK firms and representatives of the accountancy profession. There were 90 responses of which 35 were from UK firms and 11 from bodies representing the accountancy profession. A summary of the responses is available on the Department's website at http://www.dti.gov.uk/cld/published.htm

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the change in cost to UK businesses of the reduction in the timescale for rotation of audit partners from seven to five years. [140885]

Ms Hewitt: The regular rotation of audit partners plays an important role in upholding auditor independence. The Government welcomed the recommendation by the Coordinating Group on Audit and Accounting Issues (CGAA) last January to reduce the timescale for the rotation of the lead audit partner from seven to five years. The professional audit bodies implemented the recommendation immediately through revised guidance. They pointed out that audit firms would incur some costs in terms of familiarisation and planning (which would vary according to size of firm) in moving to the new five year cycle, but agreed with the CGAA that, as the requirements only relate to firms that are auditing listed and public interest entities, the benefits in terms of safeguarding auditor independence from the client outweighed any such transitional costs.

Meanwhile the Auditing Practices Board have drafted a new ethical standard which formalises the reduction from seven to five years, and are currently consulting on this and other ethical standards.

Business Employment

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the number of businesses employing more than (a) five people, (b) 50 people, (c) 100 people and (d) 250 people in St. Helens in each year since 1992. [141306]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Shaun Woodward, dated 10 December 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question about the number of businesses employing more than (a) five people, (b) 50 people, (c) 100 people and (d) 250 people in St. Helens in each year since 1992. (141306)

The attached table gives the information you requested for 2003, but only the total number of businesses is available for earlier years.

Disadvantaged Communities

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what targets her Department has set for creating more enterprise in disadvantaged communities; and what progress has been made towards these targets. [143002]

Nigel Griffiths: The target is to narrow the gap between VAT registrations in the 20 per cent. most and 20 per cent. least deprived wards in England by one percentage point per year.

The figures for the last two years for which data are available illustrate that the gap between the two VAT registration rates has narrowed and meets the target, (see Figure 1).

Between 2000 and 2001, the gap in the rates narrowed by one percentage point and therefore progress is on track.

Further details on this target can be found in the DTI Autumn Performance Report (ref. CM 6067), published on Friday 5 December 2003 and on the DTI website shortly.

Hunting

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate her Department has made of the (a) number of small businesses which are dependent on hunting for their survival and (b) number of jobs that would be lost in the event of a ban on hunting with hounds. [142830]

Alun Michael: I have been asked to reply.

There are many businesses providing goods and services for the whole range of rural activities. No reliable estimate is possible of how many such businesses are so dependent on hunting that they would fail if hunting is regulated or banned. The Burns Report (paragraph 3.8) said

> "Hunting, as an economic activity, is so small as to be almost invisible in terms of national aggregates."

The Burns Report, paragraph 3.37, Table 3.5, estimated employment dependent on hunting as the following full-time equivalents:

	Number
Direct employment by the hunts	710
Direct employment by the followers	1,497
Indirect employment	1,992
Individual employment	1,525
Total	5,724

Evidence subsequently presented to the public hearings held in Portcullis House suggested that Burns' estimates were too high and that the number of jobs associated with hunting was much smaller.

Insurance Liability

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had within the last year with representatives of the insurance industry on the limitations of insurability in respect of (a) nuclear issues and (b) climate change issues; and if she will make a statement. [141213]

Nigel Griffiths: DTI Ministers have not had any discussions with the insurance industry on the limitations of insurability in respect of climate change issues.

With regard to insurability in respect of nuclear issues, UK nuclear operators have a statutory obligation to cover their liability by insurance. DTI officials have maintained close contact with the insurance industry over the last 12 months and are satisfied that sufficient cover is available.

Regulations (Consultation)

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of regulations introduced by the Department have been subject to a consultation period of less than 12 weeks since the introduction of the Code of Practice on Consultations. [142483]

Nigel Griffiths: The Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultation came into effect on 1 January 2001. In the period 1 January 2001 to 31 December 2002, the Department of Trade and Industry has published 133 consultations covered by the Code, of these consultations 103 lasted 12 weeks.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the comparative costs of (a) each renewable form of electricity generation and (b) energy efficiency measures in reducing carbon dioxide emissions; and if she will make a statement. [140942]

Mr. Timms: The Department has published estimates of the cost of electricity generation from a variety of forms of renewables and the comparative cost of energy efficiency measures in reducing carbon dioxide emissions. These are contained in a report published in February 2002 available at: www.dti.gov.uk/energy/greenhousegas/index.shtml.

The Performance and Innovation Unit at the Cabinet Office also published similar estimates in its 2001 Energy Review. These are available at: www.number-10.gov.uk/su/energy/1.html.

The energy White Paper published in February 2003 committed the Government to putting the UK on a path to reducing carbon dioxide emissions by 60 per cent. by 2050. Improvements in energy efficiency and increasing the share of renewables in generation will both be important in achieving this objective. The White Paper sets an objective to double the recent rate of improvement in energy efficiency and an aspiration to achieve a 20 per cent. share for renewables in 2020, double the level of the Renewables Obligation set for 2010.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the cost to public funds of wind turbine construction in the UK to 2010. [140955]

Ms Hewitt: To date, the Government have committed £117 million to support early offshore windfarm development. No estimate has been made of the level of funding that may be needed to support future development in this area, but we expect industry to respond to the market for wind turbines created by the Renewables Obligation.

No direct support is provided for onshore windfarm development except for some small household or community installations under the Clear Skies scheme.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the number of new wind turbines which will be built in the UK by 2010. [140956]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have set a target that 10 per cent. of electricity in the UK should come from renewable sources by 2010. However, no targets have been set for individual technologies, such as wind power. Decisions on which technologies to bring forward are left to the industry, consistent with the Government's policy of an open and competitive energy market. We expect the industry to respond to the market for renewables (including wind) created by the Renewables Obligation.

However, it is acknowledged that electricity generated from wind turbines— both onshore and offshore—will make the largest contribution to the overall target. While we do not publish technology forecasts, it is estimated that to supply 7 to 8 per cent. of our electricity generation by wind turbines by 2010, which is what is likely to be required to achieve our 10 per cent. target, would require in the range of 3,000 to 5,000 turbines, assuming a mix of onshore and offshore devices. There are currently just over a thousand turbines within the UK.

Small and Medium-sized Enterprises

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment her Department has made of the overall productivity of small and medium enterprises since 1997; what the gross value added per employee was in (a) SMEs and (b) large firms in each year since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [143003]

Nigel Griffiths: A measure of productivity is gross value added per employee. Data on gross value added per employee are only available on a comparable basis from 1999 onwards. The latest data available are for 2001 (see Figure 1).

SMEs	31,000	32,000	34,000
Large firms	34,000	34,000	35,000

[1] GVA is calculated at basic prices only. Public administration, education, health, financial intermediation and real estate have been excluded. There have been slight changes to the ABFs coverage over the period.

Source:

SBS, based on a special analysis from the ONS Annual Business Inquiry.

Between 1999 and 2001, the productivity of SMEs has increased at a faster rate than the productivity of large firms, and the gap in productivity has therefore narrowed. In 1999, SME productivity was 93 per cent. of large firms productivity. In 2000, it had risen to 94 per cent. By 2001, SMEs were 96 per cent. as productive as large firms.

Industrial Diseases (Solicitors' Fees)

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been paid in fees to (a) solicitors and (b) handling agents in respect of compensation for (i) chronic bronchitis and emphysema and (ii) vibration white finger. [142013]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 4 December 2003]: As of 23 November 2003 the total 217 million has been paid in solicitors' costs for respiratory disease claims and 80 million for Vibration White Finger claims.

The claim handlers, IRISC, are not made aware of the total costs paid to handling agents for processing these claims.

UK/EU Trade

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her Answer of 2 December 2003, Official Report, column 24W, if she will make a statement on the goods trade deficit with the European Union for (a) the last year for which figures are available and (b) the previous six years. [142857]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: According to figures published by the Office for National Statistics, the UK goods trade deficit with the European Union in 2002 amounted to £20.2 billion. Figures for the previous six years were as follows:

UK goods trade deficit with the European Union 1996–2001

	£ billion, current prices
1996	-4.9
1997	-4.5
1998	-6.3
1999	-8.4
2001	-11.7

Note:

To some extent the deficit reflects the relative strength of the UK economy

TREASURY

Household Debt

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average household (a) debt per quarter and (b) monthly income was in each quarter since 2000, broken down by region. [143124]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Malcolm Bruce dated 10 December 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question on a regional breakdown of average household debt per quarter and household monthly income.

There are no quarterly estimates of household debt available at regional level. However, the following table shows national estimates of average debt levels and monthly incomes for households in each year since 1997. These estimates are derived from the national accounts series for the combined household and non-profit institutions serving households (NPISH) sectors, and are taken from an answer to a previous written question (Official Report, 16 July 2003, column 303W).

1998	26,000	2,000
1999	28,000	2,100
2000	30,600	2,200
2001	33,500	2,350
2002	37,500	2,400

[1] Rounded to nearest £500

[2] Rounded to nearest £50

ONS does not produce monthly or quarterly data for income by region. The most recent annual estimates for total household income and gross disposable household income for the countries and regions of the UK are available for 1995–1999. Figures at regional, sub-regional and local area levels (NUTS 1, 2 and 3 respectively) were published in a news release on 26 March 2002, available on the National Statistics website at: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/pdfdir/reg0302.pdf

Income Tax

Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average cost of collecting income tax was as a percentage of the amount collected in 2002–03; and what the average administrative cost of paying tax credits has been as a percentage of the amount paid. [142708]

Dawn Primarolo: The cost/yield ratio for collecting income tax and the cost of administering tax credits as a percentage of the amount paid will be shown in the Inland Revenue Annual Report for 2002–03, to be published shortly.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the additional revenue that would accrue to the Exchequer annually if the top rate of income tax were 50 per cent. [142920]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my hon. Friend to table 1.6 "Direct effects of illustrative tax changes" on the Inland Revenue website www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/tax_expenditures/g_t06_1.htm. The figures exclude any estimate of behavioural response to the tax change.

Lorry Road User Charge

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the proposed (a) minimum and (b) maximum toll charge is under the Lorry Road User Charge scheme; [142913]

(2) what the estimated (a) capital and (b) administrative cost is of the Lorry Road User Charge scheme; [142914]

(3) what the estimated cost to British hauliers is of the planned Lorry Road User Charge. [142915]

John Healey: The proposed rates of Lorry Road User Charge have not yet been set. We are still considering a variety of options for how the scheme might work and have yet to go to the market to invite bids, so the estimated capital and administrative costs are not yet known. The Government are committed to reducing fuel duty for those hauliers who pay the Lorry Road User Charge so that overall they will pay no more tax as a result of the introduction of the charge. In our proposals for the charge, we have the broad support of the main haulage trade associations.

Research and Development Tax Credit

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many research and development tax credit claims for the year ended 31 March 2002 are being investigated. [143350]

Dawn Primarolo: Records of the number of inquiries into corporation tax returns do not separately highlight the number of those returns which include a claim for the R&D tax credit.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many applications for research and development tax credit for the year ended 31 March are awaiting a result of inquiries into those or previous applications. [143352]

Dawn Primarolo: Records of the number of inquiries into corporation tax returns do not separately highlight the number of those returns which include a claim for the R&D tax credit.

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to propose legislation to require companies to register details of tax avoidance schemes with the Inland Revenue. [142706]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have made no specific proposals along these lines, but will keep under consideration its overall approach for tackling tax avoidance, paying attention to the experiences of other fiscal authorities.

Tax Credits

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters, phone calls and direct contacts he has received from (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public on the action to be taken in the case of overpayment of tax credits. [142256]

Dawn Primarolo: The records kept of written correspondence, calls received and direct contacts are not classified in a way that permits the extraction of these numbers.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claims for interim payments relating to child and working tax credit claimants have been made in each month since the tax credits were introduced; how many payments have been made; and if he will estimate the (a) average and (b) total value of these payments. [143077]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of individual same day interim payments made through local offices to claimants of child and working tax credits in each month is shown in the following table. Also shown is the number of automatic direct payments made centrally to tax credit claimants in each month.

2003	Number of same day interim payments made through local offices	Number of automatic direct payments (million)
April	25,000	8.5
May	175,000	9
June	75,000	9.5
July	25,000	11.5
August	10,000	10.5
September	8,000	11
October	6,000	11.5
November	6,000	11

Notes:

1. The numbers of interim payments to July are rounded to the nearest 25,000, and for later months to the nearest thousand. The numbers of automatic direct payments are rounded to the nearest 0.5 million.

2. No figures are available for the number of claims for interim payments that have been refused.

It is estimated that in excess of £100 million tax credits were paid out by the end of November using the interim payments system.

VAT

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many enterprises were registered for VAT at the start of each year since 1997; and if he will list (a) the number of enterprises registering for VAT, (b) the number of businesses deregistering from VAT, (c) the number of closures involving bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings and (d) the net gain or loss in the stock of registered enterprises for (i) each year since 1997 and (ii) each month in 2003 broken down by (A) standard industrial classification and (B) region. [143123]

John Healey: HM Customs and Excise do not produce detailed statistics of VAT registrations or de-registrations or of insolvencies. The statistics requested at (a), (b) and (d) are published by the Small Business Service; the statistics requested at (c) are published by the Department of Trade and Industry. [More information is available on their respective websites at www.sbs.qov.uk and www.dti.gov.uk].

HOME DEPARTMENT

Community Punishments

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial resources have been allocated for community punishments in the current financial year; and what proportion is directed towards women offenders. [141624]

Paul Goggins: Resources are not specifically allocated to local probation areas for community punishment. The Boards receive a general allocation that they are permitted to spend on the range of activities they carry out. Financial information collected from the 42 Boards indicate that they collectively will spend about £75 million on community punishment orders in 2003–04 and a further £20 million on community punishment and rehabilitation orders. The number of women offenders in receipt of community punishment orders is estimated at about 12 per cent. of the total.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many referrals to the Royal Courts of Justice Citizens Advice Bureau Miscarriage of Justice Project have been made by the Criminal Cases Review Commission; and what the working policies and practices of the Commission are for a referral to the project. [141807]

Paul Goggins: The Commission does not refer cases to the Royal Courts of Justice Citizens Advice Bureau. However when sending an applicant the statement of reasons, which accompanies the Commission's decision to refer his or her case to the Court of Appeal, a copy of the Royal Courts of Justice Miscarriages of Justice Project leaflet is enclosed. The provision of the Royal Courts of Justice Citizens Advice Bureau's service is also referred to in the letter, which accompanies the statement of reasons. It is then up to the individual to decide whether he or she wishes to utilise the service.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for permission to judicially review a decision not to refer have been made against the Criminal Cases Review Commission; and of those how many (a) were refused leave by a single judge on the papers, (b) refused leave by the court at oral hearings and (c) were granted leave by either the single judge or the court. [141808]

Paul Goggins: A total of 67 applications for judicial review have been made. Of these 26 applications for permission for a judicial review have been refused by the Single Judge on the papers. These applications were not renewed. Twenty-four applications have been refused at oral hearing.

Seven applications have been granted permission, of which one was remitted to the Commission for a further review and two await a decision.

Six cases were concluded by the consent of the parties and four applications for permission are currently waiting for a decision by the Single Judge or on oral renewal to the full court.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many re-applications for review of alleged wrongful conviction upon indictment have been received by the Criminal Cases Review Commission in each of the last six years; how many of those have been reinvestigated and completed; and of those how many have (a) resulted in a decision not to refer and (b) been referred. [141817]

Paul Goggins: Data are available only for the last three complete years and there have been 25, 52 and 79 re-applications in each of these years. There have been 102 re-applications in the financial year to 30 November 2003.

One hundred and eighty-four of these re-applications have been completed; 176 of these upheld the original decision and eight re-applications have been referred to the appropriate court of appeal.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for review of alleged wrongful convictions in Northern Ireland have been received by the Criminal Cases Review Commission; and of those how many (a) were ruled ineligible, (b) were reviewed and a decision not to refer made and (c) were reviewed and referred. [141820]

Paul Goggins: The Commission has received a total of 93 applications from Northern Ireland, of which 15 are still open, 14 were closed as ineligible, 52 were closed with a decision not to refer and 12 were referred.

Criminal Justice System (Public Confidence)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of recent trends in public confidence in the criminal justice system in the Nottinghamshire Criminal Justice Board area; and if he will make a statement. [140597]

Paul Goggins: Responses to the British Crime Survey (BCS) on confidence in Nottinghamshire indicate that confidence in bringing offenders to justice has fallen from 36 per cent. in 2001/2002 to 28 per cent. in 2002–03.

Improving confidence in the Criminal Justice System is a key priority for both the National Criminal Justice Board and Local Criminal Justice Boards. Nottinghamshire and other Local Criminal Justice Boards have prepared action plans to address local confidence issues. These plans include actions to provide better services to victims and witness, to address the priorities of local communities and to improve communications with the public.

Identity Cards

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what period of time he proposes that identity cards should remain valid. [140510]

Beverley Hughes: We expect the validity period of the card to be 10 years.

However, in order to ensure that the cards, which incorporate technology features such as a microchip function, are reliable, it may be necessary to replace the cards after five years.

The costs estimates which my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary set out in Command Paper 6020 were based on the assumption that this automatic replacement card would be provided free of charge.

The scheme would also include an allowance for having a lifetime card validity period for those who have been in retirement for some time.

Foreign nationals coming to the United Kingdom for more than three months would be issued with a card valid for up to five years depending on the conditions of their clearance. For foreign nationals granted permanent residence the validity period for their cards would be on the same basis as that for British citizens.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost of introducing identity cards in the UK; and what assessment he has made of the likely benefits. [141327]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 8 December 2003]: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 11 November that the Government have decided to begin the process of introducing a national identity cards scheme following the consultation paper published in July 2002.

The Government are determined to ensure that the development of a national identity cards scheme is managed to the highest standards, and that the major business change and IT challenges which we face are dealt with effectively. A Programme Board has been established, chaired by the Home Office, to co-ordinate and drive forward the different elements of the identity cards scheme. Progress at every stage will be monitored and reviewed as further decisions are taken during the implementation. Before decisions are taken on implementation, there will be an intensive phase of feasibility assessment and prototyping so that decision making is soundly based and risks in the programme are kept to a minimum. Once the Office of Government Commerce (OGC) has confirmed that the programme is ready to proceed, by means of an OGC Gateway Zero review, we will publish draft legislation to enable the scheme to be introduced.

Set up costs for the first three years have been estimated at £186 million. Costs thereafter will be covered by charges. It would not be appropriate to publish more detailed information while we prepare options for procurement and implementation of the identity cards scheme. However, we are continuing to work with potential suppliers and partners to ensure estimates are accurate, realistic and deliverable.

An identity card scheme will provide a number of benefits including to help deter and prevent illegal immigration and illegal working and to combat identity fraud enhancing our capability to counter terrorism and serious and organised crime. Identity cards will make it easier to prove entitlement to public services and faster to prove one's own identity for public or private transactions, enabling individuals to assert their identity and that they belong here as well as protecting an individual's own identity from identity fraud.

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the public services for which devolved administrations have responsibility and which he envisages will be included in the compulsory card scheme. [141174]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 2 December 2003]: The powers and responsibilities of each devolved Administration are governed by the Acts of Parliament which established them and by any relevant Transfer of Functions Orders and post devolution Acts.

It is intended that the draft Identity Cards Bill will include enabling powers so that in the future access to specified public services could be linked to the production of a valid identity card. In the case of services for which the devolved Administrations are responsible, decisions on whether the identity card should be required for access to these services would be a matter for them.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason a single Minister has responsibility for immigration, asylum and terrorism and their implications for Government policy and strategy. [142903]

Beverley Hughes: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has overall responsibility for immigration, asylum and counter-terrorism issues as part of his ministerial portfolio. On these issues, I provide in-depth support and scrutiny.

All ministerial appointments are the responsibility of the Prime Minister.

Pornographic Websites

Charles Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what legal restrictions are in place to ensure that children under the age of 18 do not have access to pornographic internet sites. [140652]

Paul Goggins: The same legal restrictions apply to the publication of pornographic material on-line as they do off-line.

The Obscene Publications Act 1959 makes it an offence to publish any article which is considered to be obscene; that is, an article which, in the view of the court, tends to "deprave and corrupt" a person likely to see, hear or read it. The Act has been successfully applied to material published via the internet although enforcement is more difficult because the publisher or website operator is frequently based abroad and beyond UK jurisdiction. In addition, the taking, making, distribution, possession or publication of indecent photographs or pseudo photographs of children are all serious criminal offences.

Given the nature of the internet, we believe that it is not possible to prevent children under the age of 18 having access to pornographic internet websites by legislative means. However, there are ways of reducing the risk of children accessing such material by practical measures and raising awareness.

For example, a wide range of filtering software packages have been developed to enable schools and parents to restrict the types of websites to which their children have access. The Task Force on Child Protection on the internet, a multi-agency group which was established in March 2001, has set up a sub-group on rating and filtering, to consider how to evaluate and provide advice in the long term on filtering and other safety software products. The sub-group has made an initial report to the Task Force and will report again in due course.

At the beginning of the year, the Task Force published a single document covering separate models of good practice aimed at providers of chat services, instant messaging and web services, including providers of adult content. We consider that these models are a significant step forward in making the internet a safer place for children. As far as we know they are unique. They are voluntary but were presented to the industry with a strong recommendation that they be used. We are confident that they will be supported, by the major service providers represented on the Task Force and by the Internet Service Providers Association. The effectiveness of the models will be evaluated.

The Task Force has also run two successful public awareness campaigns highlighting both the huge benefits that the internet has to offer and the potential risks particularly to children of giving out personal information online.

The Government are determined to deal with paedophile activity vigorously, and in the Sexual Offences Act 2003 we have introduced, among other child protection measures, new offences relating to a person showing a child sexual material. Section 12 makes it an offence to cause a child, for the purpose of obtaining sexual gratification, to look at an image of a person engaging in sexual activity. It carries a maximum penalty on indictment of 10 years imprisonment.

Terrorism (Organised Crime)

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the relationship between drug crime, organised and international crime and terrorism; and what the implications are for Government policy and strategy. [142203]

Caroline Flint: We recognise that there are links between some of those involved in drugs and organised crime and terrorist groups. We have therefore introduced a range of powers to deal with this in the Terrorism Act 2000, the Anti-terrorism Crime and Security Act 2001 and the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002, and we continue to work closely with our international partners.

Timber

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what means the policy for purchasing timber and timber products of (a) the Home Office, (b) the Assets Recovery Agency, (c) the Criminal Records Bureau, (d) the Forensic Science Service, (e) HM Prison Service, (f) the UK Passport Service and (g) the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, ensures that they are obtained from legal and sustainable sources. [141335]

Fiona Mactaggart: A Timber Procurement Bulletin was sent to all Home Office Procurement Units, Agencies and Non-Departmental Public Bodies in June 2003. It is also available on the Home Office Intranet site. The Bulletin included model contract specification clause, promulgated by the Department for Environment, Farming, and Rural Affairs (DEFRA), together with background information and contact points for further information.

The Department, its Agencies and Non-Departmental Public Bodies have adopted the model contract clause for procuring timber and timber products to actively seek to purchase timber from legal and sustainable sources.

Victim Support

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to monitor discrepancies in referral rates to Victim Support by individual police forces. [140469]

Paul Goggins: The Home Office continues to monitor the effectiveness of the arrangements that already exist for the referral by police forces of victims to Victim Support at local level. Home Office guidance is available and there is a protocol in place between Victim Support and the Association of Chief Police Officers that sets out what information needs to be supplied. Provisions in the new Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Bill will, if enacted, assist with the process of data sharing between criminal justice agencies.

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to increase recruitment of volunteers for Victim Support, with particular reference to high crime areas. [140470]

Paul Goggins: Victim Support's 12,000 volunteers play a vital role in the delivery of support services to victims and witnesses of crime. As an independent voluntary organisation it is for Victim Support to decide the best approach to take in recruiting and deploying additional volunteers. The organisation has already put in place arrangements to improve its ability to do this. As part of its overall monitoring of Victim Support's work the Home Office will continue to discuss with Victim Support the availability of volunteers within the organisation, including those serving higher-crime areas.

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department expects to complete its strategy for increasing volunteering for Victim Support. [140471]

Paul Goggins: The Home Office values the work done by Victim Support's existing volunteers in delivering services to victims and witnesses of crime. As an independent voluntary organisation it is, of course, for Victim Support to determine how best to recruit and retain suitable volunteers to deliver its services. The organisation is currently updating its volunteer strategy and as part of our general monitoring of Victim Support's work we will be discussing this strategy with them. The Home Office is, of course, keen to encourage people to become more active in their communities and volunteering with Victim Support is one of the many ways in which they can do this.

HEALTH

Physical Activity Co-ordination Team

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the recommendations the Activity Co-ordination Team has made on a methodology to secure better evidence and data on participation; [140495]

(2) if he will list the (a) interventions and (b) pilot projects for which the Activity Co-ordination Team has provided funding; [140503]

(3) if he will list the recommendations the Activity Co-ordination Team has made to his policy of raising mass participation in sport and physical activity. [140505]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Activity Co-ordination Team (ACT) has been established by the Government to increase participation in physical activity and sport. The ACT is not a funding body, but in spring 2004, will provide Ministers with a delivery plan setting out recommendations to co-ordinate cross-Government initiatives to increase physical activity.

Copies of the terms of reference for the ACT are available in the Library.

Ankylosing Spondylitis

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has collated on the availability of licensed treatments for ankylosing spondylitis. [140487]

Ms Rosie Winterton: According to the records kept by the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) there are currently 426 marketing authorisations granted for the treatment of ankylosing spondylitis. Most contain Ibuprofen that is indicated for this condition.

There is also a European Marketing Authorisation for Infliximab (Remicade) granted by the European Medicines Evaluation Agency (EMEA). This is a prescription-only medicine.

Of these products, 389 are only available through the prescription of a registered doctor. Of the others, 21 are available by a prescription or a retail pharmacy, 14 are available by prescription, retail pharmacy or general retail outlet, one is only available through a retail pharmacy and one is available by a prescription or general retail outlet.

Breastfeeding

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that jars of babyfood are labelled such that breastfeeding is encouraged for six months rather than four. [142587]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Current European Commission legislation provides that weaning foods may be labelled as suitable for infants from four months of age. This is due to be reviewed in the new year in light of the World Health Assembly (WHA) Resolution 54.2 on Infant and Child Nutrition to strengthen activities and develop new approaches to protect, promote and support exclusive breastfeeding for six months. The Government supported the WHA resolution and will be supporting measures to achieve this including the appropriate labelling of weaning foods.

Care Homes

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the weekly amount paid towards (a) residential homes and (b) nursing homes was in each year since 1997, broken down by local authority. [142050]

Dr. Ladyman: This information is available covering the last three years at http://www.doh.gov.uk/public/pssstat.htm and in less detail but covering five years at http://www.doh.gov.uk/paf/.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the Department's staff by job title, broken down by board directorate. [141109]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested on job titles could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Total numbers of staff by payband in each of the Department's three new business groups is shown in the tables.

Strategy and business development group

	Number
Fast Stream	28.7
Payband 1	203.8

Maternal Deaths (Mifegyne)

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many female deaths in England and Wales have been attributable to the abortion pill RU486 since 1990. [141562]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There were eight maternal deaths associated with termination of pregnancy reported to the Confidential Enquiries into Maternal Deaths for the period 1991–99. None of these deaths were attributable to Mifegyne (also known as RU486). The data for 2000–02 are not yet available.

The Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA), which is responsible for medicines regulation in the United Kingdom, and the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) receive reports of suspected adverse drug reactions to medicinal products via the Yellow Card Scheme. Since marketing authorisation was first granted in 1991, the MHRA and CSM have received two reports of fatal suspected reactions in association with use of Mifegyne. However, the reporting of a suspected adverse drug reaction does not necessarily mean that the drug was responsible. Many factors, such as the medical condition that is being treated, other pre-existing illnesses or other medications might have contributed.

Flu Vaccine

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the take-up rates for influenza vaccine were at (a) 1 November and (b) 1 December, broken down by health authority. [142053]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Flu vaccination uptake rates for those aged 65 years and over at 1 November 2003 by strategic health authority are shown in the table.

Data for vaccine uptake rate as at 1 December is not yet available.

Strategic health authority	Percentage uptake November 2002

Genetically Modified Food

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what scientific advice he has received on whether children may be more susceptible to allergies and other diverse effects from eating GM food. [138818]

Miss Melanie Johnson: To date, the Food Standards Agency is not aware of any research that has been undertaken to determine if children are more susceptible to allergies and other possible effects from eating genetically modified food.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of research conducted worldwide into the effects on the health of children of consuming GM foods. [138819]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Food Standards Agency is not aware of any such research and has not therefore made an assessment. Each genetically modified (GM) food is only approved after a rigorous safety assessment, which is carried out on a case-by-case basis. GM foods have been consumed by millions of people in the United States over a number of years with no reports of adverse effects.

Group B Streptococcus

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on (a) the latest statistics for children born with Group B streptococcus infection and (b) his Department's current strategy for dealing with it; [140922]

(2) if he will make it his policy to offer all pregnant women a test for Group B streptococcus. [140923]

Dr. Ladyman: A 2001 UK surveillance study identified 376 cases of early onset group B streptococcus (GBS). Other studies have estimated that the prevalence ranges from 0.4/1,000 live births to 1.4/1,000 live births in England and Wales.

The current position is that routine screening for GBS should not be offered to all pregnant women.

The recently published National Institute for Clinical Excellence clinical guideline on antenatal care recommends that pregnant women should not be offered routine antenatal screening for GBS because evidence of its clinical effectiveness and cost-effectiveness remains uncertain.

The UK National Screening Committee (NSC) is currently reviewing the position and has commissioned an assessment of the existing evidence on screening for group B streptococcus in pregnancy against criteria used to assess potential screening programmes to ensure they do more good than harm. The NSC considered a preliminary report of a workshop at its meeting this month and will consider the full report at its meeting in March 2004.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it is his Department's policy to make screening for Group B streptococcus routinely available to pregnant women in the United Kingdom. [141251]

Cytology Services

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the recent trials of liquid-based cytology; and what the timescale is for introducing this method of cervical screening across the whole NHS. [142205]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence has appraised the use of liquid based cytology (LBC) and based on their recommendation we announced, on 22 October 2003, that LBC will be rolled out nationally across the national health service cervical screening programme.

We expect the roll out to take up to five years, due to the retraining of all laboratory staff who read cervical screening tests and all sample takers in primary care. Strategic health authorities have been issued with advice on how best they can roll out LBC for their local populations, laboratories and primary care.

Men's Health

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent by the National Health Service taking blood pressure and other health checks into the workplace to provide healthcare for hard to reach groups of men in the last year for which figures are available. [141653]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 4 December 2003]: The amount spent by the national health service from the devolved Department of Health budgets providing workplace health checks is not known centrally.

Mental Illness

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to (a) identify and (b) treat different classifications of mental illness in (i) women, (ii) people from black and ethnic minority groups and (iii) the general population in each Government Office of the Regions area. [141867]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information regarding the identification and treatment of mental disorder by gender and ethnicity in each locality is not available centrally.

The national service framework for mental health, published in September 1999, set out seven evidence-based national standards for mental health, designed to improve the quality of services for everyone with mental health needs, regardless of their gender or ethnicity.

The Government have established a new programme of work through the National Institute for Mental Health to support the development of services that ensure that individuals from black and minority ethnic communities are given fair and equitable treatment. In October, we also launched for consultation: "Delivering Race Equality: A Framework for Action". The consultation ends in January 2004 and full guidance will be issued thereafter.

The Government have also published this year guidance on Mainstreaming Gender and Women's Mental Health, available at www.nimhe.org.uk, which recommends ways to take action to mainstream gender and women's mental health. It will assist services in delivering gender sensitive and gender specific services.

NHS Dentistry

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists in the Hyndburn constituency (a) offer NHS treatment and (b) have vacancies for NHS patients. [140937]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is shown in the tables.

NHS Live 2004

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which Minister in his Department has responsibility for NHS Live 2004. [141569]

Ms Rosie Winterton: My right hon. Friend the Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Hutton), the Minister of State, Department of Health, has responsibility for NHS Live 2004.

Pharmaceutical Trade

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what inspection mechanisms are in place in the United Kingdom for short line wholesalers in the parallel pharmaceutical trade. [141700]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Short line wholesalers distribute a limited range of medicinal products and often specialise in parallel traded pharmaceuticals known as "parallel imports". They are licensed by the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) and are inspected for compliance with good distribution practice at regular intervals.

Wholesalers who assemble parallel imported products are also required to hold assembly licences granted by the MHRA and are inspected for compliance with good manufacturing practice at regular intervals.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had from, and what discussions he has had with, patients' groups concerning the repackaging of medicines from the parallel trade in pharmaceutical products. [141701]

Miss Melanie Johnson: To date, the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) has not received any representations from, nor had any discussions with, patient groups about the repackaging of medicines from the parallel trade in pharmaceuticals.

The MHRA has received some letters from patients, patient carers and health professionals on this matter. In these cases the product labelling has been reviewed and, where appropriate, the parallel importer asked to address the concerns raised.

In licensing parallel imports, the MHRA ensures the products comply with the appropriate regulations.

Dr. Jenny Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent action he has taken to maintain safeguards for patients taking medicines emanating from short line wholesalers. [142200]

Ms Rosie Winterton: In order to assure the quality of medicines stored and distributed by wholesalers and safeguard patients, the Inspection and Enforcement Division of the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency (MHRA), on behalf of the Secretary of State for Health, licences all pharmaceutical wholesalers in the United Kingdom and inspects their premises and procedures for compliance with good distribution practice.

The same standards of licensing and inspection are applied to full-line wholesalers, who deal in the full range of medicinal products available in the United Kingdom and short-line wholesalers, who deal in a more limited range of products. MHRA inspectors in the financial year 2003–04 have, to date, inspected over 250 wholesale sites. The inspections have confirmed compliance by these wholesalers with good distribution practice. There has been no recent necessity for additional action to maintain the safeguards to patients taking medicines emanating from short-line, or full-line wholesalers.

Research

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that all public funded research is recorded and made freely available to (a) patients, (b) health professionals, (c) the public and (d) members of the scientific community. [142505]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 8 September 2003, Official Report, column 256W.

Stroke

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a specialist stroke service will be established in Leeds; and whether it will include (a) a rapid access neurovascular clinic, (b) an acute stroke unit, (c) a stroke rehabilitation unit and (d) community rehabilitation, including (i) voluntary support groups and (ii) intermediate care, (e) specialist community stroke teams and (f) stroke clubs. [143180]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 9 December 2003]: A specialist stroke unit will be fully established in Leeds by April 2004. It will include all the elements outlined in the question, many of which already exist in the city, with the exception of specialist community stroke teams, which will initially be on a pilot basis.

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many stroke patients were treated in Leeds in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [143181]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 9 December 2003]: The information requested is shown in the table.

	Admissions
1998–99	1,469
1999–2000	1,303
2000–01	1,242
2001–02	1,962
2002–03	2,468

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in Leeds died from strokes in the last five years for which figures are available. [143182]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 9 December 2003]: The information requested is shown in the table.

Deaths from strokes[1], Leeds[2] 1998 to 2002[3]

	Number
1998	759
1999	721
2000	663
2002[4]	783

[1] Strokes defined as deaths with an underlying cause of cerebrovascular disease. These were defined using the International Classification of Diseases, Ninth Revision (ICD-9) codes 430–438 for the years 1998 to 2000 and, for the years 2001 and 2002, the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision (ICD-10) codes 160–169.

[2] Deaths of usual residents of Leeds local authority.

[4] The introduction of ICD-10 for coding cause of death in 2001 means that data for strokes in this year and 2002 are not comparable with data for earlier years. The interpretation of international coding rules in ICD-10, compared with the rules used in ICD-9, has led to an apparent increase in the number of deaths coded to strokes of 13 per cent. for males and 9 per cent. for females. The figures should therefore be interpreted with caution. The effect of the major changes to mortality statistics in ICD-10 compared with ICD-9 were described in a report published in May 2002.[*]

Therapeutic Cloning

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the safety of therapeutic cloning. [141564]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA) has not yet issued any licence for human therapeutic cloning research.

One of the aims of therapeutic cloning research will be to explore new means of deriving stem cells and tissues which may, in future, be used in treatment of serious disease. As with any cell or tissue based therapy, they will undergo comprehensive assessment of safety.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made towards the creation of a central register for cases of work-related stress in the Department. [141693]

Ms Rosie Winterton: While the Department collects data on sickness absence, which includes stress as a master code description, it is not possible to identify whether the cause of stress-related illness or anxiety was work related. It is not possible, therefore, for the Department to create a central register for cases of work-related stress.

The Department has a number of procedures in place to help managers and staff to be aware of and to reduce work-related stress.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Olympic Bid

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans she has to liaise with the owners of the Dome about its possible use as an Olympic venue to assist the bid to host the Olympics in 2012. [143278]

Tessa Jowell: Selecting potential Olympic venues and negotiating the terms of their use is a matter for the Olympic bid company, London 2012 Ltd. I understand that the potential owners of the Dome, the Anschutz Entertainment Group, are already engaged in discussions with London 2012 Ltd.

Sport England

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she will publish the Quinquennial Review of Sport England. [142859]

Mr. Caborn: Stage One of the Quinquennial Review of Sport England was published and laid before the House in July 2001, and performed a useful service in demonstrating the need for the re-organisation of Sport England's funding and other activities.

It was intended that Stage Two of the Review should include detailed re-organisation proposals. Such proposals were at an advanced stage of preparation when my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit commenced its review of sports policy in the spring of 2002. The Strategy Unit's proposals for the re-organisation of Sport England formed a major part of its wider recommendations for the future of sports policy, published as Game Plan in December 2002. They continue to inform the major Sport England reform programme which is now underway, and this programme should be seen as having superseded the proposals which were under discussion during Stage Two of the Quinquennial Review.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Racism

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at what level the Government will be represented at the UN High Commissioner on Human Rights-convened regional seminar of experts for Western States, Implementing the Durban Programme of Action, from 10 to 12 December. [142187]

Mr. Rammell: The Government will be represented by one official from the Race Equality Unit in the Home Office and one from the Human Rights Policy Department in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. These were the two departments that led on the government's preparations for the 2001 World Conference Against Racism.

Afghanistan

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his calculation is of the total opium crop in Afghanistan in each year from 1999 to the present; and what changes have taken place in the amount of land devoted to poppy cultivation since the end of hostilities in 2001. [142865]

Mr. Rammell: The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) conducts an annual survey into the level of opium poppy cultivation and production in Afghanistan. It has reported levels over the past five years as follows:

Year	Hectares	Tonnes
1999	91,000	4,600
2000	82,000	3,300
2001	8,000	185
2002	74,000	3,400

The low level of cultivation and low production figure in 2001 reflect the Taliban ban on opium cultivation; the ban did not however address the underlying causes of poppy cultivation in Afghanistan and was enforced with mix of threat and bribery.

The UNODC poppy cultivation survey in 2003 has shown reductions in the traditional areas, compared to 2002, but new cultivation in some areas that have not previously been involved in poppy production. The reduction in the traditional areas demonstrates that drug control policy has been effective where the Afghan Government has been able to exert control. Production also tends to move from traditional areas to more marginal and inaccessible areas to protect crops against law enforcement activity. Increasing security and stability in Afghanistan remains key to progress in reducing opium production.

Arms Trade

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to promote an international arms trade treaty; and if he will make a statement. [142969]

Mr. MacShane: I refer my hon. friend to the previous answer I gave the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 23 October 2003, Official Report column 654W.

Colombia

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reasons were given by the Colombian Government for the rates of voter abstention in (a) the Colombian referendum and (b) the municipal and departmental elections of 25 and 26 October. [143186]

Mr. Rammell: The abstention rate for the Referendum was high with participation at only 20.04 per cent. Our assessment, based on discussion with Colombian election officials and international observers, is that the security situation played its part, particularly in the more remote and more conflict-ridden areas of Colombia, where despite a state security presence the participation rate was below national average. The complexity of the questions on which citizens were being asked to vote also caused a reluctance to vote.

The elections had a better turnout of 50.49 per cent. This was about average for Colombian elections. The turnout for the Congressional elections and Presidential elections in 2002 were 42 per cent. and 50 per cent. respectively.

Foreign Office Staff (School Places)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what proportion of the money his Department spent on school places for children of Foreign Office personnel was spent on the independent sector in each year since 1996; and what he estimates the proportion will be in 2003; [140561]

(2) what the average cost to his Department was of the school places provided for the children of Foreign Office personnel in independent and private schools in each year since 1996. [140562]

Mr. Rammell: Education expenditure for children of Foreign Office personnel since 1996 has been spent almost entirely on fee-charging schools in the private and independent sector. Less than 1 per cent. in each year is spent on boarding fees for state run boarding schools.

We do not distinguish between private and independent schools. The annual expenditure on education for children of FCO personnel since 1996 is as follows.

Financial year	£
1995–96	10,569,861
1996–97	11,669,734
1997–98	10,547,169
1998–99	10,477,132
1999–2000	12,114,888
2000–01	12,944,790
2001–02	13,806,197
2002–03	15,990,618

Gulf War

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the oil-for-food income was allocated to Gulf War reparations through the UN administered Compensation Fund; what amount in pounds sterling that percentage represented from (a) December 1996 to December 2000 and (b) December 2000 to 21 November 2003; and what the amount paid by Iraq in reparations was prior to December 1996. [141116]

Mr. Mullin: When the "oil-for-food" scheme was launched in December 1996, the United Nations Compensation Commission (UNCC) received 30 per cent. of the proceeds of Iraq's oil sales, allowing it to make regular compensation payments to successful claimants. This percentage was reduced to 25 per cent. pursuant to Security Council resolution 1330 (2000). On 22 May 2003 the Security Council adopted resolution 1483 (2003), which reduced the percentage of revenue from Iraqi oil sales to be paid into the Compensation Fund to 5 per cent. The total amount paid in compensation to victims of Iraq's invasion and occupation of Kuwait to date is over US$17.5 billion. The figures in pounds sterling are not readily available, nor is a breakdown of the amounts paid between the dates stated.

Bribery/Corruption

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice has been given and on what dates to UK embassies, high commissions and other diplomatic posts abroad about the need to report information about possible cases of international bribery and corruption by UK citizens and companies; which posts have reported cases; on how many occasions; and how many of those reports have been followed up by investigations by UK law enforcement agencies. [141108]

Mr. MacShane: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Ceredigion (Simon Thomas) on 15 and 28 October respectively, Official Report, columns 264W and 181W. The guidance telegrams referred to there were issued in January 2002, February 2002 and March 2003. We cannot comment on individual reports received in order not to prejudice criminal investigations.

Liberia

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the status of Liberia's membership of the International Monetary Fund. [142781]

Mr. Mullin: Liberia is a member of the International Monetary Fund (IMF). But on 5 March 2003 the IMF suspended Liberia's voting rights. Liberia was not sufficiently servicing its significant arrears and failed to address key concerns adequately, including improving transparency and management of revenue and government expenditure, addressing human rights violations and regional interference.

Now Liberia is under new leadership we are working with key partners, including the IMF and World Bank, to help redevelop Liberia and restore its relations with the international donor community. We understand that the IMF will visit Liberia for discussions with the National Transitional Government.

North Korea

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role the UK Government is playing in the six-party talks about the future of North Korea. [142204]

Mr. Rammell: The Government has no direct involvement in the six party talks process. We follow developments closely as a permanent member of the UN Security Council, as a Depositary State of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, and as a member of the European Union. We are also in direct and regular contact with all the parties involved in the six party talks process, including the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Sri Lanka on the subject of religious tolerance for Christians. [142257]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 12 November 2003, Official Report, columns 361–62W. Officials from the British High Commission in Colombo regularly raise this and other human rights issues with the authorities—most recently with the Sri Lankan Ministry of Christian Affairs. However, I have not had discussions with the Government of Sri Lanka specifically on the subject of religious tolerance for Christians in Sri Lanka.

Sudan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the peace talks in the Sudan, with specific reference to the situation in Darfur. [142308]

Mr. Mullin: We are optimistic about the prospects for peace between the Government of Sudan and the Sudanese People's Liberation Movement. Much progress has been made since the Inter-Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) sponsored talks re-started in June 2002. Agreement has been reached on the key issues of self-determination for the south and the application of Sharia law. A Memorandum of Understanding on a cessation of hostilities for the duration of the peace talks was signed in October 2002, and a monitoring mechanism established. Most recently, on 25 September 2003, a framework agreement on security arrangements during the interim period was reached.

The talks, adjourned for Ramadan, re-started in Naivasha on 1 December. Various issues still need to be resolved, notably power and wealth sharing arrangements and the three conflict areas (of Southern Blue Nile, the Nuba Mountains and Abyei). But we are hopeful that the parties will reach agreement this year or early next. We continue to offer the parties and mediators our full support and advice and remain actively involved in helping them reach a comprehensive peace agreement.

We remain concerned about the situation in Darfur. I discussed the matter with the Sudanese Ambassador on 2 December. We are pressing the Government of Sudan to ensure unrestricted humanitarian access to Darfur. This would allow a fuller assessment of the situation and enable relief agencies to provide support to the most vulnerable. And we are urging all parties to engage constructively in the Abeche peace talks. All sides should know from bitter experience that a military solution is not in prospect, and that peace and reconciliation offer the only real chance of a brighter future.

Terrorism

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom nationals were killed in terrorist attacks between (a) 1 June 2002 and 28 February 2003 and (b) 1 March 2003 and 26 November; and if he will make statement. [140774]

Mr. MacShane: In the period from 1 June 2002 to 28 February 2003, 29 British nationals were victims of terrorism perpetrated by international terrorists: 28 British nationals in Bali and one British national in Riyadh. Between 1 March 2003 to 26 November 2003, 2 British nationals were killed in a bomb attack in Riyadh and 3 British nationals were killed in the bombing of the British Consulate General in Istanbul. These figures do not include British personnel killed in Iraq. We believe that international terrorists have been involved in some terrorist attacks in Iraq.

Overseas Posts (Security)

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to improve security at British high commissions and embassies following the recent terrorist attacks in Turkey. [142670]

Mr. Rammell: We keep the security of all our posts under constant review. Immediately after the attack in Istanbul, all Diplomatic Missions were instructed to review their security urgently and, where appropriate, implement security enhancements. In addition, those Missions with a high level of threat sought additional protection from the host government.

We are now carrying out a detailed assessment of the security of all Missions to identify what more might be done to enhance their security, against terrorist attack in particular

Western Sahara

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss the revised Baker Plan for the western Sahara with the US Secretary of State following his return from his visit to Morocco. [142258]

Mr. Rammell: None. However, we remain in regular contact with members of the United Nations Security Council at all levels on the western Sahara issue.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Government policy is on the dispute between the Moroccan Government and the non-governmental group Polisario. [142277]

Mr. Rammell: The United Kingdom supports fully the efforts of the United Nations Security General and his personal envoy, James Baker III, to find a just, lasting and mutually acceptable solution to the western Sahara dispute that provides for self-determination for the people of western Sahara.

TRANSPORT

Road Traffic Management

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to require the extension of public consultation procedures when road traffic management procedures are proposed by local authorities. [142981]

Mr. McNulty: Where traffic management schemes require traffic regulation orders under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 the Local Authorities' Traffic Orders (Procedure) (England and Wales) Regulations 1996 (SI 1996/2489) apply to the making of such orders. Regulation 6 sets out who an order making authority should consult in particular cases. Otherwise it is a matter for authorities as democratically elected bodies to decide whom to consult in taking schemes forward. We have no current plans to amend the 1996 procedure regulations.

Bicycle Rickshaws

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the safety rules governing the use of bicycle rickshaws used on public roads; how many bicycle rickshaws are in use in London; what licensing and insurance rules exist to enable bicycle rickshaws to carry passengers; and what safeguards exist for the general public who hail bicycle rickshaws. [142899]

Mr. Darling: Bicycle rickshaws or pedicabs must comply with the Highway Code, road traffic laws, construction and use and road vehicle lighting regulations. We believe these are sufficient as principal measures for safeguarding public safety. Licensing of pedicabs to carry passengers is the responsibility of Transport for London, who we understand are looking at the issue. The numbers of pedicabs used in London is unknown.

Bingley Relief Road

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when the Bingley Relief Road is due to be (a) completed and (b) opened; [140926]

(2) whether a Government Minister will attend the opening of the Bingley Relief Road. [141105]

Mr. Jamieson: The A650 Bingley Relief Road will open to traffic at the earliest opportunity after construction is completed and the necessary safety checks have been undertaken. I expect that the scheme should be ready to open to traffic late December/early January. Arrangements are being made for a Minister to officially dedicate the road early in the new year.

Congestion Charging

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which areas (a) have and (b) intend to have a congestion charging system. [142928]

Mr. McNulty: London and Durham have road user charging schemes. Nottingham City Council is developing a work place parking levy scheme and Derbyshire County Council is looking at the options for a road user charging scheme at the Ladybower reservoir in the Peak District National Park. Although a number of other authorities have expressed interest, none has firmly committed to the development of a scheme.

M25

Mr. Mackay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the cost was of repairs and maintenance to (a) steel barrier systems and (b) concrete barrier systems on the M25 for the last five years for which figures are available. [142760]

Dr. Howells: On the basis of information since September 2001 the figures available for the cost of repairs to the steel barriers on the M25 are:

Cost of repairs

September 2001—August 2002	2,248
September 2002—August 2003	3,302
September 2003—To date	479,000

There is an annual budget of £94,000 for maintenance of steel barriers. Most repairs to the barriers are due to accident damage and where possible, costs are recovered from the drivers that are responsible for an accident.

The concrete barriers on the M25 are designed to be maintenance free after their initial construction. There have been no major repairs required in this period due to accidents.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in the last full year for which figures are available the DVLA initiated court proceedings against people who were believed not have paid vehicle excise duty; on how many occasions the DVLA (a) withdrew proceedings and (b) lost a case in court because the vehicle keeper showed that he or she had paid VED; how much the DVLA estimates such proceedings cost the taxpayer; what steps the DVLA will take to improve its administration procedures to avoid the commencement of this type of unnecessary proceedings; and if he will make a statement. [140883]

Mr. Jamieson: During the year 2002–03, a total of 231,149 prosecutions were taken by DVLA against people who were believed not to have paid vehicle excise duty.

Proceedings were withdrawn on 18,255 occasions and 1,303 cases were unsuccessful at court. Cases are withdrawn for a variety of reasons, but less than 1 per cent. are as a result of a licence being in force at the time.

DVLA estimates that the cost of taking each case to court is £45 and requests this amount at every successful prosecution. Last year the agency was awarded £9.4 million in costs by the courts.

DVLA already takes every opportunity to avoid unnecessary court action. In most cases of alleged unlicensed use of a vehicle, a letter is sent to the registered keeper offering to settle the matter out of court. This also provides the opportunity to produce evidence that vehicle excise duty has already been paid. In addition, procedures have recently been introduced to barcode the licensing transaction at Post Offices. This allows DVLA's records to be updated within three days of the application, thus reducing the risk of inappropriate enforcement action.

Driving Assessments

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to include all test centres run by the Driving Standards Agency among the places at which driving assessments recommended by the Medical Adviser to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency can be carried out. [143274]

Mr. Jamieson: DVLA's Medical Advisers do on occasions ask drivers to undergo driving assessments in order to help determine their fitness to drive. Referrals are only made to driving assessment centres which are members of the Forum of Disabled Drivers Assessment and Mobility Centres. Such Centres are experienced at assessing drivers with medical conditions and specifically assess the impact of medical conditions upon driving behaviour and whether performance can be enhanced by either tuition or vehicle modification. For these reasons, DVLA prefers to use disability assessment centres rather than ask individuals to take a standard 'pass or fail' driving test. However, if an individual has particular problems in attending at an assessment centre, the Agency is able to refer the individual for a formal driving test with the Driving Standards Agency.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the places where driving assessments recommended by the Medical Adviser to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency can be carried out. [143275]

Mr. Jamieson: A list of the driving assessment centres can be found at pages 37 and 38 of the Agency's booklet "At a Glance Guide to the current Medical Standards of Fitness to Drive". I am arranging for copies of the booklet to be placed in the Libraries of the House. This document is also available on the internet at: www.dvla.gov.uk/drivers/dmedl.htm.

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is the policy of his Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on Departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142807]

Mr. McNulty: The Department's catering contracts have required provision of Fair-Trade beverages since 1999. Fair-Trade tea and coffee is available for staff to purchase from the staff restaurant or to choose when providing hospitality catering for receptions and meetings.

Haymarket Station, Edinburgh

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he had with (a) the Scottish Executive, (b) Network Rail and (c) others regarding lift facilities at Haymarket railway station in Edinburgh. [142619]

Mr. McNulty: Subject to the availability of funding, the SRA is considering how best to prioritise a programme of works to meet the accessibility requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act and will be consulting on draft criteria next year. Stations that have high usage, such as Haymarket, are likely to be given priority.

Light Dues

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the results of the Light Dues Review: Meeting the Costs of Marine Aids to Navigation consultation published in May 2002; and if he will publish the responses received. [142527]

Mr. Jamieson: In March, in my annual statement on the level of light dues rates, I announced a programme of work to investigate issues raised within the review. We do not intend to publish a separate Government statement to the consultation paper 'Light dues Review: Meeting the Costs of Marine Aids to Navigation'.

The responses received to the consultation paper will be published on the Department's website following the completion of the Study of the Economic Impact of Light Dues.

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the results of the economic review of light dues. [142528]

Mr. Jamieson: The report on the Study of the Economic Effect of Light Dues will be published as soon as possible following completion of the study, expected in the new year. It will be made available in hard copy and on the Department's website.

Taxis

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake a study of (a) the provision of taxi plates by local authorities outside London, (b) the availability of taxi services and (c) the speed of services to the public provided by extended granting of licences; and if he will make a statement on the report by the Office of Fair Trading on the licensed taxi industry. [142900]

Mr. Darling: We are currently considering the taxi and private hire vehicle market study report published on 11 November by the Office of Fair Trading, which was based on a range of research. We are now consulting principal stakeholders and are committed to responding to the recommendations within 120 days of the report's publication.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Home Energy Efficiency

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the companies used to supply equipment to homes under the Warm Front initiative; and if she will make a statement. [141940]

Mr. Bradshaw: Following a competitive procurement process in 2000 two companies were appointed to supply heating materials for the Warm Front scheme. Those companies are Plumb Centre and Newey and Eyre.

Air Pollution

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average air quality levels were in England in each year between 1985 and 1995. [136781]

Mr. Bradshaw: Comprehensive information on concentrations of air pollutants in England between 1985 and 1995 is available from the Air Quality Archive at www.airquality.co.uk. The following table shows, for urban and rural air monitoring site sin England, the average number of days for the years between 1985 and 1995 on which levels of any one of a basket of five pollutants (carbon monoxide, nitrogen dioxide, ozone, fine particles and sulphur dioxide) were 'moderate or higher' according to the Air Pollution Information Service bandings. These data are the headline air quality indicator, one of 15 headline indicators of sustainable development.

Data are missing for some years because there were, at that time, not enough air monitoring sites operating to provide data on all pollutants. Data for 2002 for England are available at www.sustainable-development.gov.uk/indicators/regional/2002/h10.htm and for 1987–2003 for the UK at http://www.defra.gov.uk./news/2003/030508a.htm.

When the indicator was established in 1998, the back time series was constructed from results from an increasing set of monitoring sites as the network (particularly the urban network) was developed. Research demonstrated that the increasing number of sites used in the indicator in fact had little effect on the overall trend produced. However, caution should be taken when comparing data for the early years of the urban network, as the number of sites was much lower than present that could have resulted in a lower number of exceedences being detected. The number of urban sites increased from three in 1992 to 35–40 from 1998 onwards, while the number of rural sites has remained fairly constant since it started.

The table also shows average concentrations of black smoke and sulphur dioxide (SO_2) in the UK between 1985 and 1995. These two combustion-generated pollutants are also a good indicator of average air quality for the years in question.

There is no clear trend in the average number of days of 'moderate' or 'higher' air pollution between 1985 and 1995. There is annual variability due mainly to differences in weather conditions from year to year. Data since 1995 show a long-term improvement in the number of days of 'moderate' or 'higher' air pollution as a result mainly of reduced emissions from road vehicles, electricity production and industry. There is an improving trend in average UK concentrations of black smoke and sulphur dioxide between 1985 and 1995, which have almost halved.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total amount of recognised carcinogens released to the air was (a) in England and (b) broken down by Government region in each year since 1997. [139191]

Mr. Bradshaw: The National Atmospheric Emission Inventory (available on-line http://www.naei.org.uk/) compiles annual air pollutant emissions for the United Kingdom. The most recent year for which emissions have been calculated is 2001. Emissions of four known or probable human carcinogens are calculated: benzene, 1,3-butadiene, benzo[a]pyrene and dioxins. Table 1 shows the national annual emissions since 1997 taken from the National Atmospheric Emission Inventory.

Emissions are generally calculated using statistics that are available on a national scale (e.g. fuel use). Inventory experts are gathering the regional information in order to undertake the complex process of calculating regional totals. So far, emissions for England have been calculated for 2001, but emissions for each Government region are not yet available.

Table 1: UK emissions 1997 to 2001

	Units	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
Benzene	kt	35.8	31.7	28.7	15.7	15.4
1,3-Butadiene	kt	7.3	6.4	5.9	5.1	4.5
BaP	t	11.2	9.7	8.6	6.7	7.2
Dioxins	gTEQ	471	411	395	346	341

Table 2: England emissions for 2001

	Units	2001
Benzene	kt	11.8
1,3-Butadiene	kt	3.7
BaP	t	6.1
Dioxins	gTEQ	272

Notes:

1. BaP = benzo[a]pyrene (a carcinogen in its own right and a marker for carcinogenic polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons in ambient air;
2. The term dioxin refers to a range of polychlorinated dibenzo-p-dioxin and polychlorinated dibenzofuran compounds. The emissions of dioxins are presented in terms of the sum of the weighted emissions expressed as gTEQs. TEQs weight the toxicity of the less toxic congeners as fractions of the toxicity of 2,3,7,8-TCDD, the most toxic congener.

Badgers/Bovine TB

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans the Department has to evaluate the impact on efficacy of culling of the use of anaesthesia in badger setts prior to lethal gassing. [141081]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Department has no plans to evaluate the impact on efficacy of culling of the use of anaesthesia in badger setts prior to lethal gassing. The gassing of badgers has been discounted as a culling option because it is considered to be inhumane.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs for how long mycobacterium bovis bacilli can survive in badger setts. [141394]

Mr. Bradshaw: It is not known precisely how long M. bovis (the causative organism of bovine tuberculosis) may survive in badger setts. The organism is killed by exposure to ultra violet light and extremes of temperature and humidity, as well as the growth of other bacteria and fungi. The lack of light and relatively constant temperature and humidity conditions found inside a badger sett would favour the survival of M. bovis.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what predictions were made, in explanatory material made available to farmers by her Department as to the percentage of badgers which were to be killed by culling teams engaged in the Krebs trials. [141993]

Mr. Bradshaw: In their first report, the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB, reported that informal estimates suggested a capture rate of up to 80 per cent. could be expected using cage traps alone. Information made available to farmers by leaflet, refers to "Proactive culling as many badgers as possible from a whole area (about 80 per cent.)" based, in part, on post-culling assessments of trapping efficiency. These assessments were based on field signs and are therefore largely subjective. They are, however, carried out by experienced personnel and give a useful indication of the extent of badger population reduction in proactively culled areas.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what information she has collated on whether significant damage is caused by badgers to ground nesting birds. [142460]

Mr. Bradshaw: Badgers are known to predate on ground nesting birds, although such predation is likely to be largely opportunistic. The impact of badger predation on bird populations has not been specifically quantified, but is not thought to significantly affect populations nationally. Locally, however, the situation may be different.

Bird remains are typically found in about 7.5 per cent. of badger dung in the U.K., and diet studies confirm that badgers eat eggs, nestlings and adult birds. These studies are unable to distinguish between scavenged and killed birds, and do not quantify the importance of birds in the badger diet.

Defra is currently funding research aimed at providing a scientifically vigorous assessment of the importance of badger predation for ground nesting birds. The project involves a review of current knowledge and intensive field investigations to assess to extent of predation by badgers. The project, which is being undertaken by the Central Science Laboratory, will report its findings in March 2005.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the welfare implications are for badgers infected with TB; at what stage in the disease they suffer; and how long that suffering can last. [142461]

Mr. Bradshaw: In a study by the Central Science Laboratory and Veterinary Laboratories Agency, TB as a cause of death accounted for less than 7 per cent. of badgers found dead. It is difficult to make objective assessment of whether these animals suffer. Typically, individuals may live for many months or even years while infected, showing no overt signs of clinical illness and maintaining normal body weights. Infected female badgers often give birth and successfully rear litters. However, post mortem findings where advanced pathological changes have occurred, particularly in the lungs, indicate that during the final stages of disease there would undoubtedly be an effect on the quality of life of such an animal. This stage is thought to last for a few weeks at most.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many times in each of the reactive areas of the randomised badger culling trials badger clearances were carried out. [142463]

Mr. Bradshaw: For each of the 10 reactive treatment areas the number of individual clearance operations is detailed in the following table.

Reactive trial area	Number of reactive operations completed[1]
A1	10
B1	10
C1	20
D1	4
E1	[2]10
F3	10
G1	7

[1] Individual reactive operations vary in the extent of the geographical area involved and the number of herd notifications for reactive culling included

[2] Includes an operation halfway through the culling period at the time of suspension of reactive culling on 4 November 2003.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on (a) the adequacy of the resources allocated to the reactive cull component of the Government's randomised badger culling trials and (b) the adequacy of the number of personnel allocated, with particular reference to clerical personnel with sufficient skills, training and experience. [142464]

Mr. Bradshaw: The information requested is as follows.

(a) It has at times been difficult for MAFF/Defra to carry out reactive culling in response to a herd breakdown as quickly as the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB (ISG) anticipated its First Report. Resource limitations, including difficulties inherent in the recruitment and retention of appropriately skilled staff, have played a part. Difficulties became apparent in 2002 when, in effect, the impact of the suspension of TB testing in 2001 due to foot and mouth disease meant that two years1 worth of breakdown notifications required reactive culling, alongside the servicing of culling in the proactive areas. Defra has worked hard since FMD to meet the ISG's expectations both in terms of the time between breakdown and culling, and the number of operations completed. The ISG has helped by making some pragmatic decisions by assisting with priorities and by setting realistic, yet challenging, targets which Defra has either met or exceeded.

(b) It is considered that the level of clerical or administrative support has been adequate and not had any a diverse impact on the fieldwork for the Randomised Badger Culling Trial.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how long a reactive culling area must be maintained for statistically valid data to be obtained from the trial in that area. [142465]

Mr. Bradshaw: As set out in the Second Report of the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB (ISO), the design of the trial is based on accumulating a maximum of 50 triplet years of data to provide a probability exceeding 90 per cent. of detecting a 20 per cent. effect. The ISO committed itself at the outset, to carry out an initial analysis of the data once 100 new breakdowns had been accumulated in trial areas, and to repeat the analysis at six-month intervals.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many reactive culling areas were designated during the randomised badger culling trials; and what the dates were on which the trials commenced in each area. [142466]

Mr. Bradshaw: Within each of the 10 reactive treatment areas the number of individual culling areas varies from 0 to 20. I attach a table that presents the requested data clearly.

Reactive Trial Area	Number of reactive operations completed[1]	Date of Field Operations[2]
A1	10	3 July 2000
B1	10	24 May 1999
C1	20	15 May 2000

[2] Date that traps are first set to catch badgers

[3] Includes an operation halfway through the culling period at the time of suspension of reactive culling on 4 November 2003

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what concerns Professor Bourne has raised with her on the effect of delays in obtaining culture test results for bovine samples on management of the randomised badger culling trials. [142337]

Mr. Bradshaw: Professor Bourne wrote to the then Parliamentary Secretary (Commons), Mr. Morley, on 9 May 2003 enclosing a number of reports including one reviewing the implementation of the reactive strategy in the randomised badger culling trial. This pointed out that clearance of the TB testing backlog, caused by the suspension of testing during the 2001 foot and mouth disease outbreak, had overwhelmed culture facilities and contributed to delays in the notification of TB herd breakdowns that triggered reactive culling operations. The paper brought the concerns of the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB to the Minister's attention but concentrated on advising the Department on what it could do to improve notification and reactive response times.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the projected expenditure is by her Department for the next five years on developing vaccines for protecting (a) bovine animals and (b) badgers against TB infection. [141967]

Mr. Bradshaw: The content and funding for the future TB research programme is currently under discussion within the Department and is taking account of external scientific advice. TB vaccine development is likely to form an increasingly important part of the research programme.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total expenditure since 1973 by her Department and its predecessors has been on developing vaccines for protecting (a) bovine animals and (b) badgers against TB infection. [141977]

Mr. Bradshaw: Work on vaccinating badgers against TB was carried out by MAFF from 1983 to 1990, but the figures for expenditure at that time are not available.

Much of the development work involves developing candidate vaccines. This work applies equally to vaccines for cattle and badgers so the figures do not differentiate between the two species.

The major effort on TB vaccine research, in relation to cattle and badgers, started in 1998, subsequent to the Krebs Report on Bovine Tuberculosis in Cattle and Badgers. The following table shows vaccine related research costs for the financial years 1998–99 to date.

Financial Year	Vaccine related research cost
1998–99	825,942
1999–2000	1,352,204
2000–01	1,415,287
2001–02	1,505,887
2002–03	1,495,314
2003–04	1,618,819

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions her Department has had with pharmaceutical companies on the Government's efforts to identify a candidate vaccine for bovine TB. [140840]

Mr. Bradshaw: There was input from the pharmaceutical industry into Defra's Chief Veterinary Officer's TB vaccine steering group and the Independent Scientific Group's Vaccine Scoping Study Sub-Committee, whose report is to be published shortly. Officials are also engaged with representatives of the animal medicine industry to discuss possibilities for Government/industry partnerships.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many bovine animals were compulsorily purchased and slaughtered as a result of TB infection between 1994 and 1998. [142456]

Mr. Bradshaw: The number of cattle slaughtered in Great Britain as a result of TB infection between 1994 and 1998 is set out in the following table:

	Cattle slaughtered[1]
1994	2,773
1995	3,451
1996	3,881
1997	3,760
1998	6,083
Total	19,948

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many bovine animals have been compulsorily purchased and slaughtered as a result of TB infection since 1998. [142458]

Mr. Bradshaw: The number of cattle slaughtered in Great Britain as a result of TB infection between 1999 and 2002 is set out in the following table:

	Cattle slaughtered[1]
1999	6,772
2000	8,353
2001	5,916
2002	[2]22,886

[1] TB Reactors plus dangerous contacts. Source: The Report of the Chief Veterinary Officer—Animal Health 2002

[2] In 2001, the TB testing and control programme was largely suspended due to the foot and mouth disease (FMD) outbreak. Since testing resumed in 2002, resources have been concentrated on herds with overdue TB tests which would have had a longer period in which to contract the disease. Also the proportion of high risk herds being tested post-FMD is greater than that prior to the outbreak. As a result, the number of TB reactors identified and slaughtered in 2002 is not comparable to those identified and slaughtered in previous years.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on her recent decision to end badger culling as a means of countering TB in cattle. [143118]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 9 December 2003]: The Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB (ISG) was appointed by Ministers in 1998 to design and oversee a large-scale field trial, the Randomised Badger Culling Trial (RBCT), aimed at evaluating badger culling as a means to reduce the incidence of cattle TB. The trial involves three experimental treatments: (i) proactive culling, which aims to reduce badger densities to very low levels across entire trial areas, (ii) reactive culling, which seeks to remove only those badgers geographically close to recent cattle TB outbreaks on particular premises, and (iii) no culling (survey only).

The ISG has advised Ministers that its interim analysis of trial data so far indicates that there has been a 27 per cent. increase in the number of cases of bovine TB (breakdowns) in cattle herds occurring in reactive culling areas compared to the related survey-only areas (where no badger culling took place). The culling of badgers in reactive treatment areas of the RBCT was suspended from 4 November, because of the risk that a further three months of culling would cause additional TB breakdowns.

On the advice of the ISG, operations will continue in proactive areas because the data for these areas does not yet yield a statistically significant result. The survey-only (control) areas will also continue to be monitored.

This is a significant step forward in the development of a strategy to control bovine TB. Although we have now effectively ruled out small-scale, reactive culling of badgers, it gives us and the industry a greater impetus to focus our attention on other measures, such as the development of an improved diagnostic test, improved biosecurity and husbandry, and the development of a vaccine.

Full details available on Defra's website http://www.defra.gov.uk/animalh/tb/culling/index.htm

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research she has undertaken on whether effective control of bovine TB can be achieved solely by means of herd bio-security and good animal husbandry. [142002]

Mr. Bradshaw: An investigation, costing approximately £0.5 million, of potential badger/cattle interactions and how cattle husbandry methods may limit these is being funded by Defra. The final report will be published after the investigation ends in December 2005.

A survey known as TB99 is under way and assesses potential risk factors that may predispose herds to TB outbreaks. The survey was delayed because of the foot and mouth disease outbreak but is back on course.

Advice leaflets on the health and welfare of livestock are available from Defra's website. Important advice on preventative strategies for avoiding introduction of cattle diseases, such as bovine TB, can be found in the leaflets "Golden Rules for a Healthy Herd" and "TB in Cattle—Reducing the Risk".

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what advice is given to farmers by her Department on bio-security measures aimed at preventing infection of cattle by TB. [142004]

Mr. Bradshaw: Defra has produced a concise list of disease prevention measures (including the need to always know the health status of animals being bought or moved) in the form of a yellow card which was developed with livestock industry representatives and vets. It was sent to all livestock farmers in 2002, and is available on the Defra website.

The Defra booklets "TB in Cattle—Reducing the Risk", "Golden Rules for a Healthy Herd" and Farm Biosecurity—Protecting Herd Health", which contain guidance on disease control measures, are also available from the Animal Health Divisional Offices or on the Defra website.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what effect delays in obtaining TB culture tests results have had on the reactive cull trial. [142336]

Mr. Bradshaw: In the majority of cases TB infection would have been confirmed on gross pathology, in abattoirs, by the presence of visible lesions, so culture results are of significance in only the non-visible lesion cases which were positive to the tuberculin test. Delays in culture results will have contributed in part to delays in the notification process but administrative and logistical delays, including the no cull period, would have a greater significance.

Dairy Farming

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many dairy cows there were in England in each of the past five years; and what the average size of dairy herds was in each year in (a) Cornwall and (b) Devon. [140715]

Mr. Bradshaw: The information is in the table.

June Agricultural Census

Farm Subsidies (CAP)

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what advice her Department has offered tenant farmers in respect of the extent to which the forthcoming single farm payments will be attributed to (a) the land and (b) the farming activity where decoupled payments will be made under the reformed Common Agricultural Policy. [140813]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 1 December 2003]: Entitlements under the Single Payment Scheme will be allocated to farmers, whether owner-occupiers or tenants, rather than to the land or particular farming activities. Farmers may then use any eligible land at their disposal in support of an annual claim for payment against their entitlements. Eligibility for the payment will not be dependent on any farming activity other than keeping all agricultural land on the claimant's holding in good agricultural and environmental condition.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Roger Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will reconsider the payment of slaughter premium on adult bovines slaughtered on farm through the Livestock Welfare Disposal Scheme during the foot and mouth outbreak because the farming businesses were subject to Form D movement restrictions. [142441]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 8 December 2003]: No. In deciding to make ex gratia payments equivalent to the Slaughter Premium entitlement, plus interest, on all adult cattle killed in abattoirs under the Livestock Welfare (Disposal) Scheme we have taken account of the eligibility conditions applicable to the payment of Slaughter Premium.

Large Combustion Plant Directive

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the basis was of her decision to recommend to the European Commission on 27 November a national plan rather than an emissions limit value approach on the Large Combustion Plant Directive. [141322]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 4 December 2003]: The Government's decision to submit a national plan to the Commission was in order to keep the option open. The Directive requires that any national plan is submitted to the European Commission by 27 November 2003. The Government considers that further analysis is required before taking a decision which implementation approach it is in the UK's interest to adopt. The UK can withdraw the plan if further analysis suggests that the emission limits approach is in the UK's best interest. A decision on whether to withdraw the national plan would be taken before spring 2004.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which of the two options under the Large Combustion Plant Directive other European countries have opted for; what discussions she has had with the Department of Trade and Industry on the option that fits most constructively with their energy policy; and what inquiries she has undertaken to determine the effects of implementing a national plan approach on UK energy jobs during the period in which further analysis on the two approaches is completed. [141324]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 4 December 2003]: In addition to the UK, Ireland have submitted a national plan to the European Commission, and that several other Member States are likely to submit national plans.

Government decisions on implementing the Large Combustion Plants Directive (2001/80/EC) were reached following extensive contacts with all Departments having an interest in the issue. Both approaches are compatible with the Government's energy policy, but this is an area where we expect to undertake more analysis; for example, on issues surrounding security of supply.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the sensitivities associated with each option under the Large Combustion Plant Directive referred to in the press statement her Department issued on 27 November are; and if she will make a statement. [141325]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government have decided to look further into whether there is a different impact on the coal industry resulting from the emission limits approach to that from the national plan approach method of implementing the revised Large Combustion Plants Directive (2001/80/EC) for plants first licensed before July 1987. In addition there is a possible direct sensitivity to other policies, for example in connection with the UK's implementation of the European Union Emissions Trading Scheme, and the effect of the decision on the security of energy supplies.

Sea Birds

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what work her Department is doing to establish the size and distribution of offshore bird populations; and if she will make a statement. [141943]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Seabirds at Sea survey is a part Government funded national survey under the JNCC management. The survey does not cover all our seas on an annual basis, but areas of our seas have been selected each year since 1979. In the main our knowledge of the distribution of bird populations in the offshore environment comes from species surveys, many of which have been done in response to development pressures and some of which have been part funded by the country conservation agencies.

In addition to this work some information is gathered on both numbers and distribution around our coasts from the BTO/WWT/RSPB/JNCC Wetland Bird Survey, which is the part-government funded national scheme for counting waterbirds in the UK. This scheme relies on observers on land and therefore does not provide full coverage of birds that use the open sea.

The JNCC and WWT are, within their partnership, currently developing a strategy for monitoring sea ducks, divers and grebes, and JNCC will present this to government as formal advice in 2004.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what work her Department is doing to establish the size and distribution of offshore populations of the common scoter; and if she will make a statement. [141944]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Seabirds at Sea survey is a part Government funded national survey under the JNCC management. The survey does not cover all our seas on an annual basis, but areas of our seas have been selected each year since 1979. In the main our knowledge of the distribution of bird populations in the offshore environment comes from species surveys, many of which have been done in response to development pressures and some of which have been part funded by the country conservation agencies.

In addition to this work some information is gathered on both numbers and distribution around our coasts from the BTO/WWT/RSPB/JNCC Wetland Bird Survey, which is the part-government funded national scheme for counting waterbirds in the UK. This scheme relies on observers on land and therefore does not provide full coverage of birds that use the open sea.

The JNCC and WWT are, within their partnership, currently developing a strategy for monitoring sea ducks, divers and grebes, and JNCC will present this to government as formal advice in 2004.

While there is no national scheme we do know that that the UK wintering population of common scoter is estimated to be 50,000 individuals (Kershaw and Cranswick. 2003. Biological Conservation 111: 91–104) and those of other species can be found on the WWTs website at: http://www.wwt.org.uk/publications/default.asp?PubID = 14

The distributions of these birds can be found in the JNCC publication "An Atlas of seabird distribution in north-west European waters" (Stone et al. 1995).

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress her Department is making in designating Shell Flat, Liverpool Bay as a special protection area; and if she will make a statement. [141942]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Statutory Nature Conservation Agencies are currently verifying survey data for the common scoter population in the Liverpool Bay area, including Shell Flat. Once the data has been scientifically verified a site proposal will be submitted to this Department. English Nature would then undertake a full public consultation exercise before any Special Protection Area is classified.

Pet Pigs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on licences for walking pet pigs; and what plans she has to bring forward legislation on such licences. [143223]

Mr. Bradshaw: Pigs spread pig diseases rapidly. In order to track movements and reduce the potential for disease, pet pig walking licenses were introduced in 1995. The first legislation to require these licenses was the Pigs (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 1995. The Pigs (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 2003 continues to require these licences to be issued by the local Divisional Veterinary Manager.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the number of pet pig walking licences issued; what the cost has been of issuing licences; and what plans she has to require the issue of licences for walking pet sheep. [143224]

Mr. Bradshaw: Pet pig walking licences are issued as routine work by Defra Local Animal Health Divisional Offices. They allow Defra to minimise the risk of disease spreading from pet pigs to commercial herds. No central record is maintained. To obtain details of the licences issued would result in disproportionate costs.

There are no plans to introduce legislation to require pet sheep walking licences.

Pharmaceutical Crops

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received about proposals to test pharmaceutical crops in the UK. [138806]

Mr. Morley: We have received no such representations. Commercial testing of crops for pharmaceutical use is a matter for the industry. The relevant statutory safeguards would need to be complied with, for example in the cultivation of hemp and other similar crops for authorised purposes. There have been no proposals to release GM crops modified for the production of pharmaceutically active components.

Regulations (Consultation)

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proportion of regulations introduced by the Department have been subject to a consultation period of less than 12 weeks since the introduction of the Code of Practice on Consultations. [142490]

Alun Michael: The Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultation came into effect on 1 January 2001. In the period 1 January 2001 to 31 December 2002 Defra has published 141 consultations under the Code, of which 87 lasted for less than 12 weeks.

Wood for Good Campaign

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether she plans to continue with funding of the Wood for Good campaign beyond the end of 2003; and if she will make a statement. [142228]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Forestry Commission is planning to continue to support the wood for good campaign in 2004 through its funding partnership with UK and Nordic producers.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143155]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Member to the answer provided by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House on 9 December 2003, Official Report, Vol. 415, column 355W.

Human Rights

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the amendments made to the Northern Ireland Human Rights Action Plan as a result of proposals made by his staff; [141856]

(2) if he will place in the Library copies of e-mail exchanges between his office and the offices of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission that relate to the preparation of the Human Rights Commission Action Plan. [141857]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My officials met the Chief Commissioner of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission on 6 October and offered some general suggestions, in line with the Commission's independence, about ways in which the Commission might wish to consider strengthening the Action Plan in relation to communications, strategy and organisation. No particular amendments were requested either in discussion or by e-mail, since it was understood that the Action Plan would be the Commission's alone.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provisions of the Paris Principles govern relations between his officials and members of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission. [141858]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Act 1998 governs relations between the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission. Nonetheless the Government believes relations between the two organisations are in line with the provisions of the Paris Principles.

Prison Officers

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what meetings he has had with the Northern Ireland Prison Officers Association in relation to recent strike action by prison officers in Northern Ireland. [142669]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The lead in the matter of the strike action had been taken by the Minister of State, who had several meetings with the Prison Officers Association. I have been kept fully informed of events but have not been directly involved in meetings with the union representatives.

Saintfield Yarns

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance is being given to the former employees of Saintfield Yarns by government agencies to access (a) re-training and employment opportunities and (b) redundancy and benefits payments before the Christmas period. [142697]

Mr. Pearson: Following notification of closure at Saintfield Yarns, the Department for Employment and Learning's Ballynahinch JobCentre offered to the company its job brokerage service and a full range of advisory services relating to training opportunities, redundancy payments and benefit entitlement. This took place over two days on the employer's premises and approximately 100 employees availed of the service. Representatives of the Social Security Agency, Invest NI, Enterprise Ulster, and local training organisations were also involved.

In addition, representatives from Marks and Spencer and Antrim Carpets were available to discuss job opportunities and to distribute application forms.

The Department has received 168 applications for Redundancy and Insolvency payments from former employees. These claims are being verified and processed and all eligible applicants are likely to receive a redundancy payment before Christmas. It is also anticipated that all claims for benefit will be processed within the same timescale.

JobCentre staff are providing continuing support to all who require it.

SCOTLAND

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143161]

Mr. Darling: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, on 9 December 2003, Official Report, column 355W.

Fisheries Council

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the First Minister on progress of negotiations towards the December Fisheries Council. [142045]

Mrs. McGuire: My right hon. Friend and the First Minister discuss a wide range of matters.

Top-up Fees

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from (a) student representative bodies and (b) the university sector in Scotland on the subject of top-up fees. [142729]

Mrs. McGuire: My right hon. Friend has not received any representations on the subject of variable tuition fees from student representative bodies, but he has had correspondence from three MPs writing on behalf of Scottish universities and individual students.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what written representations he has received from the First Minister of Scotland on the subject of top-up fees. [142764]

Mrs. McGuire [holding answer 8 December 2003]: My right hon. Friend has frequent exchanges with the First Minister on a range of relevant issues, including the possible impact in Scotland of the introduction of variable tuition fees in England.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Noise Pollution

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what provisions exist for the police to take action against motorists who emit loud noise from car stereos. [141919]

Mr. Bradshaw: The police have powers to restrict noise from moving vehicles under Regulation 97 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986. This regulation makes it an offence to use a motor vehicle on the road in such a manner as to cause any excessive noise that could have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care on the part of the driver; this includes excessive noise from car stereos. The penalty is a fine of up to £1,000.

In addition, Section 59 of the Police Reform Act 2002 gives power to seize a vehicle if it is being used in certain specified circumstances, including in a manner > "causing or likely to cause, alarm, distress or annoyance to members of the public".

The Police (Retention and Disposal of Motor Vehicles) Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3049) provide for the retention, safe-keeping and disposal by the police (or persons authorised by them) of vehicles seized under section 59.

Cider

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what volume of cider was produced in the UK in each of the last five years. [142140]

Mr. Bradshaw: The volume of cider produced in each of the last five financial years for which data are available is as follows:

Financial Year	Million litres
1997–98	475
1998–99	495
1999–2000	505
2001–01	510

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total profit made by UK cider producers was in each of the last five years. [142141]

Mr. Bradshaw: The total profit before tax made by major cider producers in the UK in each of the last five financial years for which data are available is as follows.

Financial Year	£ million
1997–98	51
1998–99	15

Projects (St. Helens)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which projects have been (a) wholly and (b) partly funded by her Department in St. Helens since 1997; when each project was announced; when it started or was expected to start;

what funding was provided by (i) Government and (ii) a third party; what third party provided funding; what the target group of the project was; what the projected outcome of the project was; and what the name of the project was. [141271]

Alun Michael: Information and statistics on the distribution of the Department's funds are not normally held on a parliamentary constituency basis. The following tables show as fully as possible details of projects that have benefited St. Helens since 1997.

The latest information on regional progress in the national headline indicators of sustainable development were published by Defra in the second edition of the 'Regional quality of life counts' report on 21 June 2002. This provides updated regional figures and analysis for 13 of the 15 headline indictors for each of the English Government Office Regions. The Government's third annual report on sustainable development in the UK—Achieving a better quality of life—was published by Defra on 24 February 2003. Both publications are available on the Government's sustainable development website: www.sustainable-development.gov.uk. In addition, a wide range of information about the Department's policies and work is also included in the Defra Publication Scheme which was introduced in November 2002 and is available on the Defra website at www.defra.gov.uk.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the incidence of TB in badgers in (a) England, (b) Herefordshire and (c) Worcestershire was in the last six months for which figures are available. [140457]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 1 December 2003]: Data from the Randomised Badger Culling Trial (RBCT) and the associated current Road Traffic Accident (RTA) survey are not available. The most recent data available are for the period 18 February 1999 to 18 August 1999. These data are sourced from the previous RTA survey and sources other than from badger removal operations, and pre-date the current RTA and RBCT.

The following table shows the number of badger carcases tested for Mycobacterium bovis (the causative organism for bovine tuberculosis) for this period. Data for Hereford and Worcester were collected together, and thus given as a total.

Badgers tested for Mycobacterium bovis 18 February 1999 to 18 August 1999

	England	Hereford and Worcester
Number of badger carcases tested	771	128
Number of badger carcases M.bovis positive	72	19
Percentage	10.1	14.8

It is not possible to provide incidence rates for TB in badgers for the period in the absence of data about the date badgers became infected.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many people, since 1998, have been arrested for interfering with Government badger traps; and how many have been prosecuted. [141973]

Mr. Bradshaw: The arrest and prosecution of anti-trial activists is the responsibility of the relevant police forces in whose areas the Randomised Badger Culling Trial areas are located, and the Crown Prosecution Service. Defra does not receive information on, or maintain records of, such arrests and prosecutions.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what deleterious effects on wildlife arising from the current badger population level have been recorded by her Department and other UK public bodies. [141992]

Mr. Bradshaw: Previous research has shown that there is a negative relationship between badger and hedgehog abundance, i.e. more badgers equals fewer hedgehogs, in rural areas. This is believed to be due to hedgehog predation by badgers and through hedgehogs avoiding areas of higher badger density. However, this is not necessarily a "deleterious effect on wildlife", since predator/prey interactions are a feature of ecosystems. It has been suggested that badgers may impact adversely on some species of ground nesting birds. The interaction between the badgers and other species in the ecosystem is the subject of a study being carried out by the Central Science Laboratory. This study is being conducted in selected areas of the Randomised Badger Culling Trial and the results will not be available until after the fieldwork programme finishes at the end of 2004.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total cost has been of the reactive cull component of the Government's Randomised Badger Culling Trials. [142459]

Mr. Bradshaw: It is not possible to give an accurate cost of the reactive element of the Randomised Badger Culling Trial. The total cost of the trial to the end of March 2004 is forecast to have reached £30.5 million.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many badgers have been killed as part of the Randomised Badger Culling Trials; how many were tested for TB infection; and how many were culture positive for TB. [142467]

Mr. Bradshaw: As at 5 December 2003, 8,276 badgers had been culled in the Randomised Badger Culling Trials. All culled badgers are tested for TB infection. On the advice of the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB, data on the prevalence of TB in badgers caught in the trial, along with locations of their capture and the incidence of TB in cattle in trial areas, once triplets are active, are not released. This is to protect the integrity of the trial, and for the security of Defra field staff and farmers co-operating in the work.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what criteria are used to assess whether a reactive badger culling programme is effective. [142472]

Mr. Bradshaw: These are set out in the Second Report of the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB. Essentially, over the same time period, the number of cattle herd breakdowns in reactive trial areas are compared with the number of herd breakdowns in the survey only trial areas, taking into account factors such as numbers of herds per trial area, timing of tuberculin test and a number of other variables. For analytical purposes, the starting point used for such comparisons, for each triplet, is the end of the initial culling operation in the proactive trial area.

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will publish the results of the research into the interaction between TB in badgers and TB in cattle. [140458]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 1 December 2003]: The Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB (ISO) intends to publish the results of the Randomised Badger Culling Trial as soon as possible following its predicted conclusion in 2006.

In line with its undertaking to report any significant results that emerge from analyses before the trial's conclusion, the ISO recently reported results that indicated that localised badger culling seemed to increase TB incidence in cattle. These results stem from a comparison between the level of TB incidence in cattle in the reactive culling and the control (no culling) treatment areas. Further information is available from the Defra website http://www.defra.gov.uk/animalh/tb/index.htm and from a paper the ISO have published in Nature www.nature.com/nature.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what examples there have been of reactive badger culling programmes in England where the work was successful in controlling TB in cattle; and where and when those programmes were carried out. [141970]

Mr. Bradshaw: Since the early 1970s MAFF/Defra has carried out a range of badger control strategies in an attempt to reduce TB incidence in cattle. These were reviewed in the Krebs Report in 1997 where, among other things, it was recommended that a scientific field experiment be set up to test rigorously the effectiveness (and cost-effectiveness) of different badger culling strategies and to provide the evidence on which to base future TB control strategies. The Krebs report recommended a randomised block approach comprising three treatments: reactive culling, proactive culling, and no culling. The Randomised Badger Culling Trial, as recommended by Krebs and designed by the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB, commenced in 1998.

Previous control strategies included Gassing (1975–82), Clean Ring (1982–86), Interim (1986 to 1998) and Live Test (1994–96) further details are available in the Krebs Report Chapter 5 page 76. None of the control strategies has been assessed in a properly designed experiment to establish their efficacy. While removal operations may have had an effect on the prevalence of TB in badgers and on herd breakdowns, other factors may also have influenced these. In the absence of scientific controls, it is not possible to separate out the effects of badger removal from these confounding factors.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the incidence of TB in (a) badgers and (b) cattle in England during (i) 2004 and (ii) 2005. [142469]

Mr. Bradshaw: It is only possible to make estimates of the incidence of bovine TB in cattle based on previous years. Unfortunately, data for both 2002 and 2001 cannot be easily compared with earlier years. This is because, in 2001, TB testing was largely suspended during the foot and mouth disease outbreak, and in 2002 much of the testing effort was aimed at high-risk herds and those with overdue tests. Nevertheless, early indications suggest that the reduced levels of testing in 2001 have not substantially altered the underlying historical trend of confirmed TB incidents in cattle, which continues to rise at a yearly average rate of about 18 per cent. for new herd incidents.

No estimates have been made regarding the incidence of TB in badgers.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact of the level of funding to laboratories for the examination of bovine samples for M. bovis on the time scale for the testing of samples. [142338]

Mr. Bradshaw: Culture of samples for Mycobacterium bovis (the causative organism for bovine tuberculosis) takes at least six weeks. A backlog of samples built up at the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (VLA) after the foot and mouth disease outbreak in 2001.

An extra £650,000 funding was made available in 2003–04 to the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (VLA) to tackle the backlog. So far in 2003, the monthly throughput at VLA of bovine samples for culture has been more than three times higher than in 2002. Fresh samples are now being processed as they arrive at VLA and we are further reducing the backlog of frozen samples.

At the end of October 2003 there were 1,781 tissue samples awaiting culture at the VLA (down from 6,329 at the end of March 2003). Nearly all of the outstanding samples (1,712) are from carcases that showed no visible lesions at post-mortem, and thus not causing a delay in lifting movement restrictions from farms.

Chemical Solvents

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what controls apply to the use of chemical solvents as substitute fuels in cement kilns; and what monitoring takes place of emissions which might reasonably be expected to derive from such use. [142345]

Mr. Bradshaw: The use of solvents as substitute fuel in a cement kiln requires a permit from the Environment Agency. The permit contains conditions specific to the cement kiln which include:

(a) a specification for the substitute fuel(s);

(b) requirements for on-site storage and handling of substitute fuel(s);

(c) requirements for monitoring and sampling to ensure that out-of-specification substitute fuel is not burned in the kiln;

(d) a range of other requirements ensuring adequate control of the process;

(e) emission limits for pollutants likely to be emitted in significant quantities; and

(f) requirements for monitoring and reporting emissions.

Permits require the continuous monitoring of the following parameters:

Particulate matter

Oxides of Nitrogen (NO plus NO_2 expressed as NO_2)

Sulphur Dioxide (SO_2)

Carbon Monoxide (CO)

Hydrogen Chloride (HCL)

Oxygen, moisture, temperature and pressure

Volatile Organic Carbon expressed as Total Organic Carbon (VOCs as TOC)

Permits require the periodic monitoring of the following parameters:

PM_{10}[1]

Sulphur Dioxide (SO_2)

Carbon Monoxide (CO)

Hydrogen Chloride (HCL)

Hydrogen Fluoride

Volatile Organic Carbon expressed as Total Organic Carbon (VOCs as TOC)

Heavy metals

Dioxins and furans[2]

Moisture, temperature, oxygen,

Flow

Other species[3]

[1] PM10s monitored during substitute fuel trials.

[2] Dioxin-like polychlorinated biphenyls are being included in new permit variations.

[3] Other species may be specified based on an assessment of the fuel composition and trial data.

Each of the above controls including monitoring requirements is considered in detail in the "Substitute Fuels Protocol"—Environment Agency guidance for managing substitute fuel trials on cement and lime kilns.

Milk

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many litres of milk were produced in the UK in each of the last 10 years; and what the national quota was in each of those years. [141566]

Mr. Bradshaw: The following table gives the total amounts of quota allocated to the UK for the period 1994–95 to 2002–03 and the amount of milk produced in each of these years.

Million litres

Quota year	Quota allocation	Amount produced
1994–95	14,167	14,256
1995–96	14,167	14,324
1996–97	14,167	14,221
1997–98	14,167	14,294
1998–99	14,167	14,205
1999–2000	14,167	14,232
2000–01	14,179	13,885
2001–02	14,186	14,103
2002–03	14,186	14,064

North Norfolk Coast

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on her Department's strategy for the stretch of coastline from Happisburgh to Winterton in North Norfolk; and what the cost of implementing this strategy is. [141989]

Mr. Morley: Development and implementation of options for defending against flooding and coastal erosion is the responsibility of the flood and coastal defence operating authorities—the Environment Agency, local authorities and, in areas with special drainage needs, internal drainage boards.

The Environment Agency is responsible for a 14 kilometre length of sea defences from south of Happisburgh village to Winterton-on-Sea. This coastline has a long history of erosion and breaching of the defences, causing flooding of a large low-lying hinterland, extending into the Norfolk Broads area.

Defra agreed the Agency's current sea defence strategy for this frontage which recommends maintaining the existing system of sea defence structures by implementing a programme of beach recharge and groyne replacement. The estimated cost of this strategy is now £60 million, if continued over the next 50 years.

This strategy accords with the 'Hold the Line' defence policy recommended in the current Shoreline Management Plan. This plan is currently being reviewed.

Pet Pig Walking Licences

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the veterinary resources required to administer the pet pig walking licence scheme. [143634]

Mr. Bradshaw: Pet Pig walking licences are issued as routine work by Defra Local Animal Health Divisional Offices. They allow Defra to minimise the risk of disease spreading from pet pigs to commercial herds. No central record is maintained. To obtain details of the licences issued would result in disproportionate costs.

Countryside and Rights of Way Act

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total cost is of completing the mapping stage of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000, broken down by (a) year, (b) central government and (c) local government. [143015]

Alun Michael: By the end of October 2003, the Countryside Agency and the Planning Inspectorate had spent a total of £22.7 million on implementing Part I of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000. This figure includes expenditure of £2.5 million in 2000–01; £3.4 million in 2001–02; £9.1 million in 2002–03 and £7.7 million in 2003–04. As well as the costs of mapping work completed, whether or not yet invoiced, it covers other costs arising from Part 1 of the Act, such as appeals, restrictions and publicity, and it includes staff costs.

It is not possible to give accurate figures for the remainder of the mapping exercise because there are still large external factors to be taken into account. These include the number of comments received on draft maps and the number of appeals. These variables could have a large impact on the final costs of the mapping exercise.

The figures relate to England. Information on mapping in Wales is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales. Local government is not involved in the mapping stage.

Cement Kilns

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she takes to ensure that materials agreed as suitable for fuel under the Environment Agency's Substitute Fuels Protocol in practice result in no net detriment to the environment; what formula is applied to consider relative gains against relative losses in environmental impact; and if she will make a statement. [142347]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Substitute Fuels Protocol is based on the premise that it is necessary for an operator proposing to use substitute fuel(s) to undertake a programme of rigorous trials, in order to establish scientifically the facts about the possible environmental impacts of its proposals on the area around the site in question. The results of such trials ensure that the Environment Agency is able to make sound judgments as to whether or not the permanent use of substitute fuel(s) should be permitted and, if so, under what conditions.

For applications to allow the use of substitute fuel(s), the Environment Agency ensures that the change will not produce any net detriment to the environment.

The methodology for making this assessment is entitled "H1: Environmental Assessment and Appraisal of BAT" published by the Environment Agency. This methodology enables different operating scenarios to be compared for emissions to all media.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what analysis is carried out to determine the impact on emissions from cement kilns of (a) particulate matter and (b) complex chemical compounds from the switch from fossil based fuels to substitute fuels, with particular reference to hazardous waste. [142348]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Environment Agency requires operators to conduct a comparative environmental assessment of process emissions, including particulate matter and complex chemical compounds such as dioxins and furans, when plant operation is switched from burning fossil fuels to substitute fuels, such as hazardous wastes.

Particulate matter is continuously monitored irrespective of the operating scenario.

Complex chemical compounds such as dioxins and furans monitored using extractive techniques. Other compounds may be specified based on an assessment of the fuel composition and trial data. In addition, irrespective of the fuel composition, carbon monoxide and volatile organic carbon emissions are continuously monitored as they are both considered a good surrogate for monitoring efficient combustion. The operational criteria specified for hazardous waste combustion (temperature greater than 1100°C and residence time at least two seconds) are exceeded in cement kilns thus ensuring destruction of complex chemical compounds.

Waste Management

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the ability of the planning process to enable sufficient infrastructure to be built by 2020 to manage waste in compliance with the EU's Landfill Directive. [143288]

Keith Hill: National planning policy on waste management is set out in Planning Policy Guidance Note 10 Planning and Waste Management (PPG10). PPG10 underlines that the planning system should enable adequate provision of waste management facilities in appropriate locations, without undue adverse environmental effects or nuisance. As part of the Government's wider planning reform programme, PPG10 will be reviewed in 2004 and updated as a planning policy statement (PPS). The new PPS will properly reflect and state the need for new, or upgraded, waste management facilities of all types. This will include the infrastructure required to support the prime objectives of reduction and recycling but, also, sites and plants for final treatment and disposal.

TRANSPORT

Crash Barriers

Mr. Mackay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of whether the performance standards of barriers used on motorways and trunk roads in England and Wales are the same as those used in other EU countries; and if he will make a statement. [142780]

Dr. Howells: The Highways Agency has carried out targeted investigations into performance standards of barriers at the approaches to bridges on motorways and trunk roads in England, and of the comparative performance standards in other EU countries. This found that some other EU countries require higher performance standards than England at these locations.

The Highways Agency is also aware that some other EU countries require higher performance standards than England for motorway and trunk road central reserve barriers. The Highways Agency is currently carrying out research into the potential safety-benefits and cost-effectiveness of increasing the current performance standard for central reserve barriers.

Emergency Vehicles

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what privileges accrue from having a vehicle fitted with an emergency blue light and siren; and what regulations govern which vehicles may be fitted with such equipment. [143241]

Dr. Howells: The fitting and use of blue lights on emergency vehicles are controlled by Regulations 16 and 27 of The Road Vehicles Lighting Regulations 1989, and sirens by Regulations 37 and 99 of The Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986.

The authority to fit and use blue lights and sirens does not of itself provide any special privileges for drivers.

Privileges often associated with their use, such as exemption from speed limits are contained in Section 87 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984, and exemption from certain signals and traffic signs are contained in The Zebra, Pelican and Puffin Pedestrian Crossings Regulations 1997 and The Traffic Signs Regulations 2002.

Public Transport (Disabled People)

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the number of disabled people prevented from working because they are unable to use public transport. [143556]

Mr. McNulty: The Department for Transport has not carried out an assessment in that area.

TransPennine Express Franchise

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the Hull-Manchester Airport link was not part of FirstGroup's Public Service Requirement when it acquired the TransPennine Express franchise. [143244]

Dr. Howells: The Passenger Service Requirement (PSR) for the Hull-Leeds-Manchester route, as part of the Arriva Trains Northern franchise, does not include an absolute requirement to operate services to Manchester Airport. The TransPennine Express franchise will inherit substantially the same PSR.

Transport Investment (Yorkshire and Humber)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much investment there was in transport in the Yorkshire and Humber region in each of the past five years. [143307]

Dr. Howells: I refer the right hon. Member to Public Sector Statistical Analyses 2003 Tables 8.10a to 8.13b where figures covering both transport investment and resource expenditure for the years 1998–99 to 2001–02 may be found. Data for 2002–03 are not yet available.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Digital Television

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport pursuant to her answer of 4 December 2003, Official Report, column 165W, on digital television, what estimate has been made of the number of households expected to purchase the new viewing card announced last month which replaces the Solus viewing card. [143497]

Estelle Morris: The latest ITC estimates for Q2 2003 are that 738,900 homes receive Free to Air (FTA) digital satellite services and could therefore wish to buy a viewing card. These figures comprise an estimate of the number of Sky viewers who have only ever been FTA viewers plus an estimate of the number of ex-Sky subscribers who continue to use their set-top boxes for viewing FTA channels.

Projects (St. Helens)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which projects have been (a) wholly and (b) partly funded by her Department in St. Helens since 1997; when each project was announced; when it started or was expected to start; what funding was provided by (i) Government and (ii) a third party; what third party provided funding; what the target group of the project was; what the projected outcome of the project was; and what the name of the project was. [141272]

Mr. Caborn: My Department has wholly or partly funded a wide range of projects in St. Helens since 1997, covering the arts, sport, heritage, museums and libraries. I am particularly pleased that five schools in St. Helens are taking part in the DCMS/Arts Council England 'Creative Partnerships' initiative. Additional information on this initiative and other projects that have been wholly or partly funded by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport in St. Helens since 1997 has been placed in the Library.

Racing Greyhounds

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make it her policy to use the proposed Gambling Bill to improve the statutory protection for the welfare of racing greyhounds. [143371]

Mr. Caborn: The Gambling Bill is intended to reform the regulation of gambling rather than make provision for animal welfare: this is a matter for separate legislation now under consideration by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs. However, we envisage that the premises licences for greyhound tracks which local authorities will issue under the proposed Bill will include conditions safeguarding the integrity of betting events which will entail compliance with minimum welfare standards.

The prime responsibility for the welfare of a greyhound must reside with the owner. I am, however, presently exploring with both the bookmaking and greyhound industries if more funds could be provided for welfare through the existing voluntary funding arrangements.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

European Constitution

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether it is the policy of his Department that the European Constitution should specify poverty eradication as the primary objective of EU development programmes and expenditure in every developing country. [140870]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The draft new Treaty suggests that the principal aim of the Union's development policy is to reduce, and in the long term, eradicate poverty. We very much welcome this statement and have lobbied hard for this during the Convention debate.

HIV/AIDS

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps are being taken to improve health delivery mechanisms in developing countries to ensure the dispersal of World Health Organisation-approved generic anti-retroviral drugs; and if he will make a statement. [142621]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID is committed to working with others, including our donor partners, the pharmaceutical industry, investors, developing country governments and non-governmental organisations (NGOs) to improve access to medicines in developing countries, including for the treatment of HIV/AIDS.

With the World Health Organisation, DFID believes that affordable pricing, sustainable financing, reliable health and supply systems, and the rational selection and use of existing drugs are all essential to improve access to medicines.

In line with this, DFID has committed over £1.5 billion since May 1997 to support the strengthening of health and supply systems in developing countries, which will help to build capacity to deliver medicines to the poor and to make effective choices about the selection of drugs. The UK has also pledged $280 million to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, TB and Malaria (GFATM). This will help pay for increased coverage of proven interventions for the three diseases and some associated health systems strengthening. According to UNAIDS, the UK is the second largest bilateral donor for HIV/AIDS programmes.

DFID supports a comprehensive response to HIV/AIDS, which includes prevention, treatment and care and alleviation of the impact of AIDS. We welcome recent reductions in the price of both patent and generic anti-retroviral drugs for the treatment of HIV. These reductions have created new opportunities to allow poor people to benefit from the same life-saving treatment that has been available in affluent countries. We will continue to work with the WHO, the patent based and generic pharmaceutical industries and others to further reduce prices. DFID supports the target set by the World Health Organisation and UNAIDS for three million people receiving treatment by the end of 2005. A new policy on treatment and care, to be launched early next year, will set out how DFID will coordinate work with partners to promote anti-retroviral treatment for poor people and for women.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on his discussions regarding HIV and retro-viral drugs for developing countries. [141931]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID supports a comprehensive response to HIV/AIDS, which includes prevention, treatment and care and alleviation of the impact of AIDS. Recent reductions in the price of anti-retroviral drugs for the treatment of HIV has created new opportunities to allow poor people to benefit from the same life-saving treatment that has been available in affluent countries. This is why we support the target set by the World Health Organisation and UNAIDS for three million people receiving treatment by the end of 2005.

DFID, the World Health Organisation and others believe that affordable pricing, sustainable financing, reliable health and supply systems, and the rational selection and use of existing drugs are all essential to improve access to medicines. DFID is committed to continuing our discussions with others, including our G8 partners, the pharmaceutical industry, investors, developing country governments and non-governmental organisations (NGOs) to improve access to medicines in developing countries, including for the treatment of HIV/AIDS. A new policy on treatment and care, to be launched early next year, will set out how DFID will coordinate work with partners to promote anti-retroviral treatment for poor people and for women.

Malaria

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much funding the Government has contributed towards research and development into affordable anti-malarial drugs in 2003–04; and how much it plans to spend in (a) 2004–05 and (b) 2005–06. [141191]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID is supporting public-private partnerships to develop the new generation of affordable drugs required for malaria control in developing countries. In 2003–4, we are contributing £1 million in support of the work of Medicines for Malaria Venture (MMV). We will also contribute £1 million to MMV in 2004–5 and a further £1 million in 2005–6.

We are working in partnership with GlaxoSmithKline, the World Health Organisation and the University of Liverpool to develop an effective, safe and affordable drug called Lapdap, for treating drug resistant malaria. DFID is currently funding compliance and pharmacovigilance trials of Lapdap. Our funding in 2003–4 will be £213,000 and in 2004–5 it will be £286,000.

DFID contributes to the Medical Research Council whose activities include funding research projects to develop medicines for resistant strains of malaria. We provide a core contribution to WHO, some of which is used to support the WHO Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Disease (TDR) to develop new approaches for treating infectious diseases, including malaria.

Future funding plans beyond current commitments to September 2006 are under review.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Bicycle Rickshaws

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Solicitor-General what discussions she has had in relation to (a) the decision in the High Court on bicycle rickshaws and their ability to convey passengers safely, and (b) clarifying (i) licensing, (ii) insurance and (iii) safety rules in relation to the carrying of the public by bicycle rickshaws. [142908]

The Solicitor-General: None.

Guantanamo Bay

Llew Smith: To ask the Solicitor-General if she and the Attorney-General will examine the lecture by Lord Steyn of 25 November on the legal status of British citizens at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba. [142901]

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General and I have already read a transcript of the lecture given by Lord Steyn on 25 November on the subject of Guantanamo Bay.

Mr. Roger Sylvester

Harry Cohen: To ask the Solicitor-General what has been the Government's response to the recent inquest decision that the death of Roger Sylvester amounted to an unlawful killing; and if she will make a statement. [141210]

The Solicitor-General: On 3 October 2003, an inquest jury returned a verdict that Roger Sylvester was unlawfully killed. Lawyers from the Crown Prosecution Service were present throughout the inquest hearing and have commenced a fresh review of the case. The review will include the evidence given at the inquest once the relevant transcripts have been received. It will be for the reviewing crown prosecutor to decide, in accordance with the Code for Crown Prosecutors, whether any criminal proceedings should be instituted.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Household Incomes

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his estimate is of the number of adults living on an income of less than (a) £5,000, (b) £7,500, (c) £10,000, (d) £15,000, (e) £20,000, (f) £30,000, (g) £35,000, (h) £40,000, (i) £50,000, (j) £75,000, (k) £100,000, (l) £150,000, (m) £200,000, (n) £500,000, (o) £1 million and (p) £10 million in London in each of the last six years for which information is available. [140853]

Mr. Pond: The information requested is provided for households and is set out in the table.

Number of households with net equivalised income, before housing costs, of less than:

Notes:

1. Figures in the table compares reported household incomes uprated by inflation, to equivalent 2001/02 prices, against the income levels (a) to (p).
2. Estimates are for London and are rounded to the nearest 0.1 million.
3. The estimates are sample counts, which have been adjusted for non-response using multipurpose grossing factors that, in the case of the Family Resources Survey, control for tenure, Council Tax band and a number of other variables. Estimates are subject to both sampling error and to variability in non-response. The income measure used is weekly net (disposable) equivalised household income (that is to say income that is adjusted to reflect the composition of the household).
4. Income is adjusted or equivalised to take into account variations in both size and composition of the household. This process reflects the notion that a family of several people needs a higher income than a single person in order for both households to enjoy a comparable standard of living. Incomes of larger families are adjusted downwards and incomes of smaller households adjusted upwards. The equivalence scales used takes a couple with no children as the reference point, and increases relatively the income of single persons households, and reduces relatively the incomes of households with larger consumption capabilities.
5. The estimates are presented on a Before Housing Costs (BHC) basis. Figures are provided including the self-employed

Access to Work Scheme

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) deaf, (b) blind and (c) deaf-blind people have applied for the Access to Work scheme in each year since its introduction; and how many have been successful in their application; how many appeals against refusals were lodged; how many were found in favour of the claimant since the introduction of the scheme; and how many people are receiving support under the Access to Work scheme. [140513]

Maria Eagle: The information requested is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The total number of people receiving Access to Work support in 2002–03 was 36,606; of these 15,199 were new applicants.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what initiatives he is planning to increase (a) awareness and (b) uptake of the Access to Work scheme. [140515]

Maria Eagle: Information on all our disability services is available from Jobcentre Plus offices, and is also available on the Jobcentre Plus web site (www.jobcentreplus.gov.uk). The web address is included in our publicity material.

Jobcentre Plus invests around £300,000 each year on marketing and publicising its specialised services and programmes for disabled people, including Access to Work. Promotional material is available in a range of media such as leaflets, audiotapes and videos.

Disability Employment Advisers meet regularly with local employers to promote the full range of services available to disabled people, including Access to Work. In addition, many organisations for disabled people actively promote Access to Work to their members, and some also include information about the programme on their website.

The number of people helped through Access to Work has increased year on year since 1996. In 1997–98, 12,825 people received support; that had risen to 36,606 in 2002–03.

Child Maintenance Premium

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what administrative reasons might prevent parents with care from receiving the child maintenance premium. [143535]

Mr. Pond: The child maintenance premium is a key feature of the new child support scheme. It relies on links with Jobcentre Plus IT systems to match up individuals on benefit with payments received. The new IT system is designed to do this and by the end of November 7,500 of the poorest families were already benefiting from the new premium. However to apply the premium to old scheme cases would require redesigning and rebuilding both the new and old IT systems.

Chronic Pain

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the cost of disability payments paid to sufferers of conditions associated with chronic pain was in 2002–03. [140478]

Maria Eagle: The available estimates relate to Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance. In 2002–03, the Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance payments made to people for whom their recorded main disabling condition was one usually associated with chronic pain amounted to some £3.8 billion.

Employment and Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the outcome of the Employment and Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council was on 1 December; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [142006]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I represented the UK together with the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Sutcliffe), at the Employment, Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council in Brussels on 1 December 2003.

The Council reached partial political agreement on the Articles of a new Regulation to replace Regulation 1408/71 co-ordinating social security systems for people moving from one member state to another. In particular, member states reached a compromise on Unemployment Benefit for people who live in a member state other than the one where they last worked. This relates to a reimbursement system that member states have agreed to: the last state of work will reimburse part of the Unemployment Benefit paid by the state of residence. UK retains a Parliamentary Scrutiny on this Regulation.

The Council discussed the Commission Communication on Structural Indicators for next year's spring Council and took note of the opinions of the Economic Policy Committee, the Working Group on Environment, Employment Committee and Social Protection Committee. The Presidency invited the General Affairs and External Relations Council to adopt joint conclusions as close as possible to the existing draft.

The Council adopted Conclusions on disability, on immigration, integration and employment and on gender equality indicators. The Council also agreed a general approach on a Council Decision establishing a Social Protection Committee. Council noted the Other Business items without comment.

In the Consumer Affairs part of the Council, a Resolution on the Safety of Services was adopted without comment. There was a general policy discussion on the proposed EC Regulation on Consumer Protection Co-operation, and the UK supported the proposal.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Health (Mr. Hutton), represented the UK for consideration of the health items on the agenda of the Council on 2 of December.

The main health business related to the Proposal for a European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control. Discussion focused on the scope of the Centre, which is due to be operational by 2005, with member states agreeing it should concentrate initially on communicable disease, with the possibility of broadening the remit following external evaluation of its operations at a later date. Issues still to be resolved include the legal base, where the UK retained its reserve, and data protection requirements.

A draft Council Decision was adopted authorising the Commission to negotiate the revision of the International Health Regulations under the framework of the World Health Organisation, within its area of competence.

The Council Conclusions emerging from a conference on Healthy Lifestyles: Education, Information and Communication were adopted. These cover action on lifestyles monitoring and evaluation and impact assessment, aimed to help develop a European action plan to promote healthy lifestyles.

The Council Recommendation on Cancer Screening advocating mass cancer screening through clearly established and scientifically proven methods in quality controlled screening programmes were also adopted, as was the Council Resolution on Pharmaceuticals and Public Health Challenges—Focusing on the Patients.

The Council adopted Council Conclusions on Medical Devices which acknowledge the importance of medical devices in health and social care, endorse the good work done so far and invite further work to strengthen co-ordination, interpretation and implementation of the sectoral Directives in the interests of protecting public health.

The Council received information from the Italian Presidency on the threat posed by malaria. The French delegation presented information on raising tobacco tax to help reduce tobacco consumption and the Irish delegation presented proposals for the forthcoming Irish Presidency where the emphasis will be placed on cardiovascular disease and e-health matters.

No votes were taken at this Council.

Legislation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pages of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation the Department put through Parliament in 2002–03. [141169]

Maria Eagle: The Department did not sponsor any primary legislation during the 2002–03 Session (13 November 2002 to 20 November 2003).

The Department was responsible for the making of 97 General Statutory Instruments during the 2002–03 Session and these accounted for 725 pages of secondary legislation. The number of instruments produced includes some that consolidated and revoked previous instruments.

New Deal for Disabled People

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people have (a) registered with a new New Deal for Disabled People job broker, (b) been placed in work by a job broker and (c) achieved sustained work with a job broker's help since the extension of the New Deal for Disabled People. [141496]

Maria Eagle: New Deal for Disabled People was extended nationally in July 2001. Between July 2001 and September 2003, over 57,000 disabled people registered to find work; over 15,500 found work; and over 5,900 achieved sustained employment.

Notes:
1. Overall Performance and Resource Agreement (PRA) job entries in life of programme total over 20,000.
2. Sustained employment is defined as where a person remains in work for six months or more.

Winter Fuel Payment

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the number of eligible people who have not received backdated winter fuel payments for the first three years of the scheme; and what the value was of such payments. [143083]

Malcolm Wicks: According to our estimate around 1.9 million people could have been eligible for backdated payments for the first three years of the scheme and about 1.2 million people have now been paid. There are no cut-off dates for these retrospective payments.

It is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the numbers who have not claimed because the estimate of those newly eligible was based on sample data. It is up to the individual, where a claim is necessary, to decide whether or not to make that claim.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to introduce a cut-off date for claiming backdated Winter Fuel Payments for the first three years of the scheme. [143084]

Malcolm Wicks: There are no current plans to introduce a cut-off date for claiming backdated Winter Fuel Payments for the first three years of the scheme.

Income Support

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the income support needs of women carers who are pensioners. [143340]

Malcolm Wicks: Pension Credit replaced Minimum Income Guarantee from 6 October 2003. Around half of all pensioner households are eligible and stand to gain around £400 a year. Of those eligible, over half are single women (when partners are included almost two thirds of the people who will benefit from Pension Credit are women.)

Under Pension Credit additional amounts are included for carers. All those entitled to Carer's Allowance or treated as satisfying the qualifying conditions for the award benefit from the additional amount. A person may be entitled to Carer's Allowance even if it is not payable, (for example because of the overlapping benefit provisions). The rate is currently set at £25.10.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Commission for Equality and Human Rights

21. Mr. David: To ask the Minister for Women if she will make a statement on the Making it Happen consultation. [143338]

Jacqui Smith: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Women announced on 30 October the Government's intention to set up a Commission for Equality and Human Rights (CEHR). The CEHR will be key to realising the Government's vision of a fairer, more prosperous, more inclusive Britain based on equal opportunities for all and respect for the dignity and worth of each person. We have set up a Task Force to advise Government on the vision for the new body, and as a first task, assist us in the preparation of a White Paper to be published in the spring.

Domestic Violence

22. Andrew Selous: To ask the Minister for Women if she will make a statement on proposals to tackle domestic violence as it affects women. [143339]

Ms Hewitt: We introduced the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Bill in the House of Lords on 1 December 2003. This is the biggest overhaul of domestic violence legislation for 30 years.

Iraq

23. Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, if she will make a statement on action she is taking to ensure that Iraqi women play a full part in the leadership of Iraq. [143341]

Ms Hewitt: I have been very involved in supporting Iraqi women to play a full role in the leadership of their country.

I recently met Dr. Raja Khuzaai, one of the two female members of the Iraqi Governing Council, to discuss concrete ways to support women's full involvement in the emerging political structures.

I have also pledged my full support for the establishment of an Iraqi Women's Higher Council—a non-governmental advisory body on women's issues.

Sex Discrimination Act

24. Julie Morgan: To ask the Minister for Women what plans she has to propose amendments to the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 to introduce a public sector duty to promote equality between men and women. [143342]

25. Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister for Women when she will take steps to amend the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 to introduce a public sector duty to promote equality between men and women. [143343]

Jacqui Smith: The Government are taking forward a significant legislative agenda on equality matters, and they have committed themselves to introduce a duty on public bodies to promote equality of opportunity for women and men generally when parliamentary time allows.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Inflation Target

14. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of state for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact of the change in the Bank of England's inflation target from RPIX to HICP on the competitiveness of UK business. [143332]

Jacqui Smith: The move of target to the HICP will have no effect on the competitiveness of UK business.

Miners' Compensation

15. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, if she will make a statement on the legal fees charged to former coal miners who are claiming compensation for industrial illnesses. [143333]

Nigel Griffiths: The Department's position on solicitors' or claims handlers' charges is clear: we believe that all the compensation should go to the claimant without anyone taking a slice of it.

I deplore any attempt to charge sick miners or their widows and families for legal or administration expenses, which are covered by the DTI. I am asking the firms involved to reimburse sick miners' widows and families in such cases.

16. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received regarding solicitors charging success fees in coal health compensation claims. [143334]

Nigel Griffiths: My right hon. Friend and the Prime Minister have received angry representations from hon. Members and others.

I deplore any attempt to charge sick miners or their widows and families for legal or administration expenses that are covered by the DTI. I am asking the firms involved to reimburse sick miners widows and families in such cases.

Bangladesh

17. James Purnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on bilateral trade relations with Bangladesh. [143335]

Ms Hewitt: Bilateral trade in goods between the United Kingdom and Bangladesh in 2002 was worth £549.8 million, an increase of 5 per cent. over 2001. In the first nine months of 2003, bilateral trade in goods with Bangladesh amounted to £438 million, an increase of 8.2 per cent. over the same period in 2002.

Total UK exports to Bangladesh in 2002 were worth £66 million. Our principal exports are power generating machinery and equipment, dyeing, tanning and colouring materials and specialised industrial machinery and medical and pharmaceutical products.

Carbon Tax

18. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make it her policy to promote the introduction of a carbon tax to apply to the energy industry. [143496]

Ms Hewitt: Since this is a tax matter, any decisions are a matter for the Chancellor as part of the Budget process, taking account of the Government's economic, social and environmental objectives.

Bankruptcy

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many self-employed people have declared themselves bankrupt in each quarter since quarter one of 2002. [143150]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The number of self-employed people declared bankrupt in England and Wales from the first quarter of 2002 to the second quarter of 2003 is shown in the following table. Total bankruptcies are also provided to put the figures in context. The sub-division of total bankruptcies into self-employed and other categories is not yet available for third quarter 2003.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many self-employed individuals were declared bankrupt (a) in the third quarter of 2003 and (b) since 1 October, broken down by industrial sector; and how many (i) employees, (ii) unemployed people and those with no occupation, (iii) directors and promoters of companies and (iv) people whose occupation is unknown were declared bankrupt (A) in the third quarter of 2003 and (B) since 1st October. [143256]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 10 December 2003]: There were 7,217 bankruptcies as a whole in England and Wales in the third quarter of 2003. The requested breakdown into types of individual is published one quarter in arrears of the main series and is not yet available for third quarter 2003. The third quarter data will be published on 6 February 2004. The latest data published on 7 November 2003 cover up to the second quarter of 2003 and are attached.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will provide a breakdown by (a) age, (b) sex, (c) ethnicity, (d) region, (e) housing tenure and (f) household structure of individuals declared bankrupt in (i) each year since 1997 and (ii) each quarter in 2003. [143257]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The official bankruptcy figures for England and Wales are available broken down by the Official Receiver's Office that dealt with the case. There are no official breakdowns available by age, sex, ethnicity, housing tenure or household structure of the bankrupt.

The following table gives the total number of bankruptcies by regions classified according to groupings of Official Receivers' Offices falling within them from 1999 to 2002 and the first three quarters of 2003.

British Energy

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the pension rights of employees of British Energy following the financial restructuring of that company. [143119]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 9 December 2003]: British Energy's proposed restructuring is intended to restore the company to long-term viability in the private sector. The pension rights of its employees will remain the responsibility of the company as at present.

Correspondence

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will reply to the letter of 7 October from the hon. Member for West Worcestershire. [143433]

Ms Hewitt: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Trade, Investment and Foreign Affairs responded to the hon. Gentleman's letter of 7 October on 17 November. I will however be responding shortly about his query on EU subsidies on sugar.

E-business

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many businesses in the United Kingdom were trading online (a) in each quarter in 2003 and (b) in each year since 1997, broken down by region. [143140]

Mr. Timms: The DTI's International Benchmarking Study has been produced annually since 1997 and is used to measure the take-up and use of ICT's by business.

(a) No information is available on a quarterly basis.

(b) Trading online figures by region, are only available for the period 2000 to 2002 (earlier studies did not capture this type of information). Copies of the International Benchmarking Study for 2000 (URN 00/147), 2001 (URN 01/147) and 2002 (URN 02/147) are available from the Libraries of the House.

The 2003 study (URN 03/147) will be published on Thursday 11 December 2003. Copies will be available from the Libraries of the House.

Energy

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of (a) total energy production, (b) total energy primary consumption and (c) total final energy consumption in the (i) industrial sector, (ii) service sector, (iii) domestic sector and (iv) transport sector in each month in 2003. [143004]

Mr. Timms: The energy data requested are published on a quarterly basis and are currently available for the first two quarters of 2003.

Million tonnes of oil equivalent

	Q1 2003	Q2 2003
Total Indigenous Energy Production	73.0	63.0
Total Primary Consumption	71.6	55.1
Total Final Consumption	50.7	37.2
Of which:
Industrial Sector	10.6	8.0
Service Sector (including Agriculture)	6.4	4.2
Domestic Sector	17.9	8.6
Transport Sector	12.9	13.7

Further information is published in table 1.3a of Energy Trends, copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House. The latest edition was released on 25 September 2003; the next edition containing data for Q3 2003 will be released on 8 January 2004.

Hallmarking

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the future of United Kingdom Hallmarking in the context of discussions on the draft Directive on Articles of Precious Metals following the European Council of 27 November. [142129]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Following the decision of the Committee of Permanent Representatives not to send the draft Directive to the Council of Ministers on 27 November, the draft Directive has now effectively been shelved again, and UK hallmarking will continue as before. After the Accession countries join the EU next year (nine of the 10 have compulsory independent hallmarking systems) there will be more support for compulsory third party marking.

Indonesia

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the export of British military equipment to Indonesia. [143144]

Mr. MacShane: I have been asked to reply.

All export licence applications for Indonesia are rigorously assessed on a case by case basis against the Consolidated EU and National Arms Export Licensing Criteria, taking account of the circumstances prevailing at the time and other announced Government policies.

All strategic exports licensed to Indonesia in 2002 are set out in the Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls, which is available on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office website: www.fco.gov.uk/Trade-and-Investment/Export Controls. The report also shows that the approximate value of exports of UK military goods to Indonesia in 2002 was £2,130,000.

Legislation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many pages of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation her Department put through Parliament in 2002–03. [141121]

Ms Hewitt: My Department sponsored four Bills during the 2002–03 Session, which made a total of 632 pages once enacted.

In the case of secondary legislation, my Department was responsible for the making of 141 General Statutory Instruments which would have been considered either by the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments or the Select Committee on Statutory Instruments. These instruments made a total of 1,295 pages.

It should be noted that the instruments produced by my Department include many which consolidated and revoked previous instruments and which may have been produced at the prompting of Parliamentary Committees.

Medicines (Parallel Trade)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assessment she has made of the loss to pharmaceutical companies in the UK from parallel trade of medicines from abroad; [141698]

(2) what discussions she has had with pharmaceutical companies regarding the parallel trade in medicines from abroad. [141699]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I have been asked to reply.

In terms of the impact on national health service expenditure, information is not routinely collected on the source of products, but from the data currently available the Department of Health estimates that parallel imports saves the NHS in England approximately £60 million per year in the community sector. No estimate is available for the hospital sector.

The Government have not made their own assessment of the loss to pharmaceutical companies in the United Kingdom from parallel trade. The NHS does not reap the full benefit of the price differentials associated with parallel trade, as much of the difference is lost within the supply chain across Europe.

Ministers in the Department of Health meet representatives of the pharmaceutical industry frequently to discuss issues affecting that sector, including parallel trade in Europe. The most recent meeting was on 2 December, between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Health (Lord Warner) and representatives of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry.

Minimum Wage

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many completed successful investigations into underpayment of the national minimum wage there have been, broken down by constituency; and how much was recovered in each case. [142634]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Between the start of the minimum wage in April 1999 and September 2003 the Inland Revenue have carried out 8,471 successful investigations, in which underpayments of over £14.3 million was identified.

These statistics are not available at constituency level.

National Environment Research Council

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of its annual budget the National Environment Research Council has given to each university in England and Wales. [142911]

Ms Hewitt: The most recent details of the expenditure by university are set out in the NERC Annual Report and Accounts for the year 2002–03 on pages 44 and 45. During this period NERC received £224.513 million grant in aid. Copies of the NERC Annual Report and Accounts were laid before both Houses of Parliament on 16 July 2003 and are also available at http://www.nerc.ac.uk/publications/annualreport2003/pages.pdf.

Overtime

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate her Department has made of the total annual value of unpaid overtime by British workers. [142853]

Mr. Sutcliffe: According to the Labour Force Survey over the four quarters to summer 2003 the average number of employees who actually worked unpaid overtime in a week was 3.82 million. On average, they worked 7.7 hours of actual unpaid overtime a week and their gross hourly pay for the hours they did get paid for was £14.95. By multiplying these numbers together (and by multiplying by 52 weeks) we get an estimated value of annual actual unpaid overtime worked by employees in the UK of £22¾ billion. If managers and senior officials who receive a salary rather than an hourly rate are excluded then the value of annual unpaid overtime falls markedly, to £12½ billion. These workers (2.55 million) on average worked 7.1 hours of actual overtime per week and their gross hourly pay for the hours they did get paid for was £13.40.

Post Office Closures

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she is satisfied with the existing arrangements for consultation by the Post Office and Postwatch on proposed post office closures. [141591]

Mr. Timms: The Government do not have a role in the consultation process for post office closure proposals, which is laid out in the code of practice agreed between Post Office Ltd. and Postwatch. I attach great importance to the role of Postwatch in protecting the interest of customers when any closure is proposed. Final decisions on closure, after consideration of representations received, are an operational matter for Post Office Ltd.

Renewable Energy

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made towards her Department's target of the UK obtaining 5 per cent. of its electricity from renewable sources by 2003; what her assessment is of whether the target will be met within the stipulated time; what percentage of electricity has been produced from renewable sources in each year since the target was introduced; and which renewable sources have contributed in each year. [143125]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 10 December 2003]: Government Ministers acknowledged in the debates leading up to the introduction of the Renewables Obligation on 1 April 2002 that earlier hopes to obtain 5 per cent. of our electricity from renewable sources by 2003 would not be met. Such hopes had always depended on a high proportion of proposals awarded contracts under the old Non Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO) arrangements resulting in commissioned projects, and it had become apparent that this was not happening with the necessary speed.

The percentage of UK electricity coming from all renewable sources and the contributing categories of renewables in the years since 1999 are as follows:

	1999	2000	2001	2002
All renewables	2.76	2.75	2.62	2.96
of which:
Wind, wave and solar	0.23	0.25	0.25	0.32
Hydro	1.45	1.35	1.05	1.24
Biofuels	0.93	1.01	1.19	1.27
Wastes	0.15	0.14	0.13	0.13

The table includes all renewable energy sources, including those not eligible for the Renewables Obligation, such as large-scale hydro, since the 5 per cent. target pre-dated the Renewables Obligation.

The Government's target for renewable energy is for 10 per cent. of our electricity sales to come from renewable sources eligible for the Renewables Obligation by 2010.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of renewable energy in the United Kingdom is supplied by the hydro-electric industry. [143195]

Mr. Timms: In 2002, 42 per cent. of the renewable electricity generated in the UK was from hydro-electric schemes.

Royal Mail

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with Postcomm with regard to its proposals to redefine the Royal Mail's universal service obligations. [143024]

Mr. Timms: The Department has a regular dialogue with Postcomm on a wide range of postal issues concerning the postal market.

Shop Window Displays

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will extend to shop window displays the taste and decency controls that apply to advertising hoardings and advertisements on buses. [143492]

Jacqui Smith: No. Extension of the British Code of Advertising Practice would be for the Advertising Standards Authority, an independent body, to consider. However, it is already a criminal offence, under the Indecent Displays Control Act 1981, publicly to display indecent matter, which includes displays in shop windows.

Small Businesses

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the (a) start-up and (b) failure rate was for small businesses in (i) the North West Region, (ii) Merseyside and (iii) St. Helens in each year since 1992. [142715]

Nigel Griffiths: VAT registrations are the best official guide to start-ups. VAT de-registrations and insolvency statistics give an indication of failure rates and numbers.

The rates of businesses registering and de-registering for VAT in each calendar year from 1992 to 2002 in the North West Government Office Region, Merseyside and St. Helens, are as follows:

Start-ups: VAT Registrations per 10,000 resident adults[1]

Sun Chemicals

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the acquisition of the printing ink manufacturers Gibbons and Coates and Lovilleux by Sun Chemicals has been referred to the Competition Commission; and if she will make a statement. [143000]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 10 December 2003]: Ministers are no longer involved in decisions on whether to refer to the Competition Commission mergers which do not raise specified public interest considerations.

The Office of Fair Trading is not currently investigating this acquisition.

Working Time Directive

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the number of workers who work more than 48 hours a week but who have not signed the opt-out to the 48-hour average working week limit. [142606]

Mr. Sutcliffe: A survey of workers' experiences of the working time regulations conducted on behalf of my Department in 2001 estimated that three quarters of long hours workers had not signed a written agreement with their employer to opt-out of the 48-hour average working week limit. Also, the Second Work-Life Balance Study: Employees Survey carried out in early 2003 estimates that 70 per cent. of employees who usually or were contracted to work more than 48 hours per week had not signed a written agreement to opt-out of the 48-hour average working week limit. Some of these employees would not have been required to sign an opt-out as not all would have worked over 48 hours per week on average over the 17 week reference period, some would have been autonomous workers and others would have been in sectors or occupations that were excluded from the regulations at the time of the surveys.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are being taken to increase the awareness of the 48-hour average working week limit among workers. [142607]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Guidance on the Working Time Regulations, which includes a comprehensive chapter on the weekly working time limits is available on the Department of Trade and Industry website. In addition the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS) operate an inquiry helpline on all employment related legislation, including the Working Time Regulations. As part of their work, the enforcing agencies also play a role in educating employers and workers on the working time limits.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the numbers of workers who are unaware of the 48-hour average working week limit. [142608]

Mr. Sutcliffe: A survey of workers' experience of the working time regulations conducted on behalf of my department in 2001 estimated that around 30 per cent. of workers were unaware of laws regarding the number of hours people can work each week.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will estimate the number of workers whose conditions of employment included a requirement to opt out of the 48-hour average working week limit. [142609]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Employers are required to keep a record of workers who have opted out of the 48-hour average working week limit. As there is no requirement to report opt out agreements to anyone other than the parties concerned, there are no official estimates of the numbers of workers whose conditions of employment included a requirement to sign an opt out. However, workers who have agreed to opt out of the weekly working time limit retain the right to end the agreement at any time subject only to a notice period of a maximum of three months.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the future of the UK's individual opt-out from the Working Time Directive. [142847]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The European Commission's Communication on the opt-out is expected shortly. The Government hope that the Communication will present a range of options on the opt-out that can be discussed with UK social partners.

UK is firmly committed to reducing working hours, demonstrated by the work/life balance campaign, but the problem is workplace culture rather than a lack of laws. Work/Life balance is not just about long hours but about providing individual workers with choice over their hours or pattern of work and ensuring that they are not disadvantaged by their choice.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces Personnel

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel were serving in the (a) Army, (b) Royal Air Force and (c) Royal Navy at the beginning of each of the last three years; what the predicted numbers are for each of the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [142199]

Mr. Caplin: The numbers of personnel serving in the armed forces over the last three years are displayed in Tri-Service Publication (TSP) 1 'UK Regular Forces Strengths and Changes', a copy of which can be found in the House of Commons Library.

Each service sets manpower requirements at the level required to deliver the capabilities needed to meet their endorsed requirements. The requirements and the performance in meeting them are reported by the Defence Analytical Services Agency (DASA) both annually in UK Defence Statistics and quarterly under National Statistics arrangements. Copies of these can also be found in the House of Commons Library.

Army (Victimisation)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Army indicated when last questioned that they believed that (a) harassment, (b) discrimination and (c) bullying are problems in (i) their immediate area of work and (ii) the Army as a whole; what percentage of those responding this represents; what percentage of the actual strength this represents; and if he will make a statement. [142576]

Mr. Caplin: In response to the latest Serving Personnel Army Continuous Attitude Survey, 202 of those surveyed indicated they believed that harassment, discrimination or bullying were problems within their immediate work area; this represents 12 per cent. of those who responded to this question and 12 per cent. of those who returned questionnaires. In addition, 837 serving personnel indicated that they believed harassment, discrimination and bullying were problems within the British Army; this represents 51 percent of those who responded to this question and 50 per cent. of those who returned questionnaires.

The latest survey was undertaken in December 2002 and was sent to a four percent stratified random sample of the trained Army (excluding Gurkhas and Full Time Reserve Service).

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Army indicated when last questioned that they have been a victim of (a) harassment, (b) discrimination and (c) bullying in the Army; what percentage of those responding this represents; what percentage of the actual strength this represents; and if he will make a statement. [142577]

Mr. Caplin: In response to the latest Army Serving Personnel Continuous Attitude Survey, those members of the Army that indicated they had been subject to harassment, discrimination or bullying in the last 12 months are shown in the table:

Question	Number within previous 12 months	Percentage of those who answered the question	Percentage of those who returned a completed questionnaire
Racial Discrimination	37	2.3	2.2
Racial Harassment	26	1.6	1.6
Sex Discrimination	54	3.3	3.2
Sexual Harassment	28	1.7	1.7
Bullying	83	5.1	5.0

The latest survey was undertaken in December 2002 and was sent to a 4 per cent. stratified random sample of the trained Army (excluding Gurkhas and Full Time Reserve Service personnel); There may be an element of double counting in the number of occurrences, for example, one individual may have indicated they were subject to both racial discrimination and racial harassment, this having been counted twice.

Defence Finance

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his Department's budget was in (a) cash terms and (b) at 2002–03 prices for each year from 1997–98 to 2002–03; what his estimates are for each year from 2003–04 to 2005–06; and if he will make a statement . [142030]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence's outturn for 1998–99 to 2002–03 and plans for 2003–04 to 2005–06 at outturn prices are set out in The Government's Expenditure Plans for the MOD 2003–04 to 2005–06. These exclude the cost of unprogrammed operations and conflict prevention. At 2002–03 prices they are as follows:

£ million

	Outturn Prices	2002–03 Prices
1998–99	22,321	24,393
1999–2000	22,105	23,719
2000–01	23,170	24,440
2001–02	23,838	24,517
2002–03	24,382	24,382
2003–04	25,872	25,194
2004–05	26,590	25,240
2005–06	27,496	25,463

The MOD's cash outturn in 1997–98, as set out in The Government's Expenditure Plans for the MOD 2002–03 to 2003–04, was £20,748 million at outturn prices and £23,292 million at 2002–03 prices.

Both documents are available on the MOD's website: www.mod.uk

From 1997–98 to 2000–01 the Department was controlled in cash. Meaningful year-on-year comparison is not possible with the 2001–02 outturn in the light of the transition from cash to Stage 1 Resource Accounting and Budgeting (RAB) in that year. Near cash figures after the transition to Stage 2 RAB, from 2003–04 to 2005–06, are intended to allow comparison with the Stage 1 RAB figures in 2001–02 and 2002–03.

Procurement

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, (1) if he will list the major (a) defence estates upgrades and (b) information infrastructure upgrades that will be met from the Defence Procurement Agency budget, stating in each case (a) the in-service date and (b) the total projected cost of each project; and if he will make a statement; [143265]

(2) if he will list the amounts (a) spent on procurement through the Defence Procurement Agency in each year since 1997 and (b) projected to be spent in each year up to 2012, indicating in each case the percentage of the defence budget represented in each case; and if he will make a statement. [143267]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total estimated cost of (a) refurbishment of western jetties, (b) Navystar, (c) Access, (d) LITS, (e) EMMA, Phase 1 and (f) RAFT at Devonport, stating in each case (i) the in-service date and (ii) which budget line the expense will be drawn from; and if he will make a statement. [143266]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Depleted Uranium

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the UNEP depleted uranium environmental survey will be completed; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [142320]

Mr. Caplin: The timing of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) environmental field survey of Iraq, of which a survey into depleted uranium is an element, will depend upon the local security situation. However, UNEP expect to commence the field survey in spring 2004. I am unable to say at present when the proposed depleted uranium survey will be complete.

No discussions have taken place about publication but I would anticipate a copy to be made available to the Library of the House.

Mental Health

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which companies entered the competitive bidding process to provide psychiatric treatment and rehabilitation to members of the armed forces previously treated at the Duchess of Kent Psychiatric Hospital; and what assessment was made of the political affiliation of the board members of the bidding companies. [143485]

Mr. Caplin: Five companies responded to the initial tender advertisements that appeared in the Official Journal European Community (OJEC) Services Directive and the MOD Contracts Bulletin in February 2003. Of these, four attended an Industry Day held on the 15 April 2003, and subsequently three received Invitations to Tender: Cygnet Health Care, The Priory Group, and Affinity Health Care. The first two of these submitted final tender responses.

Following detailed evaluation of the tender bids, The Priory's tender was considered the most technically compliant and they were accordingly awarded the contract.

No assessment was made of the political affiliation of the bidding companies. The Ministry of Defence's competitive tendering arrangements do not take such factors into account.

Missile Defence

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the US Department of Defence on the technical issues to do with the UK sites encountered in developing missile defence. [142112]

Mr. Hoon: None, though officials have a wide range of contacts with US experts on technical matters relating to missile defence. As I told the House on 5 February 2003, Official Report, column 11WS, the Government have agreed to the upgrading of the early warning radar at RAF Fylingdales for missile defence purposes. UK and US officials are discussing the detailed plans for this upgrade, and we expect to finalise the necessary bilateral agreement shortly.

Navigational Aids

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what navigational aids are employed by the Ministry of Defence; where they are stationed; and at what cost, in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [141742]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence uses both sea and land based navigational aids. For sea based aids the Department currently operates four vessels used to lay/recover and undertake annual maintenance of some 205 navigational buoys, 120 moorings and 15 targets around the coast of the British Isles. The Department also maintains 12 Oceanographic Data Acquisition System buoys for the Meteorological Office. The sea based navigational aids are provided to mark channels, boundaries or hazards contained within the dockyard ports, trials ranges and areas of interest to MOD.

This work is to be included in a PPP/PFI Acquisition programme for future provision of Marine Services, and I am withholding details of expenditure in accordance with Exemption 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (Effective management and operations of the public service).

The requested information on land based navigational aids will take some time to collate and I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Northern Ireland Veterans

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many claims have been made to the Veterans' Agency for post traumatic stress disorder-related illnesses attributed to service in Northern Ireland since 1973; [142741]

(2) how many war pensions are being paid to members of the armed forces injured during their service in Northern Ireland. [142745]

Mr. Caplin: The information is not available in the format requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Northern Ireland veterans have taken their own lives (a) after and (b) during their service in Northern Ireland since 1973. [142742]

Mr. Caplin: Between 1984 and 2002 there have been 45 deaths among Regular Service personnel serving in Northern Ireland recorded with a suicide verdict or an open verdict from a coroner. During this period there were three other deaths among Regular Service personnel serving in Northern Ireland for whom we are waiting for a coroner's verdict. Information on deaths prior to 1984 is not held centrally. Information on other Service personnel who may have served in Northern Ireland, but died in Service elsewhere is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information on deaths of Service personnel after they have left the Service is also not generally available to the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received from associations or organisations specifically set up to support Northern Ireland veterans. [142860]

Mr. Caplin: The Ministry of Defence has not received any reports from organisations specifically set up to support Northern Ireland veterans. The recently formed Northern Ireland Veterans Association has been invited to attend the next Veterans Plenary Forum on 24 March 2004 which I chair as Minister for Veterans.

Nuclear Deterrent

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances it would be necessary to replace Trident; and what implications this would have for the renewal of Article III of the Mutual Defence Agreement. [142319]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to paragraph 3.11 of the Defence White Paper (Cm 6041) which was laid before the House on 11 December, in which the Government stated that

> 'decisions on whether to replace Trident are not needed this Parliament but are likely to be required in the next one. We will therefore continue to take appropriate steps to ensure that the range of options for maintaining a nuclear deterrent capability is kept open until that decision point'.

Implications for the 1958 Mutual Defence Agreement, or other relevant agreements, are therefore hypothetical at this stage.

Reserve Forces

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to encourage more employers to enable their workforces to participate in the reserve forces. [142985]

Mr. Caplin: The SaBRE (Supporting Britain's Reservists and Employers) campaign aims to win and maintain the support of employers for the Volunteer Reserves. This is achieved through a combination of highly targeted direct marketing and the establishment of a network of Employer Support Executives to focus employer support at the regional level. We are confident that SaBRE succeeds in generating increased levels of interest in, and support for, our Volunteer Reserve forces, and demonstrate to employers the benefits of employing reservists in their organisations.

In addition, as part of the overall process of identifying lessons learned from all aspects of Operation Telic, we will be reviewing the employer support package, including the right to claim financial assistance to cover the additional costs resulting from the call out of a member of staff.

Also as a result of our experiences during Operation Telic we intend to foster greater involvement of employers in "intelligent mobilisation" in the future. This process recognises that, if there is time, it is better to seek volunteers for specific posts whose employers have given permission for them to be mobilised. Where possible, we will also endeavour to provide reasonable notice of mobilisation plans and improve the flow of information to employers about mobilised Reservists.

Warships

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether HMS Bridport has been placed in (a) reserve and (b) extended readiness. [143258]

Mr. Ingram: The terms 'in reserve' and 'extended readiness' are broadly similar, although the latter is in more common usage and describes the very low level readiness state in which HMS Bridport is currently held.

CABINET OFFICE

Art Acquisition

Norman Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much his Department has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by his Department since 1997 was; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by his Department through sales of its works of art has been since 1997. [142364]

Mr. Alexander: The Cabinet Office has not spent any monies on the acquisition of works of art since 1997. No revenue has been raised by the Cabinet Office through sales of its works of art.

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office whether it is the policy of his Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142812]

Mr. Alexander: It is Cabinet Office policy to purchase on the basis of value for money. Whilst we have no specific policy on purchasing Fair Trade products, we encourage our contracted catering providers to purchase Fair Trade products where commercially practicable and viable.

Hutton Inquiry

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office for what reason the document 'Submissions of the Government to the Inquiry' (CAB/28/0002–0017), submitted to the Hutton Inquiry, was not published; and if he will make a statement. [142056]

Mr. Leslie: I have been asked to reply.

Lord Hutton conducted the inquiry on the basis that all the evidence given by witnesses at the inquiry and all the documents referred to in evidence, together with the oral statements of Counsel to the inquiry, would be made public, but that the written submissions of the parties would not be made public, pending the publication of his report. After the publication of the report Lord Hutton will decide whether some or all of the written submissions should be published.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electoral Fraud (Northern Ireland) Act

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Electoral Fraud (Northern Ireland) Act 2002 in combating electoral fraud in Northern Ireland. [142692]

Mr. Spellar: We are satisfied that the Electoral Fraud (Northern Ireland) Act 2002 has proved to be successful in combating electoral fraud and has improved public confidence in the electoral process. Furthermore I am also pleased to see that a report, published by the Electoral Commission on 9 December, concludes that the register more accurately reflects those entitled to be registered than the previous register.

However, we also recognise that work still needs to be done to ensure that all those entitled to have the opportunity to register. We will continue to work closely with the Electoral Office and the Electoral Commission to ensure this happens.

Fire Service

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) part-time and (b) full-time fire officers were serving in the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement on Fire Service recruitment in Northern Ireland. [142674]

Angela Smith: The numbers of whole-time and retained fire fighters serving in the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade since 1997 are as follows:

	Whole-time	Retained
1997	918	975
1998	909	971
1999	881	960
2000	879	798
2001	894	799
2003	887	788

The Northern Ireland Fire Brigade has just completed one of the most extensive retained recruitment campaigns in the UK fire service, having recruited 126 retained fire-fighters over 41 stations in recent months. A further retained recruitment campaign will be launched in January 2004.

The Brigade is currently short-listing candidates to fill whole-time vacancies.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many attacks on firefighters there have been in each Fire Authority district in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; what steps he is taking to reduce such attacks; and if he will make a statement. [142696]

Angela Smith: The information requested by the hon. Lady is set out in the following table. Information is available at this level of detail only from 2001.

The reported increase in 2002 is partly the result of improved recording procedures. Although the reduction this year is welcome, attacks on firefighters—and other staff in the emergency services—are criminal offences and utterly unacceptable. I have taken every opportunity to condemn them, and continue to do so in the strongest possible terms.

This year I have made available to the fire and ambulance services special additional funding, totalling £400,000, to help them to raise public awareness that such attacks endanger not only their crews but also those members of the public they are trying to help.

I am grateful to those elected representatives and community leaders who have been using their influence to reinforce this message, and I urge them to continue to do so.

Hare Coursing

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will meet (a) the Game Conservancy Trust and (b) Professor Montgomery of the School of Biology at Queen's University, Belfast, to discuss management of the hare population in Northern Ireland. [142937]

Angela Smith: As Minister with responsibility for environmental matters, including issues relating to management of the Irish hare population, I would be prepared to consider any request for a meeting on the issue.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effect of (a) legal coursing on the recovery of the hare population and (b) appropriate land management by coursing clubs and responsible hunting groups on hare conservation; and if he will make a statement. [142938]

Angela Smith: No such assessments have been made.

The Species Action Plan (SAP) for the Irish Hare, published by the Environment and Heritage Service of the Department of the Environment in October 2000, contains a number of steps to encourage all relevant landowners to adopt hare and habitat management practices that will contribute to the SAP objective to double the population of Irish Hares, over as wide an area as possible, by 2010.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the reliability of evidence for the decline in the Irish hare; what assessment he has made of the effect of (a) setting up a monitoring system and (b) developing current hunting, shooting and coursing practices to ensure they cannot have an unsustainable impact on hare numbers; and if he will make a statement. [142939]

Angela Smith: The Irish Hare Species Action Plan, published by the Department of the Environment in 2000, identified the need for regular surveys of the Irish hare population, building on the baseline population for the species established by research commissioned by the Department from Queen's University of Belfast (QUB) in 1997. This was followed by The Northern Ireland Irish Hare Survey 2002, also carried out on the Department's behalf by QUB. Both reports confirmed that Irish hare numbers are low. I am satisfied that this research provides as accurate a population estimate as can be made for such an elusive and uncommon animal.

The Department intends to carry out regular monitoring throughout Northern Ireland in order to detect future trends in Irish hare numbers. The next survey is scheduled for spring 2004.

No assessment has been made of the effect on hare numbers of developing current hunting, shooting and coursing practices to ensure they cannot have an unsustainable impact on hare numbers. These practices are subject to the provisions of the Game Preservation Act (Northern Ireland) 1928, as amended. I recently published notice under the Act, of a proposal to introduce a temporary ban on the killing or taking, or the sale or purchase of Irish hares. This is intended to allow time to consider, within a current review of the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985, whether there is a need to strengthen the statutory protection afforded to the Irish hare.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what scientific evidence he has assessed that supports the case for banning hare hunting and coursing in Northern Ireland; for what reason such evidence was not circulated in detail to concerned parties; and if he will make a statement. [142941]

Angela Smith: Research carried out at the Queen's University of Belfast (QUB) reported in 1997 that the population of the Irish Hare was at low density in Northern Ireland.

This assessment was followed up by a research study, "The Northern Ireland Irish Hare 'Lepus timidus hibernicus' Survey 2002", commissioned by the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) of the Department of the Environment and also carried out by QUB. It reported that Irish Hares were widespread but occurred at a low density of about one hare per kilometre square. The report of this study included the recommendation that the Department should consider removal of the Irish Hare from the quarry list and giving protection under the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985. This recommendation is among the issues being considered in a current review of the Wildlife Order.

I considered the research and survey report in the context of the Irish Hare Species Action Plan published by EHS in 2000, which has among its objectives a target to double the Irish Hare population, over as wide an area as possible, by 2010. The inconsistency between this policy objective and the continuing practice of hunting and coursing Irish Hares led to the proposal for a temporary ban on the killing or taking, or the sale or purchase, of Irish Hares, pending the outcome of the Wildlife Order review.

A seminar delivering the results of the 2002 Survey was held in January 2003 at Queen's University Belfast. Interested parties were invited to attend. Following this seminar the full text of the report was made available on the EHS website, (http://www.ehsni.gov.uk/pubs/publications/Irish HareSurvey2002.pdf) where it remains available, together with the Irish Hare Species Action Plan. Copies of both documents have also been placed in the Library.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of all the evidence and advice given to him by his Department on the issue of the ban on hare-hunting. [143126]

Angela Smith: I have placed in the Library copies of:

Biodiversity in Northern Ireland—Species Action Plans—Irish Hare, Chough and Curlew, published by the Environment and Heritage Service of the Department of the Environment in 2000; and

The Northern Ireland Irish Hare "Lepus timidus hibernicus" Survey 2002 by Dr. Jane Preston, Dr. Paulo Prodohl, Dr. Alex Portig and Professor Ian Montgomery of the Queen's University of Belfast; commissioned by the Environment and Heritage Service.

These documents provide evidence of the size of the Irish Hare population and assess the reasons for the decline in its numbers. They were the principal sources of information on the low numbers of Irish Hare on which I took the decision to refuse a licence to a coursing club to net hares and to propose the making of a special protection order to introduce a temporary ban on killing and taking Irish Hares, pending the outcome of a current review of the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985, which will examine, among other things, whether the Irish Hare should be placed on the list of species that are protected at all times.

Milk

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with representatives from Northern Ireland's dairies in relation to milk prices. [142671]

Mr. Pearson: I have had no formal discussions recently with representatives from Northern Ireland's dairies in relation to milk prices. This is a reserved matter and it is not Government policy to interfere in the operation of normal market forces. I note, however, that average producer price for raw milk sold in Northern Ireland in October 2003, at 21.18 pence per litre, was 15.6 per cent. higher than the price of 18.32 pence per litre realised in October 2002.

NHS Direct

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce NHS Direct to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [143817]

Angela Smith: The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has sought to introduce a pilot project based on the NHS Direct concept in the Western Health and Social Services Board area to test the system locally. Two bids were made for Executive Programme Funds to support this initiative but these were unsuccessful. The Department is currently engaged in the development of a Primary Care Strategy Framework document that will identify those issues that matter to people who use the service. The Strategy will determine the priority to be accorded to various initiatives to be introduced to primary care over the next 20 years.

Police Act 1997

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date Part V of the Police Act 1997 will commence in Northern Ireland. [142905]

Jane Kennedy: There is no date for the commencement of Part V of the Police Act 1997 in Northern Ireland as yet.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether an implementation plan exists for the commencement of Part V of the Police Act 1997 in Northern Ireland. [142906]

Jane Kennedy: We are considering how best to implement Part V of the Police Act 1997 in Northern Ireland and are exploring a number of options. It is important to note that the Pre-Employment Consultancy Service will continue to check the suitability of those seeking to work with children pending the implementation of Part V of the Police Act.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether Part V of the Police Act 1997 will be commenced in tandem with the Protection of Children and Vulnerable Adults (NI) Order 2003. [142907]

Jane Kennedy: We are considering how best to implement Part V of the Police Act 1997 and officials from the DHSSPS(NI) and other relevant NI departments will be involved in such considerations.

Potato Ring Rot

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to prevent the spread of ring rot to Northern Ireland. [142672]

Mr. Pearson: The recent finding of potato ring rot in Wales poses a significant threat to the potato industry in Northern Ireland. Stringent preventative measures are already in place to minimise the risk of this disease spreading to Northern Ireland. The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD) has increased its existing preventative actions. Its response to the current incident has included:

checking and sampling of crops produced from GB seed potatoes this year;

further targeted sampling of GB seed potatoes due to be planted in Northern Ireland in 2004; increased monitoring by inspectors at the ports of Belfast, Larne and Warrenpoint of all seed and ware potato imports; increased inspections at premises of importers and processors, including inspections of stocks and checks on sources and reliability;

the issue of letters to merchants and importers seeking information on imports. Letters will also be sent to all growers; and meetings with stakeholder representatives and key industry individuals to provide scientific information on the disease and advice on new preventative measures.

Student Finance

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with representatives from Northern Ireland's universities in relation to tuition fees. [142694]

Jane Kennedy: I have had no discussions with representatives from Northern Ireland's Universities in relation to tuition fees. If student fees are increased in England, I will consider the implications for Northern Ireland with my officials and the relevant stakeholders, with a view to bringing forward proposals for consultation.

Working Time Directive

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the implementation of the European Union Working Time Directive in Northern Ireland. [142688]

Jane Kennedy: The European Directive on Working Time (93/104/EC) and the related Directive (94/33/EC) on the protection of young people at work were given effect in Northern Ireland by the Working Time Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1998, S.R. 1998/386. Subsequently, there have been two significant amendments to the 1998 Regulations, both of which were made this year, namely:

the Working Time (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003, S.R. 2003/119, which implement certain provisions of the 1994 Directive which had not previously been introduced (maximum working day and working week, and restrictions on night work by young workers)

the Working Time (Amendment No. 2) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003, S.R. 2003/330 which implemented a further Directive known as the Horizontal Amending Directive (2000/34/EC). This extended working time provisions to previously excluded sectors (i.e. air, rail, road, sea, inland waterway and lake transport, sea fishing, other work at sea and doctors in training). The provisions for doctors in training will not apply until 1 August 2004.

Certain provisions of the Horizontal Amending Directive, which are being given effect on a UK-wide basis, have yet to be implemented.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action allied troops in Afghanistan are taking to (a) counter opium production and (b) interdict opium trade. [141899]

Mr. Ingram: I have been asked to reply.

International forces in Afghanistan are helping to train the Afghan Transitional Administration's security forces and, in Kabul, to assist in maintaining security. By doing so, troops of both the coalition and the International Security Assistance Force contribute towards the counter-narcotics programmes of civilian law enforcement and development agencies. They also help the Afghans themselves create the structures through which they can implement more effectively President Karzai's commitment to deal with both opium fanning and trafficking in his country.

Algeria

Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what mechanism will be put in place to monitor Algeria's adherence to the human rights principles laid out in the EU/Algeria Association Agreement, once the Agreement is ratified. [143127]

Mr. Rammell: Under Articles 92–95 of the EU/Algeria Association Agreement, an Association Council will be established which shall meet at ministerial level once a year and examine any major issues arising within the framework of the agreement.

Article 2 states that human rights shall constitute an essential element of this agreement.

Ascension Island

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will amend the 1956 Bahamas Long Range Proving Ground Agreement in order to charge rent to the United States for their occupation of Wide Awake Airfield and additional land exclusively occupied by US personnel on Ascension Island; and if he will arrange for the rent to be made payable to the Ascension Island administration. [143279]

Mr. Rammell: We have no plans to amend the 1956 Bahamas Long Range Proving Ground Agreement.

Bangladesh

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Bangladesh concerning (a) attacks upon and (b) intimidation of (i) Christians and (ii) Hindus by militant Islamist groups. [142602]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Officials from the British High Commission in Dhaka regularly raise discrimination against religious minorities and other human rights concerns with the authorities. While I have not personally raised the issue, our High Commissioner did so with the Acting Foreign Secretary on 6 November 2003.

Colombia

Sandra Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he proposes to ensure that funding to Colombia from (a) the EU and (b) the United Kingdom is used for the purposes for which it was given in the light of the Colombian Government's decision to merge the programmes of Plan Colombia, Social Solidarity Network and the Colombian Agency for International Cooperation and to create a single programme instead. [142972]

Mr. Rammell: We understand the merger is to form a single coordinating agency rather than a single programme of activity.

The UK's contribution to the EU Aid Budget to Colombia is some 19 per cent. Projects are monitored by the European Commission's office in Bogota. The workings of the merger are still settling down and it will be some time before things are completely clear. The European Commission are assessing the situation.

Funding for other UK assistance to Colombia is not channelled through any of these organisations. Our projects are implemented by non-governmental organisations, UN agencies or other Colombian Government bodies. We always ensure the reliability and probity of all our partners.

Sandra Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy not to support any process of demobilisation of the paramilitaries in Colombia that fails to take into account the rights of the civilian population to truth, justice and reparation. [142973]

Mr. Rammell: Before agreeing to support any process of demobilisation we would carefully consider all aspects, including the need to take into account the rights of the civilian population to truth, justice and reparation. We have stressed to the Colombian Government that in pursuing a peace process with any of the illegal armed groups that there should be no general amnesty or pardon for those who have committed human rights violations, and that all negotiations should be open, transparent and treated on the same basis.

Sandra Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the British Government will give to human rights defenders in Colombia; and if it will provide on going financial support to the UN Office on Human Rights. [142974]

Mr. Rammell: We support publicly the role of human rights defenders, other NGOs and members of civil society in Colombia. We stress the importance of the role they should be given in the reform process, the need for continued dialogue, and for farther urgent and effective measures to protect them, at every opportunity. We will continue to do so.

We continue to provide financial support to the Office of UN High Commissioner for Human Rights in Bogota.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent statements by ministers in the Colombian government that (a) the London Declaration of July 2003 is not binding and (b) the Colombian government will not be complying with all the UN recommendations on human rights because national sovereignty is more important than international commitments; and how the British Government will work with the EU to monitor full implementation of the UN recommendations. [143187]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer of 10 December 2003]: None of the governments who attended the London Meeting on International Support for Colombia are bound by the London Declaration. It is a declaration not a legal document. Nevertheless, political commitments were made at the Meeting which are reflected in the Declaration. We continue to stress to the Colombian Government the importance of keeping to these commitments.

We are working with EU partners through the Working Group in Bogota of the governments who attended the London Meeting to monitor implementation of the London Declaration, including UN recommendations. We have requested an end of year evaluation.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications of recent accusations made by members of the Colombian military against (a) the displaced civilian populations of the Cacarica River basin and Jiguamiendo, (b) the ombudsman of Cacarica, (c) Peace Brigades International and (d) Justice and Peace for the Colombian Government's compliance with commitments they gave in July at the London Conference. [143198]

Mr. Rammell: We have stressed to the Colombian Government that such blanket public accusations are inappropriate and run the risk of being counterproductive. I made this clear to the Colombian Foreign Minister when I met her in September in New York and issued a press statement following the meeting. If there are credible allegations of impropriety by individual organisations, they should be investigated by due judicial process.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will reply to the letter to him dated 7 October 2003 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Abu Nayem. [142951]

Mr. Mullin: I would like to apologise to my right hon. Friend for not having replied to his letter of 7 October to my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary about Mr. Abu Nayem.

As a result of an administrative error a package containing a number of my right hon. Friend's letters was lost in transit between the Foreign Secretary's office and UKvisas, the department responsible for entry clearance matters arising overseas. The letters that were lost have been identified and copies have been sent to UKvisas. I can assure my right hon. Friend that the Foreign Secretary will write to him in the next few days on this case.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when will he reply to the letter to him dated 7 October 2003 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mr. Mukhtar Ahmed Rana. [142952]

Mr. Mullin: I can confirm that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary replied on 3 December 2003 to my right hon. Friend's letter of 6 October 2003 with regard to Mr. Mukhtar Ahmed Rana.

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will reply to the letters from the right hon. Member for North-East Hampshire of 7 April and 22 July, regarding his constituent Dr. McGarry. [143750]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The reply was sent to the right hon. Member on 10 December 2003. I apologise for the delay in replying.

Eritrea

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the government of Eritrea concerning persecution of evangelical and Pentecostal Christians. [142603]

Mr. Mullin: I raised this issue most recently with Eritrea's Foreign Minister when he called on me in London on 1 December. On the same day, our ambassador in Asmara raised religious freedom with Eritrea's Director for Europe. Previously, I had raised this issue with the Eritrean ambassador when he called on me on 11 September 2003.

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is the policy of his Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on Departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142806]

Mr. Rammell: Foreign and Commonwealth Office purchasing policy is in accordance with the Government's Public Purchasing Consolidated Guidelines, which require the procurement of goods and services to be based on value for money and that they should be acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary.

Fair trade products are widely available in our offices. Almost all tea and coffee provided for official meetings is fair trade and our canteens and restaurants sell fair trade products including coffee, tea, chocolate and muesli bars.

Former Soviet Union

Andrew Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to aid former Soviet states in the decommissioning of nuclear weapons, devices and delivery systems. [142280]

Mr. MacShane: The Government published on 5 December the First Annual Report on the United Kingdom's contribution to the G8 Global Partnership. The Report details the work under way to address the nuclear, chemical and biological legacies of the former Soviet Union.

At the 2002 G8 Summit at Kananaskis in Canada, leaders pledged to provide up to US$20 billion over 10 years for a new Global Partnership against the spread of weapons and materials of mass destruction. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that the UK would make available up to US$750 million to fund projects in pursuit of these objectives.

Considerable progress has already been made as a result of close co-operation between FCO, DTI and MOD in conjunction with the Russian Federation and other countries of the former Soviet Union, Central and Eastern Europe as well as funding partners. The signing of bilateral agreements with the Russian Federation during President Putin's State Visit in June this year has helped to consolidate a firm foundation for the UK's programme of assistance.

The report outlines the specific projects in which the United Kingdom is involved. These include the dismantling of two Oscar class nuclear submarines and related projects; constructing a spent nuclear fuel facility, preparing the groundwork for the safe removal and storage of some 21,000 spent nuclear fuel assemblies at a former Russian Navy site, and constructing the infrastructure at a major chemical weapons destruction facility.

Copies of the report are available in the Library of the House. Further reports will be published annually setting out the progress achieved in the work being undertaken by the United Kingdom.

Hong Kong

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent elections in Hong Kong. [142667]

Mr. Rammell: District council elections took place in Hong Kong on 23 November 2003. Over a million people voted, 44 per cent. of those registered to do so, compared with a 36 per cent. turnout in the previous district council elections in 1999. The parties that secured the most out of the 400 seats available were the Democratic Party with 95 and the Democratic Alliance for the Betterment of Hong Kong (DAB), which secured 62 seats. The Chief Executive of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region is entitled to choose up to an additional 102 people to sit in various district councils but has yet to announce these.

We continue to follow developments in Hong Kong closely. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary continues to report regularly to the House on the implementation of the 1984 Sino-British Joint Declaration on Hong Kong. The last such report, which covered the first six months of this year, was published in July (Cmnd 5864).

Immigration Adjudicator

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many persons applied for the post of immigration adjudicator; and when he intends to announce the name of the successful candidate. [142934]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: 86 people applied for the post of Independent Monitor for Entry Clearance Refusals Without the Right of Appeal. As my hon. Friend will now be aware, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced the appointment of Fiona Lindsley in a written statement to the House on 1 December 2003, Official Report, column 53WS.

Iraq

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many schools have been renovated by coalition forces in Iraq since 1 May. [141281]

Mr. Rammell: Since 1 May, UK forces have renovated 91 schools in Iraq, and are working on a further 140. We have no information about schools renovated by other Coalition forces.

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the build up to the war with Iraq and subsequently, he permitted British Intelligence Services to intercept diplomatic communications between member states of the United Nations. [143035]

Mr. Straw: In common with most governments, we do not go into detail about intelligence-related issues, including interception. I can, however, give an assurance that the only purposes for which interception may be permitted are set out in legislation: national security, safeguarding economic well-being and the prevention and detection of serious crime.

Israel

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support the implementation of the Geneva agreement between representatives of Israel and the Palestinian territories. [141814]

Mr. Rammell: The recognition and implementation of any final status agreement is for the Israeli Government and the Palestinian Authority. But, as my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in his Statement on the Geneva Accord on 1 December "I would like to commend this initiative and the debate that it has stimulated among Israelis and Palestinians, and more widely in the International Community. I hope that this initiative will also show that Israelis and Palestinians remain capable of finding partners for peace and working together, and encourage a return to the negotiating table.

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to encourage the Palestinian Authority to take steps to prevent further suicide attacks in Israel. [143131]

Mr. Rammell: The UK, nationally and with EU partners, continues to urge the Palestinian Authority to fulfil its roadmap commitments on security, and intensify its efforts to tackle groups and individuals engaging in terrorist activity. The UK is also providing practical support to the Palestinian Authority to help them to rebuild the capacity of their security forces to tackle terrorism.

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to persuade the Israeli Government to (a) stop further construction of the separation wall in the West Bank and (b) prevent more settlements being built there. [143037]

Mr. Rammell: The Government have urged the Government of Israel to re-route the fence away from Palestinian areas and to freeze settlement activity. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary have made clear our concerns to the Israeli Prime Minister and Foreign Minister on a number of occasions. My noble Friend Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean raised these matters with the Israeli Foreign Minister during her visit to Israel on 30 September, and with the Israeli Minister for National Infrastructure on 29 October in London. She also raised our concerns about the fence with the Israeli Ambassador on 22 October.

Continuing illegal Israeli settlement activity and the building of the fence on Palestinian land threaten the prospects for a two-state solution and is an obstacle to peace. Israel should reverse its settlements policy and end land confiscation for the construction of the fence.

Kyoto Protocol

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Russian Government regarding its decision not to seek ratification of the Kyoto Protocol. [142624]

Mr. Rammell: President Putin stated at the World Conference on Climate Change in Moscow in early October that the Russian Government was still analysing the economic implications of ratifying the Kyoto Protocol. The statement made by President Putin's economic adviser on 2 December does not appear to be an official statement of policy, and we look forward to a decision from the Russian Government when it has completed its assessment of the Kyoto Protocol.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, and my hon. Friend the Minister for Environment and Agri-Environment are attending the ninth Conference of the Parties to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change in Milan, where Parties will be putting the finishing touches on preparations for entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol. Ministerial colleagues will continue to press their Russian counterparts on the importance of Kyoto ratification.

Lockerbie Bombing

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what the total value is of the compensation paid by the Libyan Government to the families of victims of the Lockerbie bombing; [143005]

(2) whether payments to solicitors acting for families of the Lockerbie victims were paid under contingency fee agreements for percentage payments; [143006]

(3) if he will make a statement on the level of fees charged by solicitors in the Lockerbie case; and what action he is taking to limit such fees; [143007]

(4) what steps he is taking to ensure that the families of the Lockerbie victims receive the highest possible proportion of compensation payments made. [143008]

Mr. Rammell: Libya has agreed to pay $10 million per family in compensation for the Lockerbie bombing, payable in three tranches of $4 million, $4 million and $2 million on, respectively, lifting of UN sanctions against Libya, lifting of US bilateral sanctions against Libya, and removal of Libya from the United States' list of States involved in terrorism. The Government is not privy to the fee arrangements made between solicitors and their clients in the Lockerbie case and has no standing in this issue. The question of the level of fees charged by solicitors is entirely a matter for them and their clients.

Mr. Jafar Dhia Jafar

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons Mr. Jafar Dhia Jafar has been refused permission to attend a meeting of the Royal Society in London; and if he will make a statement. [142171]

Mr. Mullin: I am withholding the information requested under exemption 5 of Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

It is not our practice to disclose details of the individual entry clearance cases in a public forum. However, I will write to the hon. Member with regard to this matter.

India

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to announce the name of the new director of visa operations for India. [142970]

Mr. Mullin: It is not normal procedure formally to announce such appointments. However, I will write to my hon. Friend.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact on the political situation in Zimbabwe of that country's suspension from the Commonwealth. [141904]

Mr. Mullin: Robert Mugabe's decision to withdraw Zimbabwe from the Commonwealth highlights the increasing isolation of his regime. It will do nothing to ease the current crisis and shows how far ZANU (PF) has moved since it signed up to the Commonwealth's principles for good governance agreed at Harare in 1991. Once Zimbabwe has returned to democracy it will be welcomed back into the Commonwealth.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Housing

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) how many private sector housing initiatives have been launched in each of the last 10 years; and what local authority funds have been committed to private sector housing initiatives (a) in each of the last 10 years and (b) since April 2002; [141019]

(2) how many private sector housing initiatives have been launched since April 2002. [141020]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and its predecessor departments have launched many private sector housing initiatives over the last 10 years to improve the condition and management of the stock, and the rights and responsibilities of those who occupy it. These include:

measures enabling local authorities to adopt schemes to register houses in multiple occupation, and improve their condition, in 1996. These will be succeeded by licensing provisions in the forthcoming Housing Bill;

the sustainable home ownership initiative, in partnership with the lending and insurance industries, to improve the quality and take up of mortgage protection payment insurance, in 1999;

new, wider powers for local authorities to provide assistance to owners and tenants to repair, improve and adapt their homes, in 2002; improved rights for leaseholders, including a new right to manage, improved enfranchisement and lease extension procedures and greater rights against unreasonable service charges, from 2002; pilot projects in five areas of low demand to help local authorities make best use of existing powers to improve the condition and management of the private rented sector, in 2003.

In addition, a number of initiatives have been piloted during this period, including Home Information Packs and the Tenancy Deposit Scheme. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has also been involved in other initiatives launched, such as the National Approved Letting Scheme.

Other measures will be included in the forthcoming Housing Bill.

The condition of the private sector housing stock will also be improved as a result of initiatives including:

neighbourhood renewal, through key mechanisms such as the Neighbourhood Renewal Funds and New Deal for Communities Programme, which can contribute to regenerating private sector housing; the nine market renewal pathfinders, which will help to tackle low demand and abandonment, including in private sector stock.

Detailed information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost in respect of all local authority funding for private sector housing. However, information for expenditure on private sector renewal assistance is tabled as follows:

	Amount (£000)
1993–94	461,914
1994–95	436,382
1995–96	401,981
1996–97	381,094
1997–98	310,300
1998–99	313,943
1999–2000	319,562
2000–01	296,831
2001–02	288,458
2002–03	259,102

Local Government Finance

Mr. Key: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what percentage collection rate of council tax he expects in (a) 2003–04 and (b) 2004–05; and if he will make a statement. [142992]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister makes no estimate of the collection rate for council tax for the current or future years.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will introduce additional council tax bands; and if he will make a statement. [142995]

Mr. Raynsford: The Local Government Act 2003 provides for a council tax revaluation in England in 2007 based on 1 April 2005 values. Ahead of that the Government will listen to the views of local government and taxpayers about council tax bands. Decisions on any changes to the banding structure will be taken nearer to the time of the revaluation.

School Finance

Mrs. May: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions Ministers and officials have had with the Department for Education and Skills regarding the 2004–05 settlement for those local authorities whose formula grant increase is equal to their schools' formula spending share increase. [143145]

Mr. Raynsford: Ministers and officials from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department for Education and Skills have met on a number of occasions in recent months to discuss the additional resources that we propose to provide to these authorities.

Tamworth Borough Council

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what level of grant from all government sources Tamworth borough council has received in each year since 1996. [142625]

Mr. Raynsford: Tabled are details of revenue grants received by Tamworth borough council as part of gross Aggregate External Finance (AEF) between 1996–97 to 2004–05.

£000

	Revenue support grant	National non-domestic rates	Specific grants within AEF
1996–97	2,070	2,540	160
1997–98	2,298	2,292	162
1998–99	2,012	2,321	160
1999–2000	1,902	2,514	164
2000–01	1,765	2,813	160
2001–02	2,017	2,773	183
2002–03	1,824	3,100	211
2003–04	2,809	2,603	[1]653
2004–05	3,216	2,032	[2]—

[1] The increase in specific grants within AEF between 2002–03 and 2003–04 is due to large increases in Council Tax Benefit Administration and Housing Benefit Administration, plus the introduction of grants for Neighbourhood Wardens and Building Safer Communities.

[2] Data not available until spring 2004 when it will be reported by local authorities on their RA and RA(SG) returns.

Notes:

1. The grants are on an unadjusted basis and may not be comparable between years, because transfers of function may have taken place.

2. Information on specific grants up until 2002–03 is taken from local authority outturn returns. From 2003–04, where outturn information is not yet available this is based on local authority budget returns.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Written Constitution

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what plans he has to bring forward proposals for a written constitution for the UK; and if he will make a statement. [142997]

Mr. Leslie: There are no plans to draft a written constitution for the United Kingdom.

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs whether it is the policy of his Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on Departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142804]

Mr. Leslie: Catering services to meet my Department's requirements are provided through contractual arrangements with specialist suppliers.

My Department will continue to take every opportunity to encourage the use of fair trade products through its procurement activities, and specifically during the course of the review of the arrangements for contracted catering services that is currently under way.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many applications were made to judicially review a decision of the immigration appellate authorities in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and, of these, how many were granted permission for a review. [142530]

Mr. Leslie: The information requested is in the following table.

	1999	2000	2001	2002	2003[1]
Receipts where the First Defendant was recorded as IAT/Adjudicator/IAA	848	740	1,276	1,773	1,396
Grants of permission made during the relevant calendar year where the First Defendant was recorded as IAT/Adjudicator/IAA	306	284	302	290	252

[1] to end November.

Notes:

1. Cases are recorded in the Administrative Court Office database by defendant and only those cases in which the first defendant is recorded as the Immigration Appeal Tribunal, Adjudicator or Immigration Appellate Authority have been included.
2. These figures do not include any case in which the Secretary of State for the Home Department is recorded as the first defendant.
3. The figures for grants reflect decisions made in the calendar year. To identify the decisions in each of the cases received in the calendar years in question (a total of 6,033) would involve an audit on a case-by-case basis. Such an exercise would be labour intensive and would take several weeks.

It should be noted that due to the way in which details of cases were entered in the Administrative Court Office database prior to 2002, the above figures should not be regarded as providing a precise record of the applications received and granted.

Ross Cranston: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs, in each of the last five years, how many cases were decided by immigration adjudicators; how many and what percentage of such cases were appealed to immigration appeals tribunal; in how many and what percentage of the appealed cases the appeal was (a) allowed and (b) remitted to adjudicators; and in how many and what percentage of the cases in category (b) the adjudicator decided in favour of the applicant. [142944]

Mr. Leslie: The information requested is contained in the following table Please note that the Immigration Appellate Authority does not hold certain elements of information prior to 2001. This is indicated in the table where appropriate:

	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002
Case decided by adjudicators	38,117	28,600	27,134	56,813	84,259
Number of cases applying for permission to appeal to the tribunal	14,356	11,142	7,365	18,046	28,945
Number of substantive appeals to the tribunal	2,331	2,870	2,061	4,437	7,687
Number of substantive tribunal appeals decided	1,841	2,619	3,568	3,867	6,564
Percentage of tribunal appeals allowed	Not held	Not held	Not held	18%	16%
Percentage of tribunal appeals remitted	Not held	Not held	Not held	45%	44%

Information on the number of appeals which are subsequently allowed by an immigration adjudicator following a remittal is not available without incurring disproportionate costs.

Mental Incapacity

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what plans he has to bring forward legislation on mental incapacity in this parliamentary session. [140829]

Mr. Leslie: A draft Mental Incapacity Bill was scrutinised by a Joint Committee during the summer and their report was published on 28 November. My Department is working together with the Department of Health and stakeholders to consider the Committee's recommendations. We aim to respond in February 2004. We will seek to introduce the Bill in the current session of Parliament.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what progress has been made towards the creation of a central register for cases of work-related stress in the Department. [141692]

Mr. Leslie: We have no central register for cases of work-related stress. However, under our sick absence management policies, managers are responsible for informing our in-house Welfare service immediately if the cause of an employees absence is stress or depression. Our Welfare Officers are fully trained, and ideally placed, to deal with issues involving work-related stress.

My Department is committed to reducing work-related stress. We have introduced a range of stress management courses for both managers and non-managers, and are currently working on a Stress at Work policy, which takes account of the latest HSE standards, and aims to:

> ensure that all employees are aware of the factors that can produce stress and are able to take preventative measures to avoid creating stressful situations;
> ensure that employees watch for evidence of undue stress in their own and others' behaviour and take prompt action, using all available support, to reduce stress levels in my Department.

My Department introduced a wide range of work-life balance policies during 2001, enabling staff to adopt more effective working patterns to better balance their work and home life. My Department won the Opportunity Now National Public Sector award earlier this year for these policies.

HEALTH

Pharmaceutical Trade

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the loss or gain to the Exchequer from the parallel trade of medicines. [141697]

Ms Rosie Winterton: In terms of the impact on national health service expenditure, information is not routinely collected on the source of products, but from the data currently available the Department of Health estimates that parallel imports save the NHS in England approximately £60 million per year in the community sector.

No estimate is available for the hospital sector. The Government have not made their own assessment of the loss to pharmaceutical companies in the United Kingdom from parallel trade. The NHS does not reap the full benefit of the price differentials associated with parallel trade, as much of the difference is lost within the supply chain across Europe. Ministers in the Department of Health meet representatives of the pharmaceutical industry frequently to discuss issues affecting that sector, including parallel trade in Europe. The most recent meeting was on 2 December, between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health, my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Health, Lord Warner, and representatives of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry.

Age-related Macular Degeneration

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate the Government have made of the number of people who will be affected by the Government's decision to extend implementation of National Institute for Clinical Excellence guidance to make photodynamic therapy available to those suffering from age-related macular degeneration. [142628]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 8 December 2003]: On the basis of limited epidemiological data the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) estimated that each year in England and Wales there may be 5,000 to 7,500 new cases of predominantly classic subfoveal choroidal neovascularisation (CNV) associated with wet age-related macular degeneration. However, they noted, there is a high degree of uncertainty about this estimate.

It was the Department's assessment, informed by advice from NICE, that the national health service would be unable to implement the guidance in full within the usual three-month period. We have previously varied the direction on five occasions when it was required to implement effectively the guidance to provide the service to patients.

Patients are already receiving photodynamic therapy (PDT) on the NHS and we are committed to working with the NHS to facilitate implementation by July 2004. We want to see eligible patients benefiting from effective treatment: this is why we are implementing the NICE guidance as quickly as possible and have asked the NHS to ensure that patients with suspected classic with no occult CNV are treated wherever capacity exists to do so.

Cabinet Office Website

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Cabinet Office website referred to in the Winter Supplementary Estimates; if he will publish the URL; and if he will make a statement. [142241]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The website referred to in the Winter Supplementary Estimates is the Department's own website, which is in the process of being migrated onto DotP ('Delivering on the Promise'), a centralised content management platform. DotP has been developed and hosted by the e-Delivery Team in the Office of the e-Envoy, which is part of Cabinet Office.

The Department's new website will go live early in the new year and will be available at www.dh.gov.uk.

Dental Laboratories

Richard Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by county those dental laboratories which have registered with his Department under the Medical Devices Regulations. [142529]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Sodium Depletion

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what risk assessment his Department has conducted on depleted sodium levels in elderly people during hot weather conditions; [141465]

(2) what advice his Department has issued to elderly people on salt consumption during hot weather conditions. [141466]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department has not conducted any risk assessment on depleted sodium levels or issued any specific advice on salt consumption to older people during hot weather conditions.

There is insufficient evidence to suggest that elderly people should modify their normal salt consumption during hot weather conditions. It is, however, important to maintain an adequate fluid intake.

Food Labelling

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ask the Food Standards Agency to take steps to tackle misleading nutritional information in food labelling aimed at children. [143209]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Food Standards Agency (FSA) recognises that nutrition labelling can help parents choose food that contributes to a healthy diet for their children, but notes that currently there is no mandatory requirement for such information to be included on all food labels. The FSA would like to see such a requirement for all pre-packed food, including that aimed at children, and is pressing the European Commission to act on this. A proposal, which would revise the current legislation on nutrition labelling, is expected next year.

General Practitioners

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which (a) ambulance service and (b) acute NHS trusts have made representations about their capacity to assume additional responsibilities that may arise from the new general practitioner contract. [143190]

Mr. Hutton: No representations have been received.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners were in training in (a) England and (b) North Somerset in each of the last five years. [142491]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The numbers of general practice registrars (GPRs) in England since 1998 and in North Somerset Primary Care Trust (PCT) since 2001 are shown in the table.

Information prior to 2001 is not available at PCT level.

GP registrars for England and North Somerset PCT

Genetic Information

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress is being made in developing a national policy on the use of genetic information by insurance companies after 2006; [142268]

(2) what steps (a) have been taken and (b) will be taken in 2004 to develop a regulatory framework for the use of genetic information by insurance companies after 2006; [142269]

(3) what stakeholders and interested groups (a) have been involved and (b) will be involved in 2004 in developing a national policy on the use of genetic information by insurance companies. [142270]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government have made clear their position on the use of genetic test results for underwriting life and health insurance in the October 2001 Government response to the report from the House of Commons Science and Technology Committee: Genetics and Insurance.

The Genetics and Insurance Committee (GAIC) is responsible for the evaluation of specific genetic tests and their relevance to particular types of insurance. The GAIC also provides independent scrutiny of compliance with the terms of the moratorium on the use of genetic test results by insurance companies, which runs until November 2006. If there is evidence of non-compliance with the moratorium by the insurance industry, then the Government are prepared to enforce it through legislation, if necessary.

The Human Genetics Commission (HGC) has been asked to work closely with the GAIC to provide Government with further advice in developing a longer-term policy on the use of genetic information by insurance companies.

The GAIC and HGC will also monitor the effectiveness of the Association of British Insurers (ABI) code of practice on genetics, which is mandatory for all ABI members.

The HGC and GAIC held a well-received joint public meeting in September 2003. A number of interested groups and members of the public attended this meeting, including representatives from organisations concerned with genetic disorders, as well as from insurance and re-insurance companies, and non-governmental organisations with an interest in this area. The HGC and GAIC are planning a further such meeting in 2004.

Research is also under way to consider the use of genetic information in insurance underwriting. This research will be completed by 2005.

GM Crops

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the decision of the Food Standards Agency to vote to approve a licence for GM sweetcorn at the recent EU committee meeting; [143656]

(2) what discussions his Department has had with the Food Standards Agency regarding the application for use of Bt11 GM maize in food considered by the EC Standing Committee on Food Chain and Animal Health meeting on 8 December; [143474]

(3) what advice his Department has (a) given and (b) received from the Food Standards Agency on a decision regarding the application for use of Bt11 GM maize in food considered at the EC Standing Committee on Food Chain and Animal Health meeting on 8 December. [143475]

Miss Melanie Johnson: A vote on the authorisation of Bt11 sweetcorn was taken at a meeting of the Standing Committee on the Food Chain and Animal Health on 8 December. The Food Standards Agency represents the United Kingdom at this committee. As is always the case at such committees, the UK delegation presented a position on behalf of the Government, which was agreed after consulting Ministers from all relevant Departments.

The application for the authorisation of a line of genetically modified sweetcorn for food use was made in 1999 under the novel foods regulation (EC) No. 258/97. The dossier was reviewed by the European Union member states and then referred to the European Community Scientific Committee on Food (SCF). The SCF reviewed the application along with an additional dossier of information provided by the applicant, which responded to questions raised by member states. The SCF opinion was published in May 2002 and concluded that this line of GM sweetcorn is as safe for human food consumption as its conventional counterparts.

The UK supported the proposal for authorisation because the criteria laid out in the relevant legislation had been met, namely: the product does not present a risk to the consumer, does not mislead the consumer and is not nutritionally disadvantageous compared with other foods that it might replace.

Mersey Regional Ambulance Service

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the report prepared by Ms Pearl Brown for the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service. [143487]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The report prepared by Ms Pearl Brown for the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service National Health Service Trust is not a Department of Health publication. The information requested is not held centrally by the Department of Health.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date (a) the Mersey Regional Ambulance Trust and (b) any member of its board received notification from the trust's solicitors that there was a prima facie case of gross misconduct against the chief executive; on what occasions this matter was discussed with the (i) chair and (ii) chief executive of the Strategic Health Authority; and what action was taken to investigate the matter following the advice from the trust's solicitors. [143490]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The matter to which the question refers is one of individual employment between the trust and the employee. The information requested is not held centrally at the Department of Health.

Ministerial Meetings

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what dates Ministers in his Department have held meetings with members and officials of the United States Administration since 1 January 2002; where each meeting was held; which Ministers were involved in each meeting; which United States Administration Department attended each meeting; and which members and officials from the United States Administration attended each of these meetings. [142391]

Ms Rosie Winterton: My right hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) met the American Secretary of Health and Human Services, Tommy Thompson, on 22 October 2002 while attending the Commonwealth Fund International Health Symposium in Washington.

They met again on the 24 October 2002, when Mr. Thompson was present at a Ministerial Round Table discussion at the same Commonwealth Fund International Health Symposium in Washington.

They met once more at the World Health Assembly in Geneva on 19 May 2003.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health met Mr. Thompson while attending the Commonwealth Fund International Health Symposium in Washington on 22 October 2003.

The Minister of State, Department of Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Hutton) attended the Global Health Security conference in March 2002, which was attended by a number of United States officials from the Health, State and Defence Departments.

In May 2002, he also attended a dinner during the World Health Assembly on Global Health Security at which Mr. Thompson was present.

In November 2003, he met Mr. Thompson at the Berlin meeting on Global Health Security.

Pneumococcal Disease

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to put the pneumococcal conjugate vaccine on the routine childhood immunisation schedule. [143017]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government are very careful when considering introducing a new vaccine into the childhood immunisation schedule. We have to be sure that the vaccine is safe, and effective in preventing disease. It is also important to know how many doses that children need to be protected and at what age the doses should be given. We also need to be confident that introducing a new vaccine into the childhood immunisation schedule doses not interfere with the protection given by the other vaccines in the programme. We have to be sure that any new health intervention is cost-effective.

The independent expert advisory body, the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI) is currently examining the evidence of the potential benefits of introducing pneumococcal conjugate vaccine to the infant immunisation schedule. What is clear is that there are many uncertainties in the evidence, in particular in measuring the burden of pneumococcal disease, and in the amount of disease that is expected to be prevented by a vaccine in both the short and longer term, because it protects against only seven of the numerous strains of pneumococcus.

Research is being undertaken to try to answer the questions, and the JCVI is assessing the evidence as it develops.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of (a) the number of children affected by pneumococcal disease in the last year for which figures are available and (b) the severity of the disease and its complications in each case. [143018]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The nature of pneumococcal disease makes it difficult to measure with accuracy the burden of that disease. Notifications are for pneumococcal meningitis only and these are shown in the table for 2002.

Information on individual cases is not available centrally.

Number of notified cases of pneumococal meningitis in children for 2002

Age	Number of cases
0 years	49
1–4 years	29
5–9 years	6
10–14 years	3
15–24 years	8

Residential Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to produce national minimum standards of care for residential services provided by the NHS. [141527]

Dr. Ladyman: National minimum standards have been developed for a range of establishments and agencies regulated under the Care Standards Act. The National Care Standards Commission must take the standards into account when making any decision about whether an establishment or agency conforms to the relevant statutory regulations. The standards apply irrespective of who provides the service, thus care homes run by the national health service are subject to the standards.

There are no plans to produce national minimum standards for NHS hospital accommodation although residential services provided in such establishments would come within the Commission for Health Improvement's rolling review.

Sexual Health

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many referrals were made to (a) genito-urinary medicine clinics and (b) sexual health clinics by a general practitioner (i) after diagnosis by the GP for treatment and (ii) for diagnosis and treatment in (A) the last 12 months for which figures are available, (B) 2000 and (C) 1997; [140691]

(2) what the average waiting time for treatment for a sexually transmitted infection after initial examination by a general practitioner was in (a) the last year for which figures are available, (b) 2000 and (c) 1997; what proportion of such treatments were overseen by the GP who made the initial diagnosis; and if he will make a statement; [140692]

(3) how many, and what proportion, of general practitioners in England do not treat patients suffering from a sexually transmitted infection; and if he will make a statement; [140693]

(4) how many general practitioners in England provide sexual health services; how many provided them (a) in 2000 and (b) in 1997; and how many have walk-in facilities. [140719]

Miss Melanie Johnson: These data are not collected centrally. Data are only available on numbers of referrals from general practitioners to genito-urinary medicine (GUM) clinics and this is shown in the table. GUM clinics are open-access and this data does not include the vast majority of patients who will self-refer to GUM clinics or who are advised to attend by their GP without a formal referral letter.

GPs are required to provide for the management and on-going treatment of patients who are ill, or believe themselves to be ill. Some GPs provide diagnosis and treatment for sexually transmitted infections (STIs). However, others will make an initial assessment and advise the patient to attend a GUM clinic where more specialist skills and diagnostic tests are available.

Outpatients: Number of GP Referrals made (Provider Based) for Genito-urinary medicine in England

Specialty Code	Specialty Name	GP referrals made in the Quarter
360	Genito-urinary medicine	8,922
360	Genito-urinary medicine	9,209
360	Genito-urinary medicine	8,782
360	Genito-urinary medicine	8,698

Student Nurses

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it is his Department's policy to pay for the top-up university fees charged to student nurses; and if he will make a statement. [141639]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 3 December 2003]: Existing contracts between strategic health authorities and higher education institutions cover the full cost of training and top-up fees are not charged. The consultation document, Funding Learning and Development for the Healthcare Workforce, sets out our proposal for a national model contract. It is intended that this contract for national health service-funded pre-registration courses, to be introduced from 1 April 2004, will specifically prohibit the charging of top-up fees to students.

Vaccination and Immunisation

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he gives to NHS trusts concerning Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation recommendations. [143681]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Advice from the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI) is made public on the JCVI website, and in the book Immunisation against Infectious Diseases. If new advice is given that results in a new vaccination campaign, this is communicated to trusts via Chief Medical Officer/Chief Nursing Officer/Chief Pharmaceutical Officer letter.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the recommendations of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation are endorsed by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. [143689]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The agendas and minutes for Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation meetings are routinely sent to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence, and both committees collaborate to work on topics such as antiviral agents for influenza.

Works of Art

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by his Department since 1997 was; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by his Department through sales of its works of art has been since 1997. [142366]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department does not own any works of art, nor has it purchased or sold any since 1997.

TREASURY

European Council of Finance Ministers

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the outcome was of the ECOFIN meeting held on 25 November; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [142978]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I attended ECOFIN on 25 November.

The Council discussed the Excessive Deficit Procedure for France and Germany (recommended under Article 104(8)). Council did not vote in favour of the Commission proposals under both Article 104(8) and 104(9) to enforce the excessive deficit procedures against both countries, therefore the decision was not adopted. It agreed non-binding Council conclusions and a separate declaration.

The UK did not support the Commission's proposal under Article 104(8). The Council reached an agreement on a general approach on the Transparency Directive. A compromise was reached on the important issue of mandatory quantitative quarterly reporting, whereby companies with shares on regulated EU markets will be required to disclose qualitative information, similar to trading statements, about the company's performance at least once in the six-months periods following the date of their annual and half-yearly reports. This was a success for the UK and followed our intervention at the 4 November ECOFIN when I expressed strong concerns about the regulatory burden of introducing mandatory quarterly reporting across the EU.

The Council noted a Commission presentation on its implementation report on the Risk Capital Action Plan and Conclusions were adopted inviting the Commission and the Financial Services Committee to undertake further work.

The Council took note of a report from the Code of Conduct group on the implementation of rollback and standstill. The group was asked to report back on rollback and standstill before summer 2004.

On VAT Reduced Rates, Council agreed to extend the VAT labour intensive services experiment for two years and produced a declaration to this effect, inviting the Commission to make the appropriate proposals. proposals.

The Commission presented its company tax communication, which was discussed further at the conference on EU corporate tax reform in Ostia on 5–6 December.

On the structural indicators to be used in the Commission's Spring Report for the European Council, the Commission welcomed a Joint Committee text. The Council invited the Permanent Representatives Committee (COREPER) to finalise the issues for approval at the next General Affairs (GAERC) meeting.

The Council adopted a report on European Action for Growth to be forwarded to the European Council in 12–13 December. The Council reached political agreement on an increased rate of Trans-European Networks co-financing of 20 per cent. for certain projects.

The Council adopted two reports concerning the European Investment Bank (EIB): on the mid-term review of EIB lending mandates and on the review of the EIB facility for Euro-Mediterranean Investment and Partnership (FEMIP).

The Council agreed to an additional allocation of EUR 500 million for lending to Russia and the Western Newly Independent States by the EIB until January 2007. In a unilateral declaration the UK noted > "agreement reflected the assurance given by the Commission that the increase is compatible with the margin in the Loan Guarantee Reserve".

Council also agreed to develop further and reinforce FEMIP within the EIB.

On the Investment Services Directive, a UK-drafted Declaration was agreed, that will accompany the formal adoption of a Council Common Position on 8 December. This Declaration helpfully indicates Council's desire to reach an agreement with the European Parliament on this Directive by April 2004.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what annual efficiency savings targets were set for Inland Revenue in 2002 to 2003; what Inland Revenue's performance against these targets was in each year; and what the total sum paid in performance related pay as a consequence of Inland Revenue's achievement was in each year. [143674]

Dawn Primarolo: In 2001–02, 2002–03 and 2003–04 the Inland Revenue had a target to

> "Improve value for money by achieving productivity gains of at least 2.5 per cent. per year until March 2004 without detriment to accuracy or customer satisfaction".

This was set by Spending Review 2000. This target is measured by reference to four Performance Indicators and the results for 2001–02 and 2002–03 are set out below. The results for 2003–04 will not be known until after the end of the Financial Year. Spending Review 2002 also gave the Inland Revenue a value for money target that came into effect in 2003–04 to > "Achieve annual efficiency savings of at least 2.5 per cent. per year until March 2006, without detriment to accuracy or customer satisfaction."

The results for 2003–04 will not be known until the end of the Financial Year.

IR performance against productivity target:

Percentages

	2001–02 target	2001–02 result	2002–03 target	2002–03 result
Percentage improvement in:
Taxpayer cases dealt with per staff year	2.5	0.90	2.5	4.8
Number of NI work items per staff year	2.5	7.0	2.5	7.8
Number of WFTC decisions per staff year	2.5	3.4	2.5	12.4
Number of DPTC decisions per staff year	2.5	21.4	2.5	2.6

The need to make efficiency savings is only one of several objectives that any individual could have in their Performance Agreement. It is therefore impossible to quantify the amount of individual performance related pay that has arisen from the achievement of such targets. However, it is the case that performance related pay is only paid to individuals who have met or exceeded their Performance Agreement in total.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 2 December 2003, Official Report, column 345W, on Inland Revenue (IT Systems), who the prospective suppliers who engaged in the Inland Revenue's market-making exercise for the EAGLE project prior to the placement by Inland Revenue of the Procurement Notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities were. [143604]

Dawn Primarolo: The initial Market-making exercise for the EAGLE contract prompted six responses prior to the placement of the Procurement Notice in the OJEC. The suppliers involved were:

CSC Europe/IBM UK;

EDS Ltd.;

Hoskyns Group Plc;

ICL/Anderson Consulting;

Digital Alliance (Digital Equipment Co., Logica and Barclays);

Sema Group UK.

Of these suppliers, two were invited to tender—EDS Ltd. and CSC Europe/IBM UK. The preferred supplier was announced in December 1993, and the contract awarded in May 1994.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the EAGLE Invitation to Tender (ITT) contained a provision that the Inland Revenue might undertake a review of the tax affairs of the companies responding to the ITT and that such reports might be used as a factor in the evaluation of tenders. [143671]

Dawn Primarolo: The EAGLE Invitation to Tender (ITT) did not contain any provision that the Inland Revenue might undertake a review of the tax affairs of the companies responding to the ITT or that such reports might be used as a factor in the evaluation of tenders.

Tax Credits

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures are being taken to ease the financial burden on firms whose research and development tax credit claims are under retrospective investigation by the Inland Revenue. [143353]

Dawn Primarolo: Companies claim R&D tax credits by entering figures on their Corporation Tax Self Assessment return at the end of the accounting period in which the R&D is undertaken. Companies self assess the amount of R&D tax credits due to them and receive payment of any R&D tax credit in line with their self-assessment.

Only a proportion of returns which contain an R&D tax credit claim will be inquired into. Where a return is inquired into, payments of the tax credit may be withheld during the inquiry but interim payments can be agreed.

Smoking

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cigarettes have been consumed in the United Kingdom in each year since 1997; what the total revenue generated from duties was; what percentage of cigarettes were (a) smuggled and (b) crossborder sales of cigarettes in each year since 1997; and how much was lost in revenue from duty in each case. [143143]

John Healey: All figures relating to 2000–01 to 2002–03, and the smuggled cigarette share estimates for earlier years are published in "Measuring and Tackling Indirect Tax Losses (December 2003)".

The same figures for 1999–00 are contained in Measuring Indirect Tax Losses (November 2002).

Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

Information on the total revenue generated from UK cigarettes duties can be found in the HM Customs and Excise 'Tobacco Bulletin'.

Copies of all these documents are available in the Library of the House.

Tourism

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax revenue was raised from hotel accommodation in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland in each of the last five years. [143194]

Dawn Primarolo: The figures are not available in the format requested. They would be available only at disproportionate cost and would require assumptions about tax incidence that could render the results misleading.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Open Academies

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will place in the Library a copy of the admissions policy of each academy. [141565]

Mr. Miliband: I am pleased to confirm that copies of the admissions policies for all open Academies have been placed in the Libraries.

Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what the current status is of the board of CAFCASS; and if he will make a statement; [143110]

(2) when he proposes to publish Sir Clive Booth's report on the operation of the board of CAFCASS; [143111]

(3) what his plans are for the future of CAFCASS; [143112]

(4) what changes have been made to the complaints procedure of CAFCASS since the appointment of the Children's Minister; [143113]

(5) what changes to the operation of CAFCASS have been initiated by the Minister for Children. [143114]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 9 December 2003]: I am pleased to announce that Baroness Pitkeathley OBE has been appointed as Chairman of CAFCASS, with effect from 11 December 2003. In order for her to take the service forward, all but one member of the existing Board have agreed to resign.

The Government are grateful to them for their willingness to stand down and for their commitment and hard work since CAFCASS was launched.

As an interim measure Baroness Pitkeathley will be assisted by a temporary Board comprising:

Richard Sax
Baroness Howarth of Breckland OBE
Professor Jane Tunstill
Nicholas Stuart CB

We will be placing advertisements shortly for appointment to a new permanent Board.

The Board member who has declined to resign is being asked to accept the suspension of their Board membership, pending further consideration of their position.

There are no plans to publish Sir Clive Booth's report.

CAFCASS will be a key element of the Government's new focus on children's services. The Government Green Paper "Every Child Matters" sets out an exciting new agenda and CAFCASS has an important role in its delivery.

CAFCASS is a national non-departmental public body for England and Wales. As such, responsibility for its day-to-day work rests with its Executive Team and Board. I have, therefore, initiated no changes in its operation, though CAFCASS itself introduced a new complaints procedure with effect from April 2003.

Coalfield Communities

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he has had with the education ministers of (a) the National Assembly for Wales and (b) the Scottish Parliament on educational attainment in coalfield communities. [142947]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: I have regular discussions with Ministers from both the National Assembly for Wales and the Scottish Parliament regarding education matters (including educational attainment). However these discussions have not related to educational attainment in coalfield communities specifically.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he and his officials have had with the Coalfield Communities Campaign on the levels of educational attainment in coalfield communities. [142948]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: My officials have an on-going dialogue with the Coalfield Communities Campaign on issues that need to be addressed in order to improve educational attainment.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what studies of education attainment in coalfield communities have been undertaken since the 2001 Centre for Regional Economic and Social Research Study. [142949]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Following the DfES commissioned study "Patterns of Educational Attainment in the British Coalfields", to which the hon. Gentleman refers in his question, my Department, together with the Coalfields Community Campaign, commissioned a further research project, "Raising Attainment in Schools in the Former Coalfield areas", with a view to learning more about factors that have led to school improvement in these areas. This research drew up case studies of eight schools in coalfield areas that are doing well, despite challenging circumstances.

The final report has recently been distributed to all secondary schools in coalfields areas as a tool for strengthening performance.

Education (North-west)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) teachers and (b) teaching assistants were employed in (i) nursery, (ii) primary and (iii) secondary education in (A) St. Helens, (B) Merseyside and (C) the North West Region, in each year since 1992. [141471]

Mr. Miliband: The following tables show full-time equivalent (FTE) regular teachers and teaching assistants in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in January of each year. Nursery and primary staff are shown as a group because staff providing nursery education within primary schools cannot be identified separately.

Education Spending

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Lichfield (Michael Fabricant) of 3 December 2003, Official Report, column 89W, on education spending, what the basic amount included in the figures is for each (a) primary and (b) secondary pupil; and if he will list separately the amounts included in the figures he gave for (i) deprivation, (ii) additional costs and (iii) sparsity. [143129]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The basic entitlement in the Education Formula Spending Share calculations for 2004–05 is £2,111.59 for primary pupils and £2,826.23 for secondary pupils.

Tables showing the breakdown for the primary and secondary formula spending share for each local authority are available on the Department's school funding website and copies have been placed in the Libraries.

Further Education

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many students studied (a) part-time and (b) full-time in further education in each of the last five years; and how many (i) full and (ii) part-time lecturing staff there were in each of those years; what figures for student/lecturer ratios for further education over this period he uses. [143276]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 11 December 2003]: The numbers of full time and part time students studying at further education sector colleges in the five years to 2001/02 were published by the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) in the Statistical First Release (SFR) "Student Numbers At Colleges In The Further Education Sector And External Institutions In England In 2001/02" on 19 December 2002 and are shown in the following table. The numbers of full time and part time teaching staff in further education sector colleges in the five years to 2001/02 were published by the LSC in "Staff Statistics, 2001/2002" on 30 October 2003 and are also shown in this table.

Graduate Income

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what the latest Government estimate is of the extra life-time earnings arising from graduation; [140794]

(2) what the statistical sources are for Government estimates of extra life-time earnings arising from graduation; [140795]

(3) whether Government estimates of extra life-time earnings of graduates are (a) pre-tax and (b) post-tax. [140796]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 1 December 2003]: Higher Education is undoubtedly a good investment for the average graduate. The Department has previously estimated that first degree graduates earn on average around £120,000 more—in present value terms—over their working lives than those with two or more A-levels. The analysis is based on the spring 2002 quarter of the Labour Force Survey (LFS) for Great Britain. The £120,000 differential is derived from gross lifetime earnings streams that are assumed to grow at 2 per cent. per annum in real terms and are discounted at a rate of 3.5 per cent[1]. The Department estimates that the differential would fall to around £90,000 using net lifetime earnings streams, given that higher earning degree-holders would pay more tax on average over their working lives than those with only A-levels.

[1] Real earnings are assumed to grow in line with productivity at 2.0 per cent., as set out in Annex A of The Budget 2003. The discount rate of 3.5 per cent. is the rate used by the Treasury in deciding whether public investments are worthwhile.

Key Stage 1

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to reform assessment methods at Key Stage 1; and if he will make a statement. [142858]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: We have developed a new approach to assessment at Key Stage 1. We have asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to trial an approach that uses testing to underpin teacher assessment.

Teachers will make a rounded assessment of each child, taking into account task and test results and their own judgement on the child's work. 37 LEAs are in the trial. If the trial is successful it will be extended to all schools in the next academic year.

Oxbridge Funding

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the Government contribution was, at today's value, towards the funding of (a) Oxford and (b) Cambridge universities, (i) in total and (ii) as a percentage of the total, in (A) 1973, (B) 1980, (C) 1990 and (D) 2003. [143695]

Cambridge
1972–73	97.3	71
1980–81	81.5	57

School Finance

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he has had with the local authorities whose grant increase is equal to their schools' formula spending share increase in the 2004–05 settlement. [143146]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No Ministers from the DfES have had specific discussions with the relevant local authorities regarding the 2004–05 settlement. Representatives of local authorities and the Local Government Association were involved in discussions on this topic with officials from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister at Settlement Working Group meetings.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance he has issued to local authorities regarding the passporting of schools' formula spending share budget increase of the 2004–05 settlement. [143166]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Both myself and my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister wrote to all local authorities with an education responsibility setting out their clear expectation that LEAs will passport their Schools Formula Spending Share in full unless there are wholly exceptional circumstances. The Government have ensured that every authority will receive an increase in its Formula Grant which is at least as big as its cash SFSS increase, on a like-for-like basis and has put additional resources into other services—a total of £300 million in additional Revenue Support Grant and specific formula grant to ensure that a decision to passport the full SFSS increase to schools should not be at the expense of other services.

Officials have also written twice to Chief Education Officers, firstly setting out the basis of the passporting calculation and explaining the amendments to the "reserve power" provisions of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 (as amended) which were recently enacted through the Local Government Act 2003; and secondly setting out the passporting figures, the steps authorities need to take and the timetable involved.

Small Businesses

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether his Department uses a database of individual small businesses for consultation purposes. [142477]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: There is no DfES departmental small business contact database. Normally DfES uses contacts in the representative bodies eg Small Business Council, Confederation of British Industry, Federation of Small Businesses; or through our delivery partners such as Learning and Skills Council and Sector Skills Development Agency as a way of consulting small firms. DfES shares research that the Small Business Service or DTI have gathered. The Department's small firms portal can also be used to seek views.

Specialist Schools

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of specialist schools are permitted to select pupils by aptitude. [140977]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 1 December 2003]: Section 102 of the 1998 Education Act and associated Regulations made under it allow schools with a specialism in modern foreign languages; the performing arts; the visual arts; physical education or sport; design and technology or information technology to select up to 10 per cent. of their intake on the basis of aptitude in the relevant specialism.

Ninety per cent. of mainstream secondary schools currently designated as specialist schools have one or more of these subjects as part of their specialist curriculum.

Student Finance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what (a) fee remission systems, (b) grants and (c) bursaries he proposes for (i) higher education and (ii) other level 4 courses delivered through the further education system. [142635]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 9 December 2003]: The HE White Paper sets out our proposals for student support. From 2004, we are introducing a grant worth up to £1,000 to assist students from low-income backgrounds. The full grant will be available to those whose household income is below £15,200, estimated to be around 30 per cent. of students. This is in addition to the loans available for students' living costs, currently of up to £4,930 and a grant for tuition fees currently worth up to £1,125 a year. From next year, the hardship loan fund will be merged into the Access to Learning Fund. All payments of grants will be non-repayable and will be delivered through universities and colleges. Students with dependants and disabled students will continue to benefit from a series of grants that are designed to assist with the cost of entering higher education. We are also introducing a more flexible package of support for part-time students. Full details on the 04/05 student support package were announced on 3 December 2003, Official Report, column 61WS.

From 2006, students will no longer have to pay up-front fees. Instead, we will offer a loan for fees, which with the maintenance loan will be repayable after graduation once earnings exceed £15,000. Any institution that wishes to charge higher fees must first have an access agreement, approved by the Office for Fair Access (OFFA). We are considering and discussing the content of access agreements, including bursaries and other financial support, and the role of OFFA, and will make an announcement in due course.

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to the oral answer given by the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Alan Simpson) on 3 December 2003, Official Report, column 504, if he will publish the alternative methods for funding higher education being considered by his Department. [142735]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 9 December 2003]: I refer the hon. Member to the letters from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Paul Farrelly) dated 11 April, 3 June and 12 November, and also to our response to the Education and Skills Select Committee of 28 July. Copies of all these documents have been placed in the House Library. We will be providing further information in due course.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many students in each university are receiving (a) full fee remission and (b) bursary support. [143102]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 9 December 2003]: The information requested has been placed in the Libraries.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research he has commissioned into students' risk aversion to debt. [143104]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 9 December 2003]: The Department has recently published results from the 2002–03 Student Income and Expenditure Survey. This showed that more students are taking on debt; 92 per cent. of students anticipated leaving university with debts in 2002–03. All students are taking on more debt on average, partly as a result of the complete replacement of mandatory grants with student loans, and partly to finance higher levels of expenditure.

In addition, in 2001 the Department published research entitled, 'Social Class and Higher Education: Issues Affecting Participation by Lower Social Class groups' which amongst other things explored the relationship between social class and students' attitudes to debt. This research showed that most potential and current students accepted that they would accumulate debt but felt that the investment was worthwhile and that most current students were confident about paying back the debt they were accruing.

Both research reports are available from the Department's website at http://www.dfes.gov.uk/research/

Teaching Methods

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what new teaching methods are being introduced geared to each child's ability. [141799]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The national Primary and Key Stage 3 Strategies have enabled teachers to improve and broaden their teaching skills to raise standards of attainment for children of all abilities. Typical of their approach to inclusion has been the help on challenging and supporting all pupils in whole class teaching, in the ways in which teachers differentiate tasks, in the ways pupils are grouped, and in the ways in which teaching assistants are used to support pupils. This year Key Stage 3 Challenge Programmes offer support in new approaches in one-to-one teaching for pupils who are falling behind in basic skills. Our programme for gifted and talented education, including our support for the National Academy for Gifted and Talented Young, is also helping to develop teachers' understanding of the most effective approaches to the teaching of the most able pupils.

Our ambitions for personalised learning in schools are that universal provision should be tailored to the needs of every child. Central to this agenda are that teachers have more effective skills in formative assessment. We know through a wide body of research, for example through the Ofsted report "Good Assessment in Secondary Schools" published earlier this year, that the quality of assessment by teachers has a significant impact on attitudes to learning through challenging children and through encouraging teachers to focus on how to improve the learning skills of individual pupils. That is why we have made available to all schools the new Pupil Achievement Tracker to help them identify their pupils' strengths and weaknesses and set appropriate targets for development, based on the results of pupils in their National Curriculum Tests. And through the Primary and Key Stage 3 Strategies we will be making available to teachers next year support in assessment for learning techniques and approaches.

Timber

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills by what means the Department's policy for purchasing timber and timber products ensures that they are obtained from legal and sustainable sources. [141332]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department for Education and Skills uses the Ministry of Defence and Office of Government Commerce contracts for the supply of office furniture. These are compliant with all current Government guidance. It is also departmental policy to include the model timber specification clause in all relevant contracts, and all buyers of timber and timber related products are aware of central Government guidance.

University Funding

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list written representations he has received from the vice-chancellors of (a) Oxford, (b) Cambridge, (c) Sheffield and (d) Sheffield Hallam universities about university funding in the last three years. [143693]

Alan Johnson: Both my right hon. Friend and I have received numerous representations from universities on a number of matters related to the funding of higher education, both by means of formal correspondence and in meetings with Vice Chancellors and others from the higher education sector.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143099]

Fiona Mactaggart [holding answer 9 December 2003]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Leader of the House on 9 December 2003, Official Report, Vol. 415, column 355W.

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Antisocial Behaviour Orders have been issued in Suffolk in each year since their inception. [143529]

Ms Blears: The number of notifications received by the Home Office of Anti-Social Behaviour Orders (ASBOs) issued in Suffolk from 1 April 1999 up to 30 June 2003 (latest available) is given in the table.

The number of notifications, as reported to the Home Office, of ASBOs issued in Suffolk, from 1 April 19991 to 30 June 2003 (latest available)

	Number
1 April 1999 to 31 May 2000[1]	3

Note:

Following implementation of the Police Reform Act (2 December 2002), data for December 2002 are incorporated into the first quarter 2003 data.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been provided with accommodation at public expense in (a) Hampshire and (b) Basingstoke and Deane borough council in each year since 1997; what type of accommodation they were given; and what the nature of the tenancy was in each case. [143139]

Beverley Hughes: The information is not available in the form requested.

Figures in respect of asylum seekers in receipt of accommodation support from the National Asylum Support Service (NASS) are published at the end of each quarter by local authority area.

Figures for the areas requested as at the end of each quarter since December 2002 are shown in the table:

Statistics on the number of asylum seekers supported by NASS in each region are available on the Home Office's Immigration and Asylum Statistics website: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html

Correspondence

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department will reply to the letter of 16 September from the hon. Member for Sittingbourne and Sheppey regarding a constituent, Mr. Dennis Spalding, and his son John Spalding, ref DL2252. [140706]

Paul Goggins: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 27 November 2003.

DNA Database

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals on the national DNA database have not been convicted of a criminal offence; and what criteria are used to determine who should be on the database. [142174]

Ms Blears: Section 63 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act (PACE) 1984, as amended, provides powers for taking DNA samples from a person in police detention in the following circumstances:

> following charge with a recordable offence or notification that a suspect will be reported for such an offence;
> on an Inspector's authority, which may be given where the officer has reasonable grounds for believing the suspect is involved in a criminal offence and the sample will tend to confirm or disprove his involvement;
> following conviction for a recordable offence.

Section 82 of the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001 amends section 64 of PACE and allows the retention of a DNA profile where the person has either been acquitted or against whom charges have been dropped. There are approximately 109,000 such profiles.

In addition, DNA profiles may also be retained from people who have voluntarily given a DNA sample and who have given their written consent to the profile being added to the National DNA Database. This will principally include people who have taken part in an intelligence screening exercise where an offender is believed to live in a particular area. There are approximately 10,500 such profiles.

Female Offenders

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what analysis his Department has undertaken into the variation of sentencing penalties for female offenders imposed by (a) Crown Courts and (b) magistrates courts; [142292]

(2) what research his Department has undertaken into the variation by region of sentencing penalties for female offenders . [142293]

Paul Goggins: "Statistics on women and the CJS" (published annually under section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991) provides information on the treatment of women across the criminal justice system. It includes a comparison of trends in custody rates at magistrates courts and the Crown Court, for both males and females. Figures on use of imprisonment for adult males and females are provided broken down by offence type as well as court. The next section 95 report containing 2002 data will be published in January 2004.

Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 2001 Supplementary Tables Volume 4 Table S4.1E provides regional sentencing indicators for females in magistrates courts. Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 2001 Supplementary Tables Volume 2 table S2.2 provides figures for females sentenced at each Crown Court centre by type of sentence imposed. Figures for 2002 will be published later this month.

Forensic Science Service

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of the capital investment needs of the Forensic Science Service identified in the Home Office review of the service. [142193]

Ms Blears: The Review of the Forensic Science Service identified a capital requirement of between £20 million and £30 million in order to sustain business at its present level. The review team did not undertake a detailed study of the service's capital investment needs, which would be necessary to determine more precise figures.

Identity Cards

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the introduction of compulsory identity cards. [142653]

Beverley Hughes: The Home Office has lead responsibility for developing the national identity cards scheme, which my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 11 November. A national identity cards scheme will bring significant benefits in areas that are the responsibility of the Home Office. These include strengthening immigration controls, providing a means to encourage legal routes of migration to the United Kingdom, combating organised crime and terrorism and reducing identity fraud. The national identity cards scheme will be built incrementally by strengthening existing forms of identification, some of which are currently issued by the Home Office or one of its agencies such as residence permits and passports.

Immigration and Detention Centres

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he has issued in relation to racist language and behaviour to staff at immigration and detention centres run by the Home Office and its agents; if he will publish them; and if he will make a statement. [143582]

Beverley Hughes: Under Rule 3(2) of the Detention Centre Rules 2001 operators of removal centres are required to recognise the need for awareness of the particular anxieties to which detained persons may be subject and the sensitivity that this will require, especially when handling issues of cultural diversity.

The contract to operate Yarlswood Immigration Removal Centre, in common with other such contracts, requires the centre operator to have a race relations policy approved by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. In addition, the Immigration and Nationality Directorate issued an Operating Standard on Race Relations to all removal centre operators in December 2002. This Standard sets out the minimum requirements expected of all removal centre operators. Copies of the two documents will be placed in the House Library.

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate allegations of (a) racism and (b) misconduct among staff at the Yarlswood Detention Centre; and if he will make a statement. [143583]

Beverley Hughes: We take these allegations very seriously indeed. It is obviously of the utmost importance that staff at immigration removal centres should carry out their duties professionally and sensitively. Our contractor at Yarlswood Immigration Removal Centre, Global Solutions Ltd. (GSL—formerly Group 4), has launched a full investigation into the allegations. The investigation will be conducted by a senior manager with no line management responsibility for Yarlswood. I have instructed the Director General of the IND to institute an independent investigation of the allegations.

Leicestershire Police

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to meet the Chief Constable of Leicestershire police. [142924]

Ms Blears: The Home Secretary meets the Chief Constable of Leicestershire Constabulary at regular intervals in his capacity as the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) representative on the Lawrence Steering Group. The next meetings are scheduled for Wednesday 25 February and Wednesday 26 May 2004.

IRA Terrorism

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on which dates terrorist incidents ascribed to the IRA have taken place in England since 1973. [142754]

Mr. Blunkett: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

The table that has been placed in the Library details the number of incidents in Great Britain ascribed to Irish Republican terrorists on a yearly basis since 1973. Incidents include bomb attacks (including letter bombs), finds of improvised explosive devices, arrests and shooting incidents in Great Britain attributed to all Republican terrorist groups (OIRA, PIRA, RIRA, INLA). All incidents occurred in England except those that are indicated otherwise.

Policing (Gwent)

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the trial Bobby on the Beat scheme in New Earswick. [142784]

Ms Blears: The Joseph Rowntree Housing Trust funded the project in New Earswick. I have not carried out any evaluation of the project myself, but am aware that a full evaluation was carried out by the Centre for Criminal Justice Studies at the University of Leeds for the Joseph Rowntree Foundation.

A full report of the research was published by the Joseph Rowntree Foundation on 9 October 2003 and is available, together with summary findings, on the Foundation's website at: http://www.jrf.org.uk/knowledge/findings/socialpolicy/023.asp.

Prisons

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average number of hours per week prisoners spent in education in the last 12 months was; and what the target figure is. [142175]

Paul Goggins: For the period September 2002 to August 2003 the average number of hours per week prisoners undertaking education spent in formal learning activities was 9.15. This excludes distance learning, private study, and learning which takes place on the wings, for example through peer support schemes.

We do not have a target for the number of hours prisoners should be spending in education. Our targets for prisoner learning are outcome-based, focusing on improving prisoners' literacy, language, numeracy and vocational skills. In 2002–03 prisoners gained 41,518 basic skills achievements against a target of 28,800 (exceeding our target by 44.2 per cent).

We are continuing to work towards widening prisoner access to appropriate learning opportunities: through increased investment, a robust quality improvement strategy, new contracts which put the individual at the centre of the learning process, and the support of newly appointed Heads of Learning and Skills across the prison estate.

Charles Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent on the provision of education facilities in (a) prisons and (b) young offenders institutions in each of the past 10 years. [140653]

Paul Goggins: The following table shows education spend in prisons from 1993–94 to 2002–03.

Financial year	Education expenditure (£ million)
1993–94	31.08
1994–95	36.75
1995–96	36.95
1996–97	34.50
1997–98	36.17
1998–99	39.04
1999–2000	40.89
2000–01	41.87
2001–02	52.60
2002–03	59.40

These totals do not include additional funding for the Youth Justice Board and curriculum development projects. The 2002–03 total does not include £4.4 million allocated to prisons from the Capital Modernisation Fund to enhance the quality, quantity and relevance of education and training. From April 2003 money for vocational training of £12 million a year transferred to the Department for Education and Skills.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the female receptions into prison has been (a) under sentence and (b) on remand (i) for non-violent offences and (ii) for sentences of six months or less for each of the last 10 years. [141638]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 2 December 2003]: The number of females received under sentence by offence group, for the last 10 years, is given in tables 3.11 and 4.7 of Prison Statistics England and Wales 2002.

The number of females received under sentence by sentence length, for the last 10 years, is given in tables 3.12 and 4.8 of Prison Statistics England and Wales 2002.

The number of females received on remand by offence group, for the last 10 years, is given in table 2.9 of Prison Statistics England and Wales, years 1994 to 2002.

An individual who first enters the remand population and is subsequently received under sentence will be counted in both categories.

Copies of Prison Statistics England and Wales are available in the Library.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the percentage of (a) prisoners and (b) prison staff who are smokers; and what action he is taking to reduce the numbers. [143095]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 9 December 2003]: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Approximately 80 per cent. of prisoners smoke.

(b) There is no current estimate of the percentage of prison staff that smoke.

The Directorate of Prison Health has recently completed a pilot programme to establish best practice for smoking cessation services in prisons. Five prisons were involved in the pilots and the rollout programme is such that all prisons will be involved in these services by the end of the financial year.

Results so far indicate a similar success rate to that which is to be found with such initiatives in the community.

Delivery will be evaluated over the next two years and further development work is ongoing with Strathclyde University.

This year £500,000 has been allocated across all Primary Care Trusts that cater for prisons in their areas. It is planned that such funds will be made available each year through to 2006.

Since 1 July 1996, Prison Governors have been required to comply with the Prison Service Workplace Smoking Policy. The aim of this policy is to ensure that a smoke-free working environment can be enjoyed by everyone.

Smoking is not permitted in any office accommodation, including single occupancy offices and adjacent circulation spaces. Nor is smoking permitted in toilets, lifts and conference rooms.

In prisons, smoking is banned in all visits areas and it is recommended that governors prohibit smoking in all communal areas. In establishing local smoking policies, Governors are encouraged to complement them with the provision of smoking cessation courses for those wishing to give up.

Proceeds of Crime Act

Jim Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the value of assets seized by the Metropolitan Police under the provisions of the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 has been in 2003. [142979]

Caroline Flint: The total amount of cash seized by the Metropolitan Police Service (MPS) under new powers in the Act which came into effect on 30 December 2002 is £7,237,530. Cash seizures are subject to forfeiture proceedings in the magistrates' courts. The value of cash forfeited by the MPS under the new powers in the Act is £602,195.

The confiscation powers in the Act, which are dependent on securing a conviction, are triggered by offences committed after the provisions were brought into force on 24 March 2003. It will, therefore, be some time before such cases are dealt with by the Crown Court in numbers.

Special Immigration Appeals Commission

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account of Scots Law principles is taken by the Special Immigration Appeals Commission. [142728]

Mr. Leslie: I have been asked to reply.

The jurisdiction of the Special Immigration Appeals Commission is United Kingdom wide. The Commission takes into account whatever principles of law are drawn to its attention in the appeals before it. In the appeals heard so far no principles peculiar to Scots Law, or to the law of England and Wales, have arisen.

Women Prisoners

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides there were among the female prison population in (a) 2001, (b) 2002 and (c) 2003 to date. [140452]

Paul Goggins: The information requested is provided in the following table:

	Number of female self-inflicted deaths
2001	6
2002	9
2003[1]	14
Total	29

[1] to 26 November.

The Prison Service employs the term 'self-inflicted death' rather than 'suicide'. This includes all those deaths where it appears the person may have acted specifically to take his/her own life.

The prison population, and particularly the women's estate, contains a large number of prisoners with a combination of factors that raise their risk of suicide. These include psychiatric disorders, a history of self-harm, drug and alcohol abuse, homelessness, relationship problems and previous abuse, and family background problems. Since January 2001, there has been a 34 per cent. increase in the women prisoner population.

A proactive three-year strategy to develop policies and practices to reduce prisoner suicide and manage self-harm in prisons commenced in April 2001. The main principles of the strategy apply across all types of prisons and prisoners whether male or female. An investment of over £21 million through the three-year programme is enabling appropriate physical improvements to be made at six pilot sites, one of which is Eastwood Park prison and young offender institution.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of female prison establishments has the capacity to prescribe medications essential to detoxification in the evenings and at weekends. [141626]

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of female prison establishments has the capacity (a) in the evenings and (b) at weekends to prescribe medications essential to detoxification. [142894]

Paul Goggins: All of the seven prison establishments that receive women direct from court have the capacity to prescribe medications essential to detoxification in the evenings and weekends.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of female prison establishments has a psychiatrically qualified doctor on duty (a) during the working day, (b) during the evening and (c) on a 24-hour basis. [141627]

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the female prison establishments have a psychiatrically qualified doctor on duty (a) during the working day, (b) during the evening and (c) on a 24-hour basis. [142893]

Paul Goggins: The information requested is not available centrally. As part of the programme to implement the commitments to improved mental health services for prisoners in the NHS Plan (2000), the NHS is funding provision of multi-disciplinary mental health in-reach services at 94 establishments during 2003–04, including 11 for women. By 2006 such services will be available to all prison establishments.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the budget for the current financial year is for (a) mental health care to women prisoners and (b) the Dangerous and Severe Personality Disorder programme (i) in total and (ii) per capita. [141619]

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the estimated budget is (a) to provide mental health care to women prisoners and (b) for the Dangerous and Severe Personality Disorder programme (i) in total and (ii) per capita in 2003–04. [142895]

Paul Goggins: Funding for mental health services in prisons is not specifically identified or ring-fenced within prison budgets. "Changing the Outlook, a Strategy for Developing and Modernising Mental Health Services for Prisoners" (December 2001) estimated that around half of the Prison Service's then expenditure on health care was spent on mental health care. In the current financial year total Prison Service expenditure on health services in prisons in England and Wales (excluding the contractually managed prisons) is expected to be around £130 million, including £19 million on establishments holding only female prisoners. In addition, the Department of Health made £903,000 available for NHS mental health in-reach services in 11 women's prisons during 2003–04.

In the current financial year £17.039 million has been allocated to meet the Home Office contribution to the development and running costs of the Dangerous and Severe Personality Disorder Programme. It is, however, too early in the development of this programme to give meaningful per capita costs.

Young Offenders

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what academic and vocational education and training is available to young people serving custodial sentences. [141865]

Paul Goggins: The Government is investing £40 million over three years through the Youth Justice Board to provide a range of academic and vocational training opportunities for juvenile offenders. The specification for learning and skills being implemented includes programmes that allow young people to:

Improve language literacy and numeracy skills

Continue with GCSEs, A levels and AS levels

Prepare for going back to schools, colleges or other places of learning

Attain specific vocational skills and general employability skills

Address offending behaviours

Develop a range of study skills and make good use of learning materials

There is a target for 90 per cent of juvenile offenders to engage in full-time education, training or employment by the end of 2004.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what health services and support are available to young people (a) sentenced and (b) remanded to custody; and what specialist mental health services are available to repeat young offenders. [141866]

Paul Goggins: Young people held in prison custody, whether on remand or sentenced, have access to a full range of primary and specialist healthcare services through the institution's healthcare centre. Health care staff will arrange for any necessary specialist treatment to be provided, either within the institution or as an in-or-out patient at an outside hospital, as appropriate. A substantial programme of reform of prison health care, begun in 2000 on the basis of a partnership between the Prison Service and the NHS, is due to lead to the full devolution of prison health resources to NHS Primary Care Trusts by the end of March 2006.

Young offenders who need in-patient treatment for mental disorder may be transferred to psychiatric hospitals.

As part of the programme to implement the commitments to improved mental health services for prisoners in the NHS Plan (2000), the NHS is funding provision of multi-disciplinary mental health in-reach services at 94 prisons and young offender institutions during 2003–4. By 2006 such services will be available to all prison establishments.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) assaults and (b) instances of criminal damage there were in HM Young Offenders Institution Wetherby in each of the past five years. [140587]

Paul Goggins: The numbers of assaults in the establishment for each of the last five years, with numbers of serious assaults[1] shown in brackets, are:

	Number of assaults	Number of serious assaults
April 1999 to March 2000	145	(4)
April 2000 to March 2001	135	(4)
April 2001 to March 2002	117	(10)
April 2002 to March 2003	129	(5)
April 2003 to October 2003	79	(2)

[1] 'Serious assault' is defined as an assault on any person, including fights (if resulting in detention in outside hospital as an in-patient, medical treatment for concussion or internal injury, fractures, scalds and burns, stabbing, crushing, extensive or multiple bruising, black eye, broken nose, lost or broken tooth, cuts requiring suturing, bites, temporary or permanent blindness or sexual assaults).

Information about incidents of criminal damage is not recorded centrally for the Prison Service estate as a whole. However, since April 2003 there has been central recording by Prison Service juvenile group of incidents of significant damage[1] to the fabric of cells within the Prison Service juvenile estate. From April to October 2003 there were 64 such incidents at Wetherby.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sick days were taken by staff at HM Young Offenders Institution Wetherby in each of the past five years. [140589]

Paul Goggins: Information on staff sickness absence at Wetherby young offender institution is contained in the following table. Reliable data are not available prior to April 1999.

	Working days lost	Working days lost per person
1999–2000	2,456	10.1
2000–01	2,700	11.0
2001–02	3,984	15.5
2002–03	4,291	15.5
April to September 2003[1]	2,431	16.7

[1] April to September 2003 rate has been annualised.

The overall sick absence rate across the Prison Service has fallen this year and currently stands at 13.3 working days per member of staff per year. The Director General is committed to reducing this level further. At Wetherby, the increase in absence since 2001–02 was due in particular to a rise in long-term sickness absence.

However, I understand that there has been a significant reduction in such cases this year. In addition, a six-month pilot project has recently begun at Wetherby to provide a counselling and support service to staff to address issues associated with stress. It is too early to assess the impact of this project.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the reasons are for (a) the removal of staff batons and (b) the proposed removal of staff uniforms at HM Young Offenders Institution Wetherby. [140590]

Paul Goggins: The policy on the use of staves and mini-batons is set out in Prison Service Order 1600. Female staff who have been trained in its use may be issued with a mini-baton, and this applies at juvenile establishments and units, including Wetherby. In line with the policy relating to juvenile establishments and units, staff at Wetherby have been required to follow the practice of not carrying staves within the establishment.

In June 2003, after seeking clarification of the policy from Prison Service headquarters, the Governor ended the practice of issuing staff with staves when escorting young people outside the establishment.

Staff in the operational support and prison officer grades at Wetherby continue to wear the traditional Prison Service uniform. Prison Service Order 4950 sets out a requirement for a less formal uniform for staff. Consultations on the implementation of this aspect of the Order are taking place at a national level. The Prison Service remains committed to implementing a uniform that is appropriate for use in juvenile establishments.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Disadvantaged Young People

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if she will contribute to the partnership of the Prince's Trust Football Initiative, FA Premier League, Football Foundation and Professional Footballers Association in helping disadvantaged young people; and if she will make a statement; [143447]

(2) what assessments she has made of the contribution made by the Prince's Trust Football Initiative to tackling social exclusion of young people. [143444]

Mr. Caborn: The Government fully support the aims of the Prince's Trust Football Scheme, which uses sport to offer personal development programmes to young people aged 16–25, the majority of whom are unemployed, have recently left social service care, or are ex-offenders. It is noteworthy that of 4,000 participants between 1997 and 2002, some 73 per cent. went on to find employment, or to further education or training.

The Scheme receives £250,000 a year from the Football Foundation's Community and Education Fund, which is part-funded by Sport England and the New Opportunities Fund.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION

Devon (Ward Boundaries)

Nick Harvey: To ask the hon. Member for Gosport, representing the Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission what progress the Electoral Commission is making towards making orders giving effect to the Boundary Committee's recommendations for Devon county council's ward boundaries; and if he will make a statement. [143736]

Mr. Viggers: I understand that it is the intention of the Electoral Commission to make the order implementing new ward boundaries by summer 2004 so that they will be in effect for the county elections due in 2005.

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Big Conversation

Norman Baker: To ask the Leader of the House pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for North-East Hertfordshire (Mr. Heald) of 9 December 2003, Official Report, column 355W, what estimate he has made of the amount of time spent by (a) Ministers and (b) special advisers on the Big Conversation; and what costs are associated with that time. [144118]

Mr. Hain: The involvement of Ministers and special advisers in this exercise is undertaken in accordance with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Code of Conduct for Special Advisers. It is not possible to provide an estimate of their time spent on the exercise but the cost will be minimal.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Animal Health

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress has been made in implementing the Animal Health (Amendment) Act 1998. [142777]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Animal Health (Amendment) Act 1998 extended the scope of the Order-making powers relating to importation in the Animal Health Act 1981 to cover the welfare of animals in quarantine. Between December 2000 and March 2001, MAFF undertook a consultation exercise on proposals for legislation to update the law on quarantine by reforming the quarantine rules to bring quarantine kennels up to the best modern practice and by introducing statutory welfare provisions.

Owing to the impact on resources of the foot and mouth disease outbreak during 2001, follow-up to that consultation was deferred. Since then, we have reached agreement on the EU Regulation on the movement of pet animals which will require some changes to the quarantine legislation. We are also preparing for consultation on an Animal Welfare Bill. We shall therefore need to review the proposed changes to the quarantine legislation to take account of these and other developments. I expect to complete the review in the first part of 2004.

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on how she intends to implement the recommendations of the Farm Animal Welfare Council's Report on the Welfare of Farmed Animals at Slaughter or Killing. [143558]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 11 December 2003]: I refer my hon. Friend to my earlier answer given on 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 209W. Decisions on how to implement the recommendations will be taken once the public consultation exercise on the draft response has been completed.

Arable Crops

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what sanctions apply to (a) farmers and (b) her Department in circumstances where an incorrect assessment has been made of areas planted for (i) wheat and (ii) other arable crops in the annual (A) June return and (B) IACS system. [143666]

Alun Michael: The June census is a UK survey designed to provide information for statistical purposes and to support policy decisions. In England it is carried out under the Agricultural Statistics Act 1979 which requires farmers to provide the information requested.

Any mistakes are normally simply corrected and we are not aware of any sanctions ever being applied in such issues. Defra seeks to produce the best estimates it can at particular points in the year. By the nature of the information, some figures will be provisional and subject to revision. The Department will republish if a mistake that significantly affects the results is found.

The IACS rules are part of the EU legislation governing the operation of the Common Agricultural Policy. In respect of arable area payments, they treat wheat and other arable crops in the same way. Where farmers claim arable area payments for less than their planted area there is no sanction. Where they overclaim by a small margin the claim is merely corrected. For larger overclaims the IACS system prescribes a scale of sanctions, which at the extreme can lead to the loss of all payment for the current year and to an equivalent sum being recovered from the claims made over the following three years. No automatic sanctions apply to Defra in such cases, but the European Commission has power to apply ad hoc financial penalties to member states who are found not to have sufficiently robust systems for inspecting claims and applying the prescribed sanctions.

Biopesticides

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps the Government are taking to speed up approvals for biopesticides. [143918]

Alun Michael: The Government are trying to find ways of speeding up the approval process for biopesticides. The Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD) is carrying out a pilot exercise exploring ways of reducing data requirements and thus the costs and time taken to secure approval.

PSD has also appointed an "in-house" Small Business Champion to assist companies generally and specifically in making applications for approval of biological control agents.

However, PSD must ensure that approved pesticides cause no unacceptable risks to people or the environment. There are, therefore, certain essential data requirements that must be met, regardless of whether an application for a pesticide is for a conventional or an alternative product, such as a biopesticide.

Bovine TB

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether farmers are able to obtain insurance cover for TB infection in dairy cattle after a TB breakdown and subsequent claim. [141083]

Mr. Bradshaw: It is Government policy to pay compensation at 100 per cent. of the market value, with no upper limit, for cattle that are compulsorily slaughtered under TB control measures. Farmers therefore do not need to take out insurance for their animals. Theoretically, insurance can be bought to cover other consequential losses for which compensation is not paid, but this is a commercial matter between the farmers and their insurers. Section 34 (5) of the Animal Health Act 1981 explicitly allows insurers to deduct the amount of Government compensation from the value of any payout that they make.

Insurance companies will make their own decisions on whether to insure, and about the size of premiums, based on their assessment of the risk. Recent contact with insurance industry early in 2003 indicated that, although companies are honouring existing policies, they are not offering new policies to cover TB in cattle herds, particularly in areas where TB is increasingly prevalent. This is because farmers do not wish to take the cover in areas where the risk is low (such as Yorkshire), but do wish to purchase cover in areas of high incidence (such as the South West). However, the insurance companies consider that the financial risks in offering insurance policies in areas of high incidence are too high at present.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total cost was of compensation paid to farmers in respect of compulsory purchase of bovine animals slaughtered as a result of TB infection (a) between 1994 and 1998 and (b) since 1998. [142457]

Mr. Bradshaw: The data requested are provided in the tables.

Cost of compensation paid in Great Britain as a result of TB infection between 1994 and 1998

	Cost (£)[1]
1994	2,019,911
1995	1,988,820
1996	2,275,481
1997	2,386,029
1998	3,605,242
Total	12,275,483

Cost of compensation paid in Great Britain as a result of TB infection between 1999 and 2002

	Cost (£)[1]
1999	5,770,983
2000	7,307,797
2001	7,074,125
2002	[2]23, 138,512
Total	43,291,417

[2] In 2001, the TB testing and control programme was largely suspended due to the foot and mouth disease (FMD) outbreak. Since testing resumed in 2002, resources have been concentrated on herds with overdue TB tests that would have had a longer period in which to contract the disease. Also, the proportion of high risk herds being tested post-FMD is greater than that prior to the outbreak. As a result, the number of TB reactors identified and slaughtered (and hence compensated for) in 2002 is not comparable to those identified and slaughtered in previous years.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the effect of shortages of large animal vets for successful control of TB in cattle. [141975]

Mr. Bradshaw: There are no plans to carry out such an assessment. However, the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs Committee issued a report on Vets and Veterinary Services on 23 October 2003 (HC 703), which considers wider concerns about the numbers of large animal practices and the contribution of the veterinary profession to the wider animal health and welfare strategy.

The report contains a number of recommendations and conclusions, and we will be seeking the views of the veterinary profession and other interested parties on the issues raised.

Badgers

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of whether badgers are capable of accessing mineral and feed troughs positioned at heights in excess of those advised by the Department; and what height that evidence indicates badgers are capable of accessing. [141503]

Mr. Bradshaw: Recent work carried out by the Central Science Laboratory has established that badgers are capable of climbing into feed troughs set at 115cm above ground level, at which height they are inaccessible to cattle.

Dead Animals

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the effect of the provisions in the Hunting Bill of Session 2002–03 on disposal by farmers of dead animals. [143554]

Alun Michael: The Animal By-Products Regulations 2003 permit hunt kennels to continue collecting fallen stock; however, they will be required to upgrade to knackers' yard standards if they wish to collect fallen stock for the purposes of feeding to hounds. The effect of a ban on hunting would depend on decisions made by those who currently offer a service and on choices made by farmers leading to take-up of the National Fallen Stock Scheme which the Government hope will be up and running early in 2004. Most hunts already make a charge and there is no reason why such a service should not continue as a business opportunity irrespective of the future of hunting.

Regional Producers (Wiltshire) Ltd.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much public money has been paid to Regional Producers (Wiltshire) Ltd; and who the payees were. [143597]

Alun Michael: Regional Producers (Wiltshire) Ltd. have received grants worth £57,784 from public sector bodies. This comprised £20,000 from Business Link for Berkshire and Wiltshire from the South West Foot and Mouth Recovery Fund which they administered on behalf of the South West Regional Development Agency, and the balance from Great Western Enterprise, which is also funded by the South West Regional Development Agency.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many farmers were participants in Regional Producers (Wiltshire) Ltd.; and if she will make a statement. [143599]

Alun Michael: The conditions for providing public funding for Regional Producers (Wiltshire) Ltd. required them to secure a minimum of 25 shareholder members and this was achieved.

Regional Waste Plans

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the Regional Waste Plan for the South West is expected to be published; and what proposals it will make with regard to the designation of sub-regional zones. [142274]

Keith Hill: I have been asked to reply.

The Regional Waste Strategy for the South West region is being developed by the South West Regional Assembly. Currently it is planned to commence consultation on the strategy in early February 2004 with a view to publishing the completed strategy by July 2004.

The strategy is still under development and will be using data based on former county areas of the South West as these are currently the best available. These data will be used to develop sub regional indicative capacity allocations based on the former county areas.

Tropical Plywood

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much tropical plywood was imported by each EU member state in the last year for which figures are available. [143222]

John Healey: Imports to the UK are given in "Overseas Trade Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Figures on trade between other countries are not available.

Wind Turbines

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact on wildlife of wind turbines. [142042]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

Studies of the impact of wind farms on wildlife, in particular birds, suggests that there is only a small risk of bird strikes from the operation of properly sited wind turbines. In addition, under the normal planning regime and for consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 regime or the Transport and Works Act 1992, wind farm developers are required to consider all environmental aspects of wind energy projects and produce an Environmental Impact Assessment. These assessments are available to the public.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Services (Ethnicity)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of a person's ethnicity on their access to public services. [143574]

Fiona Mactaggart: The Government publishes an annual edition of Race Equality in Public Services which brings together key performance management data from across the range of Government Departments. The indicators used consist of three main parts:

The first looks at comparative perceptions of public services between minority ethnic and majority communities;

The second part uses performance data to describe the impact of a range of key services on different minority ethnic communities, as compared with the majority community;

The third looks at what the Government are doing to promote and improve race equality within the Civil Service and related services.

The fourth annual publication will be published early in 2004.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many experiments on animals were carried out in UK laboratories in 2002–03; what action he is taking to encourage alternative methods of experimentation; and if he will make a statement. [143178]

Caroline Flint: For the year 2002, the most recent year for which complete annual statistics are available and published, 2,752,278 scientific procedures were carried out on animals in the UK. Mice, rats and other rodents, along with fish and birds, were used in some 96 per cent. of the total.

The use of animals in regulated procedures is prohibited by the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 in cases where a scientifically valid non-animal alternative is available. The Act also requires that, where replacement of animals is not possible, the number used in any licensed project must be reduced to the minimum, and the procedures must be refined to ensure that no unnecessary suffering is caused. This approach—of replacing, reducing and refining—is known as application of the 3Rs.

Most work on the 3Rs is neither done by Government nor with Government money, as industry spends many millions of pounds each year on the search for and development of alternatives. Nonetheless, every year the Home Office makes available to the Animal Procedures Committee a budget for research aimed at developing or promoting the use of the 3Rs. Details of completed research projects are published in the annual report of the Animal Procedures Committee, which is available from The Stationery Office. The amount made available to the Committee for 2003–04 for this specific purpose is £280,000.

This is not the only money spent by the Government on the development of the 3Rs, as other Departments and public funding bodies are also active in this area. Indeed, it is estimated that the total spent across Government is in the region of £2 million to £10 million each year.

To take this further on an international level, we continue to support the European Centre for the Validation of Alternative Methods (ECVAM) through contributions to the European Union, and last year we co-sponsored the 4th World Congress on Alternatives and Animal Use in the Life Sciences.

The Government support and encourage the development and promotion of the 3Rs in a number of other ways. For example, we are currently exploring the recommendation by the House of Lords Select Committee on Animals in Scientific Procedures, which reported in July 2002, that there should be a United Kingdom centre for research into the 3Rs. This is being considered by the Inter-Departmental Group on the 3Rs, led by the Home Office.

The Inter-Departmental Group is also reviewing the effectiveness of the Inter-Departmental Data Sharing Concordat announced in August 2000, which commits United Kingdom regulatory authorities to help resolve legal and other obstacles to data sharing between clients, in order to reduce animal testing.

In the longer term, we believe that further significant reduction in animal use will, and must, continue to rely largely on the scientific community's own efforts to develop, validate and adopt more advanced methods based on the 3Rs. This is not an area where quick gains can be expected, but any lack of progress in research into alternatives is more often due to the limitations of science, rather than to inadequate funding.

Correspondence

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to respond to the letter of 23 July, from the hon. Member for Moray, with Home Office acknowledgement reference number PO11706/3; and if he will make a statement. [142026]

Beverley Hughes: I am sorry for the delay in replying to the hon. Member's letter of 23 July 2003.

Regrettably, this matter was originally submitted to the wrong unit who did not follow the matter up.

We are in the process of appointing an independent appraiser to review Mr. Christie's case. I have instructed IND officials to have the report completed by Christmas and I will then be in a position to write to the hon. Member.

Criminal Justice System

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the responses to the British Crime Survey questions on public confidence in the criminal justice system, broken down by criminal justice board area. [140596]

Paul Goggins: The responses to the British Crime Survey (BCS) questions on confidence in the criminal justice system from the 2001–02 BCS were published in the Crime in England and Wales 2001–02: Supplementary Volume in January 2003. Chapter 8 contains the information about confidence, and table 8.04 contains the figures broken down by Local Criminal Justice Board area.

The equivalent data for 2002–03 are due to be published in January by the Research, Development and Statistics Directorate at the Home Office in the upcoming supplementary volume to the 2002–03 British Crime Survey. The final title for this publication is still being decided.

In the meantime the confidence data for 2002–03 were made available to Local Criminal Justice Boards in July 2003 in the guidance document "Improving Public Satisfaction and Confidence in the Criminal Justice System". The document is available on the CJS website at: www.cjsonline.org.

Foreign Seafarers

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedure there is for verifying that there are no qualified or experienced workers available when work permits are issued to foreign seafarers. [140670]

Beverley Hughes: The usual requirement is that the employer must demonstrate that they have been unable to fill the vacancy with a suitably qualified worker from the resident labour force. Employers will normally be required to provide evidence that they have advertised the post in an appropriate medium and the grounds on which they considered resident workers who applied for the post to be unsuitable. These requirements are waived only in respect of intra-corporate transfers, board level posts, inward investment posts and those occupations where Work Permits (UK) has established, on the basis of independent labour market information, that there is an acute shortage of suitably qualified resident workers. The latter do not include seafarers.

Immigration Control

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many UK immigration officers are in post working at (a) French ports, (b) Belgian ports and (c) other European ports on matters concerning immigration control. [142160]

Beverley Hughes: No UK immigration officers are in post in French ports but officers are currently deployed to French ports on a daily basis. There are 200 officers across three operational grades who are based in Cheriton near Folkestone and who are liable to work in the UK control zone at the Eurotunnel site in Coquelles where the UK Immigration Service provides 24-hour coverage.

There are 125 officers across three operational grades based at Waterloo International who perform duties in Lille Europe, Paris Gare du Nord, where the UK Immigration service covers all UK-bound Eurostar services. Officers based at Waterloo also assist the Belgian Immigration authorities in an advisory capacity at the Gare du Midi in Brussels.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many potential illegal entrants to this country have been discovered at French ports in the last 12 months; and what steps have been taken against them. [142161]

Beverley Hughes: The French authorities do not publish figures of illegal immigrants discovered at Channel ports.

French policy is to remove illegal immigrants discovered in the Calais area, and take them to other parts of France to be processed where possible, thus disrupting contact with illegal networks. French police continue to arrest and imprison facilitators.

In addition, the UK and France have together taken vigorous action to combat illegal immigration to the UK following the closure of the Red Cross centre at Sangatte. Initiatives include the deployment of high-tech freight searching equipment to Calais, and British immigration officers working in an advisory capacity alongside the French Police aux Frontieres (PAF) at the port of Calais. Plans are under way to allow British immigration officers to exercise their full control powers at the ports of Calais, Dunkirk and Boulogne, as they already do at the Channel Tunnel. PAF officers will similarly be able to operate their controls at Dover.

Indicative management information suggests that the wide range of measures now in place in Calais and Coquelles has resulted in over 6,000 people being prevented from travelling to the UK from these points in the first nine months of this year.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many heat detector machines are installed at (a) Dover, (b) Folkestone, (c) Portsmouth, (d) Cheriton and (e) other UK ports. [142164]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration Service does not use heat detector machines however, it does deploy and operate a range of detection technology to detect clandestine entrants.

Heartbeat detectors and a gamma ray scanner are deployed at Dover. This technology is not employed at Folkestone, Portsmouth, Cheriton or any other UK ports, although x-ray scanners operated by Customs are routinely deployed at UK ports. Additionally, carbon dioxide detectors and body detection dogs, are deployed by the UK immigration service on an intelligence led basis by mobile teams operating at various UK ports in line with current threat levels in support of local immigration freight searching activity.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last 12 months heat detector machines at (a) Calais, (b) Coquelles and (c) Dover have broken down or malfunctioned. [142165]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration Service does not employ heat detector machines in the detection of clandestine entrants. However it does deploy and operate a range of detection technologies to detect clandestine entrants including heartbeat detectors, gamma ray scanners, carbon dioxide detectors and Passive Millimetric Wave Imagers (PMMWI), technology that relies on naturally occurring background radiation to produce images indicating human presence in lorries. The equipment receives quarterly maintenance checks to ensure continued effectiveness. During the past 12 months occasional minor technical problems have been encountered. But these have been resolved, either by remote support or by prompt site attendance of an engineer.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many heat detector machines are installed at (a) Calais and (b) Coquelles; and what the corresponding figures were in October 2002. [142166]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration Service does not employ heat detector machines in the detection of clandestine entrants. However it does deploy and operate a range of detection technologies to detect clandestine entrants.

In October 2002 one heartbeat detector was in operation in Calais. There are now three heartbeat units in operation at the port together with two PMMWs (Passive Millimetric Wave Imagers), technology that relies on naturally occurring background radiation to produce images indicating human presence in lorries. This equipment has been loaned by the UK Immigration Service to the Calais port operator and is operated by their staff.

At Coquelles the Immigration Service operate a heartbeat detector and carbon dioxide detectors within the UK Control Zone. Carbon dioxide detectors have been in operation since before October 2002 while the heartbeat detector has been in operation since May 2003.

Oakington Reception Centre

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what duties there are upon those released from Oakington Reception Centre in each of the last two years to report to the police or other authorities; and how many such persons have breached such duties. [142159]

Beverley Hughes: Oakington receives asylum claimants who are entitled to reside in the countries on the fast track suitable list. This list contains the 24 Non-Suspensive Appeal (NSA) designated countries and others which are believed to be suitable for a rapid decision-making process.

The outcome of claims from those on the NSA designated list will normally be removal if they have been served with a clearly unfounded certified decision to refuse asylum. An appeal may be submitted only from abroad.

Non-NSA claimants who receive negative decisions may be detained further at a Removal Centre or granted Temporary Admission pending the outcome of any in-country appeal. Over the period referred to in the question, the network of reporting facilities and the number of those leaving Oakington who have been required to report has grown, but any restrictions are dependent upon the circumstances of the individual case.

The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information on Oakington and other asylum statistics is published quarterly. The most recent publication covering the third quarter of 2003 is now available on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html

Projects (St. Helens)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which projects have been (a) wholly and (b) partly funded by his Department in St. Helens since 1997; when each project was announced; when it started or was expected to start; what funding was provided by (i) Government and (ii) a third party; what third party provided funding; what the target group of the project was; what the projected outcome of the project was; and what the name of the project was. [141277]

Ms Blears: The information requested is not available for Home Office funding in St. Helens prior to the introduction of the Crime Reduction Programme in 1999. Furthermore files for projects funded before the introduction of the Safer Communities Initiative in 2002–03 are now in the Government Office's registry, and to retrieve them would incur disproportionate costs.

Sentencing

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders were jailed in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 under section 111 of the provisions of the Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000, for a third offence of burglary. [141645]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 3 December 2003]: Six people were sentenced under section 111 of the Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 (previously section 4 of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997) in England and Wales for a third offence of burglary in 2001 and two in 2002.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Private Member's Clubs

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Minister for Women (1) what research she has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated since July 2002 to identify private members' sports clubs which are voluntarily removing rules which lead to different gender playing practices; [141555]

(2) what percentage of private members' clubs deny women members equality of membership rights. [141556]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 9 December 2003]: There has been no formal assessment of sex discriminatory practices in private members' sports clubs.

Sex discriminatory treatment in private clubs is contrary to this Government's principles of opportunity for all. We have in the past consulted informally with interested parties about their progress in reducing such discrimination by voluntary means. We are keeping this matter under review.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Exports

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many surface to air missiles have been (a) exported and (b) transferred in each of the last 10 years; and to which countries. [143076]

Nigel Griffiths: The DTI holds information on licences issued but not on those not used.

The details of all export licences are published by destination in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls.

British Energy

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to increase the current £200 million loan facility to British Energy; and when she expects to take a final decision on the future of the company. [141666]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 11 December 2003]: I refer my hon. Friend to the written statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 1 December 2003, Official Report, columns 50 and 51WS.

British Energy's proposed restructuring will not be implemented until all conditions, including receipt of European Commission State Aid approval, are met. The company has put a back-stop date of 31 January 2005 for the restructuring to be completed, although it is expected to be implemented before then.

If the Government are not satisfied that British Energy will be viable in all reasonable foreseeable conditions, or if there is a material adverse change in British Energy's position, the Government have reserved the right to withdraw its support for the restructuring. The Government remain ready for administration if any of the restructuring conditions are not met.

Business Investment

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to what she attributes the change in the 2003 business investment forecast between Budget 2002 and Budget 2003. [143427]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The reasons for the change in business investment forecasts between Budget 2002 and Budget 2003 are clearly set out in Chapter B of the Budget 2003 document (HC500).

Civil Partnership Bill

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the provisions of the Civil Partnership Bill apply to Scotland. [142626]

Jacqui Smith: The Scottish Executive has stated its preference for the Scottish Parliament to be invited to agree that provisions are included in the Civil Partnership Bill to establish a status of civil partnership in Scotland. The Scottish Executive is currently consulting on its Civil Partnership proposals and a final decision on the preferred legislative route will be made when the consultation has concluded. Including Scottish provisions within a UK Bill will be subject to the agreement of the Scottish Parliament.

The Government are prepared to include such Scottish provisions in its Bill on this basis.

The Bill will also make amendments to legislation which is reserved to Westminster and extends to Scotland.

Directors (Pay)

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research her Department has conducted into the pay gap between male and female directors. [140524]

Ms Hewitt: My Department has not conducted any specific research into the pay gap between male and female directors, however we do know that increases in the pay gap for very high earners drove the increase in the mean full-time pay gap figure last year.

As a consequence we provided a financial contribution towards the recent research 'The Female FTSE Report 2003' which showed that the number of female directorships currently stands at 101, up by 20 per cent. on last year. We also have a programme of work intended to encourage diversity in the boardroom.

East Midlands Development Agency

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the annual advertising budget of the East Midland's Development Agency was in financial year 2002–03. [140807]

Jacqui Smith: East Midland's Development Agency's advertising costs for 2002–03 were £104,000.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers she has to prevent a cut in electricity supply due to severe winter weather. [141889]

Mr. Timms: The market has responded to concerns about a possible shortfall by returning plant to service so that margins are at a similar level to the mid 1990's. However no system can be guaranteed and in the event of a possible power shortage there are a number of steps that NGT could take in order to maintain supplies and avoid rota cuts.

The Government have robust, and well rehearsed plans, for dealing with extreme circumstances that cannot be dealt with by NGT's normal operating arrangements.

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether it is the policy of her Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on Departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142816]

Ms Hewitt: Departmental policy is to promote the use of fair trade products. However, this is set against the background of the need to obtain best value for money, the EC procurement rules and the Department's objectives. Within these guidelines the Depatment is committed to supporting ethical trading wherever possible.

Within our main headquarters buildings, fair trade tea and coffee are as a matter of course (a) sold in the Departmental Staff Restaurants and (b) used for receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors.

Financial Advisers

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the development of an international kitemark for financial advisers by the International Standards Organisation. [142846]

Ms Hewitt: The International Organisation for Standardisation (ISO) is developing voluntary standards in the field of personal financial planning. The aim of the standards is to provide an international benchmark for financial planners to work towards and to increase recognition of the financial planning process to ultimately benefit the consumer. The UK member of ISO is the British Standards Institution (BSI) which is independent of Government. The current draft standards are available from BSI for public comment until 4 January 2004.

Financial Journalism

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on her assessment of the probable consequences of the proposed EU legislation regarding investment services for financial journalism. [142844]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

Article 6 (5) of the EU's Market Abuse Directive requires member states to adopt appropriate regulation governing the production and dissemination of investment recommendations. The regulation has to ensure that those making investment recommendations or disseminating such recommendations take reasonable care to present the information fairly and disclose any interests or conflicts of interest they have relating to the relevant financial instruments. Recital 22 to the Market Abuse Directive indicates that appropriate regulation in relation to Article 6 (5) can include appropriate mechanisms for self regulation. The technical arrangements for compliance with Article 6 (5) were set out in an implementing measure agreed by the European Securities Committee on 29 October.

The Treasury will issue a consultation document next year on proposals to transpose the Market Abuse Directive and its implementing measures into UK legislation. At this stage it is expected that the consultation document will outline proposals that journalists either producing or disseminating investment recommendations will be subject to self-regulatory mechanisms. This approach should enable traditional media freedoms in the UK to be maintained while supporting market integrity.

Food Supplements

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the EU meetings held in 2003 which (a) Ministers and (b) officials from the Department have attended where the maximum permitted level of nutrients in food supplements was discussed; and if she will make a statement. [141412]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Parliamentary Under-secretary of State for Health on 3 December 2003, Official Report, columns 76–77.

Internet

Linda Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will estimate the number of people over 60 years of age who are connected to the internet. [143524]

Mr. Timms: According to the July 2003 ONS Omnibus Survey, 22 per cent. of people over the age of 60, an estimated 2.7 million, use the internet.

ISO 9001:2000

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how she will ensure that more than the estimated 20 per cent. of United Kingdom companies comply with ISO 9001:2000 before 15 December. [140664]

Ms Hewitt: My Department does not collect information on companies certified to the ISO 9000 standards. However figures produced by the International Standards Organisation indicate that, in December 2002, there were 60,960 ISO 9000 certifications in the UK. Companies have had three years notice that the transition period for the migration of accredited certification, from the 1994 editions of the standard to ISO 9001:2000, would end on 14 December 2003. My Department has provided information about the new edition on its website. From the information my officials have received from representatives of certification bodies, about 90 per cent. of their UK customers are expected to make the transition successfully by the due date.

Job Creation

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs her Department (a) created and (b) safeguarded in each year since 1997, broken down by (i) local authority region and (ii) region; and what the cost per job was in each instance. [143138]

Jacqui Smith: Information on the Department's principal scheme (Regional Selective Assistance) for job creation and safeguarding is given as follows, by region. Similar information by local authority region is not available.

Joined-up Government

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list (a) joint targets and (b) areas of joint responsibility between her Department and each other Government Department. [143141]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Joint Targets

The Department's Public Service Agreement targets from the 2002 Spending Review include the following joint targets:

PSA Target 1

> Demonstrate progress by 2006 on the Government's long term objective of raising the rate of UK productivity growth over the economic cycle, improving competitiveness and narrowing the productivity gap with the US, France and Germany. "Joint target with HM Treasury"

PSA Target 4

> (part) ... improve the environment and the sustainable use of natural resources, including through the use of energy saving technologies, to help to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 12.5 per cent. from 1990 levels and moving towards a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010. "Joint target with Department for Food and Rural Affairs"

PSA Target 5

> Secure agreement by 2005 to a significant reduction in trade barriers leading to improved trading opportunities for the UK and developing countries. "Joint target with the Department for International Development and Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO)"

PSA Target 7

> Make sustainable improvements in the economic performance of all English regions and over the long term reduce the persistent gap in growth rates between the regions, defining measures to improve performance and reporting progress against these measures by 2006. "Joint target with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and HM Treasury"

PSA Target 10

> In the three years to 2006, taking account of the economic cycle, increase the employment rate and significantly reduce the difference between the overall employment rate and the employment rate of ethnic minorities. "Joint target with Department for Work and Pensions"

PSA Target 11

> Deliver a measurable improvement in the business performance of UK Trade & Investment's customers; and maintain the UK as the prime location in the European Union (EU) for foreign direct investment. "Joint target with FCO"

> In addition, "PSA target 10" requires the DTI to work with all departments to bring about measurable improvements in gender equality across a range of indicators.

(b) Areas of joint responsibility

The Department has joint working arrangements with a number of government departments across a wide range of its activities. Examples include UK Trade and Investment, a joint DTI/FCO organisation which has as its objective the enhanced competitiveness of companies in the UK through overseas sales and investments and a continuing high level of quality foreign direct investment; the dual support system by which the DTI and DfES provide funding for university research; the enforcement of the National Minimum Wage by the Inland Revenue; and the "business.gov" programme, through which the Small Business Service, a DTI agency, is working with departments and organisations such as Inland Revenue, Customs and Excise and the Health and Safety Executive to develop more joined-up customer-focused services for business.

Motor Industry

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much funding MG Rover has received in total from the Foresight Vehicle LINK programme. [142121]

Jacqui Smith: Since the sale of MG Rover Group in May 2002, MG Rover has received one offer of grant for £62,500 under the Foresight Vehicle LINK programme.

Overseas Relocation

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research her Department has carried out into the number of United Kingdom firms considering relocating all or part of their operations abroad. [140518]

Ms Hewitt: The Government take the issue of offshoring of UK operations very seriously. However, decisions on location are commercial matters for companies to take. We nevertheless need to understand better what is happening, and to this end we have launched a consultation document inviting views from businesses, employees and their unions, and consumer groups. I will also chair a round-table seminar in the new year, to help inform the debate on the impacts of offshoring.

Post Office Closures

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what response she is making to the letter from Postwatch of 1 December about the closure of post offices at Cowgate and Felham Hall Drive, Newcastle. [142586]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 9 December 2003]: I expect Post Office Ltd. to consider carefully the comments and representations by Postwatch and others during the public consultation on the proposed closure of Cowgate and Fenham sub post offices under the Urban Network Reinvention programme. I understand that the consultation period continues until 6 January.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what action she is taking to support derogations in support of applications to build new hydro-electric developments; and if she will make a statement; [143196]

(2) what measures she is taking to support small and medium size companies promoting hydro-electric generating projects. [143197]

Mr. Timms: Output from some hydro-electric generating stations attracts support under the Renewables Obligation (RO), a market driven support mechanism that creates an assured market for renewables generators through to 2027.

Specifically, hydro generating stations which meet the following criteria qualify for support under the RO:

> hydro stations under 20MW, subject to their fulfilling requirements on refurbishment;

> hydro stations of 1.25 MW or less that were built before 1990 that have always been in private ownership are eligible for the Obligation without having to refurbish;

> all other stations up to a maximum capacity of 20MW and built before 1990 must refurbish to qualify;

> all new stations commissioned after April 2002 will qualify.

Since the introduction of the RO, evidence shows an increase in the number of new hydro and refurbished hydro stations coming online. This year three new small hydro developments have received consent and a further eight applications are currently under consideration.

Grants are also available for small community or household schemes under the Clear Skies initiative.

Science and Society Directorate

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the (a) composition, (b) budget and (c) activities of the Science and Society Directorate. [143542]

Ms Hewitt: As part of Office of Science and Technology the role of the Science and Society Directorate is an overarching, strategic cross departmental one, working with partners to identify and tackle major issues and to provide fresh evidence, insights, approaches and solutions.

The Directorate was established in July to contribute to driving up UK productivity and competitiveness by improving the work of the Government on: ensuring young people are equipped to engage with scientific issues as active citizens of the future; raising public awareness, engagement and support of science; ensuring there is a sufficient supply of scientists and engineers; and promoting the involvement of women and ethnic minorities in science.

The Directorate includes 13 staff and brings together four teams: the DiverSETy Team, which is currently responding to the Greenfield Report; the Public Engagement Team which works to increase public awareness of the role of science in society and everyday life; the Science in Schools Team, which works with external interests to deliver activities into schools that enhance the curricula; and the Supply of Scientists Team, which is focusing on responding to the Roberts Review.

The Directorate is responsible for the oversight of direct expenditure of £7 million this year.

Secondments

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the purpose was of each secondment of a departmental employee to a company since May; what recompense the company made to the Department for the secondee; what the cost of the secondee to the Department was over the period of the secondment, including wages and pension contribution; and if she will make a statement. [143210]

Ms Hewitt: Since May 2003, we have seconded five members of DTI to companies for a period of three months or more. The information requested is as follows:

Purpose of secondment	Reimbursement to the Department (£)	Cost to the Department
A developmental opportunity to increase knowledge of environmental issues in the energy sector	16,062 per year	Nil
A developmental opportunity to increase knowledge of the financial services sector.	45,523 per year	Nil
A developmental opportunity to gain first-hand experience of sales and marketing in a large plc.		Net cost nil. The Department remains responsible for the secondee' s salary costs during the secondment, but in return the Department receives a secondee from the host organisation
A developmental opportunity to increase business awareness by working in a large plc.		Net cost nil. The Department remains responsible for the secondees's salary costs during the secondment, but in return the Department receives a secondee from the host organisation
A developmental opportunity to increase knowledge of the international nuclear energy business.		Net cost nil. The Department remains responsible for the secondee's salary costs during the secondment, but in return the Department receives a secondee from the host organisation

In addition, we also run a programme of one week attachment—the "Week in Business" scheme for Senior Civil Servants. The aim of the "Week in Business" short-term external attachment scheme is to help the Department to become more outward facing with a greater understanding of the issues facing our external stakeholders. It is also key in helping members of the SCS to gain experience of different ways of working so that good practice can be adopted internally.

The scheme is also a mens of promoting the DTI to our external customers and making them more aware of how the Department operates and what we can offer.

Stamps

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many (a) first and (b) second class stamps have been sold in (i) the UK and (ii) Scotland in each year since 1999; [144078]

(2) how many (a) first and (b) second class Scottish definitive stamps have been sold in Scotland in each year since 1999; [144079]

(3) how many (a) post offices and (b) retail outlets sell stamps in Scotland; [144080]

(4) what estimate she has made of the cost of making the (a) first and (b) second class Scottish definitive stamps available in book format for sale at (i) post offices and (ii) retail outlets in Scotland. [144083]

Mr. Timms: These are operational matters for Royal Mail Group plc. I have therefore asked the Chief Executive of Royal Mail to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Steel Tariffs (USA)

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the costs incurred by UK industry arising from the decision by the US Administration to impose tariffs on steel in March 2002. [140945]

Ms Hewitt: UK steel exports to the US fell significantly following the March 2002 decision. The impact on the UK industry was lessened to an extent by a number of decisions by the US to exclude particular products from the scope of the safeguard, and by the adoption by the EU of a mechanism to prevent surges of imported steel from third countries. These decisions, which followed lobbying by the Government in support of the steel industry, brought 74 per cent. of UK steel exports to the US outside the scope of the safeguard. However, the impact of the US measures continued to be negative and we therefore welcome the 5 December decision by President Bush to lift the US tariffs. This was a course of action that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister strongly urged the President to take during his visit to London.

Swan Hunter

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) applications have been made and (b) assistance has been granted for (i) Regional Selective Assistance and (ii) other Government grants by Swan Hunter in respect of its operations on Tyneside and Teesside since 1 January 2000. [143308]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is as follows.

(i) For reasons of commercial confidentiality under Exemption 13—Third Party Commercial Confidences of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. I cannot comment on whether or not individual Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) applications have been made.

Details of approved RSA projects over £75,000 (name of business, offer amount, Travel to Work Area and Standard Industrial Classification description) are published quarterly in Labour Market Trends following the first payment of grant.

(ii) No other applications from or grants to Swan Hunter to assist its operations at Tyneside and Teesside since 1 January 2000 have been identified from available records.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what applications have been made for (a) Regional Selective Assistance, (b) other Government grants and (c) European funding in respect of Swan Hunter's Port Clarence facilities. [143309]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is as follows.

(a) For reasons of commercial confidentiality under Exemption 13—Third Party's Commercial Confidences of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. I cannot comment on whether or not individual Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) applications have been made.

Details of approved RSA projects over £75,000 (name of business, offer amount, Travel to Work Area and Standard Industrial Classification description) are published quarterly in Labour Market Trends following the first payment of grant

(b) and (c) No other applications from or grants to Swan Hunter to assist its operations at Teesside have been identified from available records.

Unsolicited Emails

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to harmonise international laws on the sending of unsolicited emails. [142131]

Mr. Timms: The UK is active in international discussions on how to tackle the global problem of unwanted e-mail advertising, both in multilateral fora (such as the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development) and bilaterally with the USA and other national governments. The Privacy and Electronic Communications Regulations, which took effect on 11 December, implement the EU-wide approach in the Directive on Privacy and Electronic Communications (Directive 2002/58/EC) of 18 September 2003.

Value for Money

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on value for money improvements in her Department for each year from 1997–98 to 2002–03. [143134]

Ms Hewitt: My Department's annual spring Reports contain information on departmental management and public service delivery, including on measures taken to improve efficiency and value for money.

For the years 1997–98 and 1998–99, value for money and efficiency savings were not reported separately in the Department's annual reports but were contained within the chapters on the Management of the Department.

During the period covered by the Comprehensive Spending Review (1999–2002), the Department had a strategic efficiency target to achieve savings of 2.5 per cent. of its running costs each year. In 1999–2000 the DTI achieved a saving of 2.6 per cent. of running costs (£10.6 million projected costs of £406.6 million); and in 2000–01 the Department achieved a saving of 4.6 per cent. (£19.3 million on projected costs of £418.8 million).

The CSR efficiency target was replaced for the 2000 Spending Review period (2001–04) by a Public Service Agreement Target to > "achieve value for money improvements of 2.5 per cent. a year across the Department", which was carried over into the 2002 Spending Review (2003–06). In 2001–02 value for money improvements under this target amounted to 3.79 per cent. The Department's performance for 2002–03 will be reported on in the 2004 Departmental report, which is due to be published in spring 2004.

DEFENCE

Iraq

9. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what impact operations in Iraq have had on the future requirement for equipment. [143776]

Mr. Ingram: Operation Telic reinforced the requirement to be able in the future to deploy and sustain armed forces equipped and trained both for warfighting and peace support operations. Operations in Iraq also demonstrated the importance of integrated joint capability. These trends are reflected in the White Paper published last week.

18. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the security situation in Iraq. [143785]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for North Durham (Mr. Jones).

19. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his assessment of the security situation in southern Iraq. [143786]

Mr. Hoon: United Kingdom forces continue to provide an effective security capability in Iraq. Recent operations against smuggling, for example, have been a considerable success and were widely welcomed by the Iraqi people. Our forces are also closely engaged in developing Iraq's own security capabilities so that Iraqis can increasingly take responsibility for their own security. Already more than 10,500 Iraqi police are on patrol in the Multinational Division (South East), and more are being trained; other Iraqi security personnel are guarding vital infrastructure, facilities and coastline.

22. Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on operations in Iraq. [143789]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for North Durham (Mr. Jones).

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on sending Christmas gifts, donated by charities and other organisations, to British troops in Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [143803]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 270W to the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson).

Armed Forces

11. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he has made in the past three months in filling vacancies in the Army. [143778]

Mr. Caplin: The latest available figures indicate that whole Army trained strength increased by 540 between 1 August 2003 and 31 October 2003.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many recruits have joined the trained strength of the armed services in each of the last two years. [143346]

Mr. Caplin: I refer the hon. Member to Tri Service Publication 4: United Kingdom Armed Forces Quarterly Press Release which is available in the Library of the House and is updated each quarter.

Table 4 contains figures for Gains to Trained Strength of UK Regular Forces.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost to his Department was of providing school places for children of Service personnel under the Service Education Allowance Scheme in each of the past 10 years. [142991]

Mr. Caplin: The total sums paid annually for boarding and day school fees by the Ministry of Defence in each of the past 10 years are not held centrally.

I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 3 December 2003, Official Report, columns 67–68W, about the various per child annual rates of Service Education Allowances from 1996 onwards.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143151]

Mr. Caplin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 9 December 2003, Official Report, column 355W, by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House of Commons.

Departmental Land

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken, and what plans he has, to derive money from land owned by his Department within the UK. [142285]

Mr. Caplin: I refer the hon. Member to the Ministry of Defence Annual Report and Accounts, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Attitude Surveys

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the top 10 answers in the last assessed Army Continuous Attitude Survey to (a) Question 27, (b) Question 35, (c) Question 39d, (d) Question 47 and (e) Question 48; how many respondents' answers agreed with each of the top 10; and if he will make a statement. [143617]

Mr. Caplin: From the latest Army Serving Personnel Continuous Attitude Survey undertaken in December 2002, answers to questions 27, 35, 47 and 48 were expressed in terms of a sliding scale from Very Satisfied to Very Dissatisfied or Very High to Low. The answer to question 39d was a straight Yes or No. Given the nature of the response options to these questions, it is not possible to analyse the data in terms of a "top ten".

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Army Continuous Attitude Survey last included questions on (a) overstretch and (b) privatisation and contractualisation; for what reason those questions are not included in the latest edition of the Army Continuous Attitude Survey; and if he will make a statement. [143618]

Mr. Caplin: In compiling Continuous Attitude Surveys, questions are assimilated from a range of issues identified by the Army. The latest Army Serving Personnel Continuous Attitude Survey, undertaken in December 2002, included questions on overstretch. So far no direct questions have been asked about privatisation or contractorisation.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army personnel answered Scottish to Question Q6a in the last assessed Continuous Attitude Survey, broken down by rank; and if he will make a statement. [143629]

Mr. Caplin: Question 6 in the latest Army Serving Personnel Continuous Attitude Survey, undertaken in December 2002, asked individuals about their nationality. The response options did not include "Scottish" and therefore information is not available to answer this question.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF personnel answered Scottish to Question A16a in the last assessed Continuous Attitude Survey, broken down by rank; and if he will make a statement. [143630]

Mr. Caplin: The most recent issue of the RAF Continuous General Attitude Survey for which results are available covers the period May to July 2003. The number of RAF personnel who answered Scottish to Question A16a in the last survey, broken down by rank is as follows:

Rank	Number
Aircraftman/woman	0
Leading Aircraftman/woman	0
Senior Aircraftman/woman	29
Junior Technician	5
Corporal	15
Sergeant	13
Chief Technician	5
Flight Sergeant	6
Warrant Officer/Master Aircrew	4
Pilot Officer	0
Flying Officer	1
Flight Lieutenant	2
Squadron Leader	3
Wing Commander	0
Group Captain	0
Total	83

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and what percentage of respondents to the last assessed RAF Continuous Attitude Survey responded (a) Strongly agree, (b) Agree, (c) Neither agree nor disagree, (d) Disagree and (e) Don't know/not applicable to questions (i) B12.1 and (ii) B12.2; and if he will make a statement. [143632]

Mr. Caplin: The information requested is set out in the following table.

RAF continuous attitude survey

	B12.1 numbers responding	As a percentage of those asked	B12.2 numbers responding	As a percentage of those asked

[143633]

Mr. Caplin: The information requested is set out in the following table.

Death-in-service Benefits

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what the lump sum death-in-service pay is to widows or widowers for an army corporal; [143021]

(2) what percentage of an army corporal's final salary is payable to a spouse following death-in-service. [143020]

Mr. Caplin: The current Armed Forces Pension Scheme (AFPS) final salary benefits are not based on individual earnings but on a representative rate of pay for each rank. This means that all those of the same rank with the same length of service retiring in the same year receive the same rate of pension regardless of their actual earnings. The current representative rate of pay for a corporal is £24,678 per annum. The level of death-in-service lump sum paid to a widow or widower of a corporal in the Regular Army depends on length of service and whether the death was attributable to service. Where the cause of death is not attributable, the current lump sum is between £23,938 and £35,907, between 97 per cent. and 146 per cent. of the representative rate of pay. If the death is attributable to service, an attributable gratuity of £11,969 is paid in addition to the non-attributable lump sum; this increases the value of the lump sum as a percentage of the representative rate of pay to between 146 per cent. and 194 per cent. Both the lump sum and gratuity are paid tax-free.

In addition to the lump sum, the widow of a corporal in the Regular Army would receive a short-term pension which is equivalent to 100 per cent. of the individual's final salary, paid, depending on circumstances, for a period of between 91 and 273 days. When the short-term pension ceases, a long-term pension is paid. The non-attributable widow's pension is 6.5 per cent. of the representative rate of pay where the individual has served for five years; this rises to 24.25 per cent. for 34 or more years' service. The attributable widows pension is 39 per cent. of the representative rate of pay.

European Union Defence Policy

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from member Governments of NATO about European Union defence policy. [143790]

Mr. Hoon: Discussions are continuing on European Security and Defence Policy with both NATO and non-NATO EU member states. In addition to these bilateral discussions, the North Atlantic Council and the Political and Security Committee meet on a regular basis to discuss ESDP issues.

Mental Health

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what (a) medical, (b) financial and (c) administrative factors the decision to close the Duchess of Kent Psychiatric Hospital in Catterick was based. [143486]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 11 December 2003]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 16 October 2003, Official Report, column 324W to the hon. Member for South Dorset (Mr. Knight).

The decision to close the Duchess of Kent Psychiatric Hospital (DKPH) was taken on clinical grounds.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what standard instructions are given to Ministry of Defence police personnel on secondment or assignment to assist the civilian police where the criminal responsibility of senior officers may be the subject of the investigation. [143137]

Mr. Caplin: Ministry of Defence police officers seconded or assigned to assist a Home Department police force are subject to the operational control of that force. It would be for the force in question to issue instructions on the conduct of inquiries.

Northern Ireland Veterans

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what funding is available to support Northern Ireland veterans. [142734]

Mr. Caplin: There is no Ministry of Defence funding specifically for Northern Ireland veterans. MOD funds programmes aimed at preventing Service leavers, which would include those who have served in Northern Ireland, falling into social exclusion and homelessness such as the Single Persons Accommodation Centre for Ex-Services in Catterick, the Armed Forces Project in Colchester and the Joint Services Housing Advice Office. MOD also contributes towards Project Compass, a partnership project in London aimed at assisting homeless veterans back into employment.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Northern Ireland veterans he estimates are homeless. [142743]

Mr. Caplin: The number of homeless veterans who have served in Northern Ireland is not known at present. In January 2004, the Ministry of Defence and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister are planning to begin a study into the extent, causes, impact and costs of homelessness and rough sleeping among ex-Service personnel in England. As part of this study, homeless veterans will be asked about their Service background and operational experience which will include Service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Northern Ireland veterans are serving prison sentences. [142744]

Mr. Caplin: There are no routine statistics of this kind collected on veterans who have either served in Northern Ireland or who live there. The Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate survey, carried out in December 2001 in 76 prisons around the United Kingdom, found that 5.6 per cent. of prisoners were veterans of the armed forces, of which 11 per cent. had been in the Royal Navy, 4 per cent. were in the Royal Air Force and 85 per cent. were in the Army.

Territorial Army

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of (a) independent units and (b) specialist units of the Territorial Army have completed (i) five years, (ii) 10 years, (iii) 15 years and (iv) 20 years of service in each of the last six years in each nation within the UK; and if he will make a statement. [143998]

Mr. Caplin: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Vaccinations

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the vaccines administered to service personnel since 1990 which were not licensed in the United Kingdom at the time of administration; for what there were administered; how many personnel were involved in each case; what follow up checks have taken place; and if he will make a statement. [142884]

Mr. Caplin: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Big Conversation

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how members of the public are being informed they can take part in the Big Conversation; and how Big Conversation events are being publicised; [144242]

(2) how many members of the public he estimates will respond to the Big Conversation; [144243]

(3) what proportion of the findings of the Big Conversation will be made public; and in what format; [144244]

(4) who will be responsible for replying to those who take part in the Big Conversation. [144245]

The Prime Minister: These are matters for the Labour Party.

Honours

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many honours have been returned since January 1997. [142220]

The Prime Minister: Since 1 January 1997 18 people returned the honours they had been awarded to the Central Chancery of the Orders of Knighthood or to my office.

This compares with almost 18,500 honours granted to people during the same period.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many people refused the offer of an honour in the latest year for which figures are available, broken down by type of honour. [142221]

The Prime Minister: Because of the confidential nature of the honours process individuals are asked in confidence whether they wish to be considered for an honour; it is a matter for them whether they wish to make their decision known publicly.

The number of people who refuse an honour has consistently been around 2 per cent. of the recommendations that are made each year.

Ministerial Absence

David Davis: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 374W, on ministerial duties, on how many occasions appropriate arrangements have been put in place as a result of the Prime Minister being absent for any reason since May 1997; and what the arrangements were in each case. [144241]

The Prime Minister: A record of these occasions is not held centrally. However, as the right hon. Member will be aware, when I have been on official visits overseas, for example, the Deputy Prime Minister has deputised for me at Prime Minister's Questions.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what initiatives he took at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in Nigeria to raise with his (a) Indian and (b) Pakistani counterparts the prospects of their respective states joining the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty as non-nuclear weapon states. [143511]

The Prime Minister: I discussed issues of mutual concern with Prime Minister Vajpayee in the margins of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting. However, the question of Indian accession to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty as a non-nuclear weapons state was not raised.

Pakistan is currently suspended from all Councils of the Commonwealth.

We regularly press both countries to accede to both the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty.

Office Space Allocations

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister on what date office space was allocated by his office to accommodate the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), what square footage this comprises; what staff support has been made available to the right hon. Member; and if he will make a statement. [143840]

The Prime Minister: Neither office space nor staff support has been allocated or made available to the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson).

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the costs of special advisers for 2002–03 indicating the cost of administrative and secretarial staff. [143379]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Geraint Davies) on 16 July 2003, Official Report, columns 327–30W.

The information requested on costs of administrative and secretarial staff is not held centrally.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Additional Lifetime Earnings

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of average additional lifetime earnings accruing to those leaving full-time education at age 19 compared to age 16. [143566]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: There is conclusive evidence that staying in full-time education after the age of 16 increases an individual's lifetime earnings potential. People who have two or more A-levels earn on average 15 per cent. more over their lifetime than people who do not, even after allowing for other qualifications gained. The returns to level 3 vocational qualifications typically acquired at ages 16–19 are also significantly positive.

The vast majority of young people remain in education until at least age 16. However, GCSE achievement rates vary. An individual who gains five or more GCSEs at grades A*-C can expect to earn 25–30 per cent. more than someone who does not achieve this level, again allowing for any other qualifications subsequently gained.

The document "Education and Skills: The Economic Benefit" published by DfES in May 2003 presents both Government and wider research undertaken into the economic benefits of public provision of education. It highlights the social and economic value of education and skills, from a basic skills level to degree level, in terms of earnings, employment and social benefits.

City Academies

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the components of the expenditure on city academies as set out in the table of expenditure by function by the Department in the Winter Supplementary Estimate 2003–04. [143121]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 9 December 2003]: The components of expenditure set out in the table relate to Academies running costs. The main component (set out in the table of expenditure by function contained within the Winter Supplementary Estimate) relates to recurrent costs and covers the general annual grant paid by the Secretary of State to individual Academies. This figure also includes the general administrative expenditure costs incurred by the Department in the running of the programme.

The second, smaller component relates to amounts paid to Academies by local education authorities in respect of the Standards Fund.

Coalfield Communities

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the levels of educational attainment in the UK coalfields, and on Government action to improve them. [142946]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: In England, the increase in levels of educational attainment in coalfield areas since 1998, reflects that of England as a whole. In addition we are already seeing evidence that the gap between attainment in coalfield areas and non-coalfield areas is beginning to close.

DfES is committed to working closely with other Departments in order to develop a package of support for former coalfield areas. We know that coalfield areas have suffered from low levels of educational attainment and we have a range of targeted initiatives to raise attainment. We are succeeding in raising aspirations and attainment though policies that aim to ensure that all learners attain the highest standards, regardless of where they live.

DfES also works closely with all the key coalfield organisations such as Coalfield Communities Campaign (CCC), Coalfields Regeneration Trust (CRT), Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation (CISWO) and Coalfield Learning Initiative Partnership (CLIP) to improve our targeting and tackle problems.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what funding his Department has allocated in each year to the Sure Start programme since its establishment; and how it has been spent in (a) St. Helens South, (b) St. Helens, (c) Merseyside and (d) the North West Region. [141475]

Margaret Hodge: The total annual budget (capital and revenue) allocated to Sure Start local programmes since the policy was established has been as follows:

	£ million
1999–2000	84
2000–01	184
2002–02	184
2002–03	449
2003–04	[1]355

[1] Grant has been re-profiled to take account of previous year's rate of spend Individual programmes have been established through six planning rounds. In each round, eligible local authority districts were invited to identify a catchment area and set up a programme. The resulting programme has been provided with an indicative annual revenue profile and a single capital allocation to develop necessary facilities.

524 local programmes are being developed across the country. Of these, 108 are in the north-west of England—26 in Merseyside. The St. Helens district has five programmes of which three are in St. Helens South.

The financial information requested for the north-west region is set out in the following table. Information is drawn from local programmes' grant letters and their audit certificates as well as the Sure Start Unit's finance and performance monitoring IT system. Explanatory notes are attached at the end of each table.

Notes:

1. Local programmes are allocated funds at the beginning of each financial year based on their delivery plan.
2. Programmes claim grant quarterly using the Sure Start Unit's online claims system.
3. n/a denotes that the programme was not operational in that year.

4. Where there is spend against a nil allocation, this indicates start up or advance payments, which are anticipated from the first financial year of operation.
5. Claims for the 2003–04 financial year are still on-going—£0 indicates that a claim has either not been made or is in the process of being made.
6. Capital funding for Sure Start local programmes is normally a single allocated sum from which programmes draw down funds for particular projects. As programmes do not make regular claims, this has been shown as spend (or claims) to date. Programmes are encouraged to use their capital allocation within 3–5 years of their delivery plan being approved.

Notes:

1. We are unable to provide an accurate picture of the overall revenue spend for the North West region as a whole for financial year 2000–01 because data processes were not set up to collect this information on a regional basis until 2001–02.

2. Audit certificates for the financial year 2002–03 are still being submitted to the Sure Start Unit from some of the North West programmes and therefore spend figures for the region as a whole are unavailable at present.

3. The capital spend to date figure refers to the total value of capital projects approved to date, which programmes are able to draw down. The actual amount claimed to date is £15.3 million. The discrepancy is due to building work not being completed (and so not claimed for) or accountable bodies funding work and not yet claiming it back.

Education Projects (St. Helens)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) if he will list the capital projects which (a) have been completed and (b) were in progress in St. Helens in each year since 1997; [141279]

(2) what capital expenditure there was on (a) education as a whole, (b) nursery schools, (c) primary education and (d) secondary education in (i) St. Helens, (ii) Merseyside and (iii) the North West Region, in each year since 1992. [141470]

Mr. Miliband: We hold details only of total capital allocations made to (i) St. Helens, (ii) Merseyside and (iii) the North West. We do not hold the other information requested as the bulk of capital investment for school buildings is allocated to local education authorities and to schools. Capital funding allocated to St. Helens, Merseyside and the North West is set out in the following table:

	Capital allocations (£000)
	St. Helens	Merseyside	North West
1996–97	2,286	14,823	66,532

2002–03	10,234	61,114	242,917
2003–04	7,152	73,057	334,065

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which projects have been (a) wholly and (b) partly funded by his Department in St. Helens since 1997; when each project was announced; when it started or was expected to start; what funding was provided by (i) Government and (ii) a third party; what third party provided funding; what the target group of the project was; what the projected outcome of the project was; and what the name of the project was. [141276]

Mr. Miliband: We do not hold the information requested as the bulk of capital investment for school buildings is allocated to local education authorities and to schools. Capital funding allocated to St. Helen's LEA is set out in the following table:

Capital funding allocated to St. Helen's LEA

St. Helen's LEA capital allocations	Total (£000)
1996–97	2,286
1997–98	1,818

Foundation Courses

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the average cost of each place on a foundation degree course in the current academic year. [143652]

Alan Johnson: The Higher Education Funding Council for England funds honours degree and foundation degree courses on the basis of a formula which varies according to subject, institution and student factors. The funding is allocated to institutions as a block grant and how they allocate it is for them to determine. Institutions also receive funding from other sources, both public and private and may use it to subsidise some courses or faculties. The actual cost may therefore vary between institutions and subjects.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Mahmood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the effect of the proposals contained in the White Paper, "The Future of Higher Education", on further education colleges which provide higher education courses; and if he will make a statement. [143640]

Alan Johnson: The Higher Education Funding Council for England has recently run a bidding round for additional student numbers for foundation degrees. Further education colleges (FEC) have been invited to bid for those places in collaboration with higher education institutions, Sector Skills Councils and Regional Development Agencies. An announcement on the outcomes of this bidding round will be made early next year.

I have asked the Chief Executives of the Higher Education Funding Council and the Learning and Skills Councils to work together to reduce the bureaucracy faced by further education colleges that provide courses of higher education. I expect them to produce a consultation paper by early 2004.

The Quality Assurance Agency, Ofsted, and the Adult Learning Inspectorate have recently piloted a parallel review and inspection of a FEC, which should reduce burden and bureaucracy for the FEC. The agencies are currently evaluating the success of this pilot and will provide a report to me early in the New Year.

White Paper Commitment

Foundation degrees will often be delivered in further education colleges and we will build and strengthen the links between further and higher education, to give students clearer progression pathways and support the development of work-based degrees. As part of this, we will streamline the funding regimes to make collaboration easier.

GCSEs

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills in how many schools fewer than 20 per cent. of pupils achieved (a) qualifications equivalent to five GCSEs at grade A* to C and (b) five GCSEs at grades A* to C in each year between 1996 and 2002; and what his estimate is for each year from 2003 to 2006. [142989]

Mr. Miliband: The number of schools with fewer than 20 per cent. of pupils who achieved five or more grades A*-C at GCSE and GNVQ combined is:

Academic year	Number of schools with less than 20 per cent. of pupils achieving 5+ A-C at GCSE/GNVQ*
1996[1]	384
1997	361
1998	325
1999	277
2000	241
2001	196
2002	157

[1] 1996 figures includes GCSE results only, GNVQs commenced in 1997.

The number of schools with fewer than 20 per cent. of pupils who achieved five or more grades A*-C at GCSE only is:

Academic year	Number of schools with less than 20 per cent. of pupils achieving 5+ A-C at GCSE only*
1996[1]	384
1997	368
1998	339
1999	312
2000	279
2001	245
2002	240

[1] 1996 figures includes GCSE results only, GNVQs commenced in 1997.

The number of schools where fewer than 20 per cent. of pupils achieved five or more GCSEs at grade A* to C or the equivalent has dropped significantly year-on-year since 1996, and we are confident the efforts of pupils, schools and LEAs mean that this trend will continue. Through increasing use of contextualised pupil-level data, our Advisers are working closely with schools and LEAs to ensure that every pupil's chances of exam success are maximised. This work has a particular focus on narrowing the attainment gap between the lowest performing schools and the highest.

Higher Education

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the limit of parental income would be beyond which students would receive no financial assistance under the Government's proposals for higher education funding. [142999]

Alan Johnson: All students, regardless of their family income, will be eligible for some financial assistance under the Government's proposals. The non-means tested element (75 per cent.) of the maintenance loan will continue to be available to all students, while the remaining 25 per cent. will be linked to family income. We do not intend to means-test loans for fees, which are to be introduced from 2006–07. Additional support will, as now, be available on a means-tested basis in the form of tuition fee remission and, from 2004–05, a new higher education grant will be introduced for those from poorer backgrounds. This financial assistance is in addition to existing targeted support for specific groups such as disabled students or student parents.

Leadership and Management

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what initiatives the Department has introduced to improve (a) leadership and (b) management skills in schools; and what assessment he has made of their effectiveness. [141952]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 4 December 2003]: We set up the National College for School Leadership in November 2000 to deliver a wide range of professional development and leadership training opportunities for headteachers, aspiring headteachers and other school leaders at every stage of their careers, including middle managers. Ofsted regularly inspects the effectiveness of school leadership and management and from September this year introduced a new framework for inspecting these skills more rigorously. In June this year Ofsted reported that the proportion of schools with very good or excellent leadership and management has more than doubled since 1996–97. In his statement to this House on 29 October about school funding, the Secretary of State announced that KPMG had been commissioned to work with NCSL and headteacher associations to design and develop a varied menu of support and guidance to help schools' budget and resource management. In the remaining months of the current financial year £1.5 million is being made available for this programme which includes a website, workshop, helpdesk and consultancy.

Leadership Initiative Payments

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the schools that have received leadership initiative payments. [143130]

Mr. Miliband: The list of the 1406 schools eligible for the Leadership Incentive Grant is available on the DfES Standards website at www.standards.dfes.gov.uk/schoolimprovement

Music Lessons

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he is taking to ensure that musical instrument lessons are available to all pupils who wish to benefit from them; and if he will make a statement. [143489]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 11 December 2003]: We have pledged that, over time, all primary school pupils who want to should have the opportunity to learn a musical instrument. Ofsted are currently evaluating 12 pilots that aim to demonstrate how schools, LEA Music Services and other providers can work together to offer a programme of wider musical opportunities which builds on the National Curriculum for Music. We will publicise the results of this evaluation in the New Year, along with some new guidance from QCA on how teachers can incorporate instrumental tuition into their classroom work.

In addition, the Department continues to support LEA Music Services. Almost £60 million a year goes to LEAs via the Music Standards Fund, which can be spent in any way which enhances opportunities for pupils to access musical education of high quality, including instrumental tuition.

National Learner Satisfaction Survey

Mr. Mahmood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the National Learner Satisfaction Survey published by the Learning and Skills Council in November; and if he will make a statement. [143643]

Alan Johnson: The result of the 2002–03 National Learner Satisfaction Survey, commissioned by the Learning and Skills Council, is excellent news. It shows that learners' needs and aspirations are being met, with more than 90 per cent. overall satisfied with their learning experience. This important customer feedback, taken with other measures of quality we have put in place, is an important indicator against which to judge the success of the learning and skills sector.

Qualified Teachers

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the number of qualified teachers in schools. [143416]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 11 December 2003]: In January 2003, there were 408,400 full-time equivalent regular teachers with Qualified Teacher Status employed in the maintained schools sector in England. That is 12,200 more than in January 1997 and the most at anytime since January 1984.

Pupil Behavioural Programmes

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much has been spent by his Department on pupil behavioural programmes in each year since 1997. [141732]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 3 December 2003]: Since 1997 the DfES has provided funding for a range of activities related to pupil inclusion and disaffection, including behaviour and attendance. The Standards Fund has been the main channel for such funding. The following table shows relevant DfES grants to LEAs made through the Standards Fund or its predecessor from 1997–98 to 2002–03. It excludes LEA contributions. These funds were spent on a wide range of measures and services including Learning Support Units, Pupil Referral Units and Education Welfare Officers.

	£ million
1997–98	10.4
1998–99	11.4
1999–2000	28.5
2000–01	69.1
2001–02	85.9
2002–03	84.5

In 2002–03 the DfES also provided £50 million for targeted schools through the Behaviour Improvement Programme. Building on that, we will be providing over £150 million in 2003–04 to support schools and LEAs in improving behaviour and attendance.

Research Funding

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the effect on the development of the North West regional economy of the revised distribution mechanisms for university research funding; and if he will make a statement. [143452]

Alan Johnson: Research funding is allocated to institutions according to quality and volume, using the results of the Research Assessment Exercise. There is no regional element. In 2003–04 the North West region received £108 million in quality-related research funding, an increase of over £9 million on the previous year.

The recent consultation on research assessment, carried out by the Higher Education Funding Council for England and the other UK higher education funding bodies, received over three hundred responses from higher education institutions and sector stakeholder bodies. The higher education funding bodies are considering the responses and are expected to make an announcement about a new system of assessment and funding distribution early in the New Year.

School Buildings

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many school buildings in use were built before 1975; and where these are situated. [141665]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 9 December 2003]: Our categorisation of LEA asset management plan data returns allows buildings constructed up to and including 1976 to be separately identified. The total number of separate school buildings (excluding temporary buildings) within this category, for which information has been provided, is approximately 52,000. This large number reflects the fact that many schools have several buildings of different age categories on their sites. The LEA/school number codes for each building on the attached spreadsheets indicate where they are situated. In view of the large size of the analysis document, it has been made available on the DfES web site at: www.teachernet.gov.uk/amps

School Trips

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether schools are obliged to publish risk assessments in relation to school trips. [143534]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 11 December 2003] The Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations 1999 require employers (local education authorities for most schools in England) to tell employees about the measures taken to manage risk. There is no requirement to publish the risk assessment.

Science Examinations

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) girls and (b) boys sat examinations in science subjects at (i) A Level and (ii) AS Level in each year since 1997; and what the pass rate was in each case. [143147]

Mr. Miliband: Information requested has been placed in the Library.

SEND Tribunal System

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the cost to public funds of the Special Educational Needs and Disability tribunal system was in the last year for which information is available (a) in total, (b) per case dealt with and (c) per application. [143669]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 11 December 2003]: The total cost of the SEN and Disability Tribunal (SENDIST) for the year 2002 to 2003 was £4,715,000 plus £1,252,000 central overheads giving a total of £5,967,000. 3,445 appeals were registered during that period, giving a cost of £1,732 per appeal. 3,780 appeals were received, giving a cost per appeal received of £1,578.

Skills Agenda (West Midlands)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills who is responsible for the Skills Agenda for the West Midlands region. [143219]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: There are a number of different agencies responsible for delivering different aspects of the skills agenda in the West Midlands. This reflects the wide range of national, regional and local bodies involved in the Government's national skills strategy. The strategy aims to integrate existing structures and focus them more effectively through stronger partnerships at national and regional level.

At regional level, we have asked each Regional Development Agency to work with delivery partners to create a Regional Skills Partnership. These will bring together the Learning and Skills Council, the Small Business Service, Jobcentre Plus, the Skills for Business network, Government Offices and others with an important regional perspective. Regional Skills Partnerships will address regional economic competitiveness and deliver the agenda set out in the Skills Strategy for their region.

Streaming

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the educative value of ability grouping for English lessons. [142988]

Mr. Miliband: A review of research conducted by the National Foundation for Educational Research (NFER) in 1998, concluded that there are no significant differences between ability grouping, setting, mixed ability teaching and streaming in terms of outcomes, and that the overall effects are inconclusive. However, the review suggested that it is possible to identify a list of benefits and limitations for the main kinds of grouping at the level of the institution, teacher and pupil.

Pupil grouping by ability is not mandatory for English lessons. It is for schools to develop and determine for themselves, the best form of pupil grouping to meet the learning needs of all their pupils. To support this, both the Primary and the Key Stage 3 National Strategies in English have produced a range of resources for schools to use in meeting the needs of their pupils, particularly those below the expected levels. This allows schools the flexibility of being able to provide for their pupils whole class teaching; short-term optional modules suited to needs and abilities; within class pupil grouping for better differentiation of teaching; mentoring, booster and master class arrangements.

Student Finance

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average student loan taken out by students from (a) Stroud, (b) the South West Region and (c) England was in each year since 1999–2000. [143105]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 9 December 2003]: The table shows the average full-time income-contingent loan taken out by students in the South West Government Office Region and England.

Average income-contingent[1,2,3] loan taken out by domicile of student-academic years 1999/2000, 2000/01 and 2001/02[4]

	Academic year
	1999/2000	2000/01[5]	2001/02[6]
South West Government Office Region[7]	3,240	3,190	3,250
England	3,180	3,160	3,190

[1] Loans available to students who entered higher education from September 1998, excludes the fixed rate loans (£500) for eligible part-time students, introduced in September 2000.

[2] Mandatory award holders, i.e. those eligible for mortgage style loans, made applications for student loans through their education institution; data are therefore not available for these students.

[3] Data at a level below England have been taken from available data and may include a small number of loans which have been authorised for payment but not paid; England data are only those loans actually paid.

[4] Figures have been rounded to the nearest £10.

[5] The apparent fall in the average value of income-contingent loan taken out in 2000/01 can be explained mainly by the fact that this was the third year of this loan scheme; students on the third year of a three year course will receive the final year rate of loan which is at a lower rate as it does not cover the summer vacation. This effect is not present in 1999/2000 and has been levelled out in the years subsequent to 2000/01. Additionally, this is likely to be the first year in which those students on sandwich courses have their placement year and are therefore in receipt of the reduced rate of loan.

[6] Latest year for which data are available.

[7] Government Office Region of domicile of student.

Note:

Data on the average student loan taken out by students from Stroud are not available

Student Loans

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether his Department will continue to repay student loans for teachers of shortage subjects under the Repayment of Teachers' Loans Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [142650]

Alan Johnson: This Department will continue to repay the student loans of teachers who were accepted onto the scheme during the current three-year pilot. A thorough evaluation of the pilot will be undertaken and will inform the decisions on the scheme's future beyond 2004–05.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the total cost of funding the increased student loan book after the introduction of top-up fees in 2006. [143692]

Alan Johnson: The increase in the amount of student loan after the introduction of variable fees will depend on the following factors: the numbers of students entering Higher Education Institutions (HEIs); the level of fees charged by each HEI; and the proportion of students who choose to take out loans to cover the cost of their fees, and the value of such loans. We will make further details available in the New Year in the Regulatory Impact Assessment, which will set out the financial implications of the policies announced in the Higher Education White Paper.

Workforce Reform

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the paper, "Workforce Reform—Blue Skies". [143417]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 11 December 2003]: This note by officials was produced without the authority or knowledge of Ministers. It is not policy and will not become policy.

TREASURY

Cancer

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the survival rates were for the most common forms of cancer in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other members of the European Union in (i) 1997 and (ii) the most recent period for which figures are available. [143724]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. James Clappison, dated 15 December 2003.

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question concerning the survival rates for the most common fofms of cancer in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other members of the European Union in (i) 1997 and (ii) the most recent period for which figures are available. [143724]

Comparable information on cancer survival in the European Union is provided by the EUROCARE study. This covers parts of the UK and Europe. The most recently published results from this study are in "Survival of Cancer Patients in Europe: the EUROCARE-2 Study" (IARC Scientific Publications No. 151); a copy is available in the House of Commons Library. These results relate to patients diagnosed with cancer during 1985–89 and followed up to the end of 1994.

Findings from EUROCARE-3 are currently due to be published in the Annals of Oncology in early 2004. This will provide information on survival up to five years after diagnosis for patients diagnosed with cancer during 1990–94 and followed up to the end of 1999.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the size of the ethnic minority population in England and Wales as a proportion of the general population in 2009. [143404]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Mark Oaten, dated 15 December 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question on the estimated ethnic minority population in England and Wales as a proportion of the general population in 2009. (143404)

There are currently no official projections of the ethnic minority population for England and Wales. However, the Office for National Statistics is currently carrying out a research project aiming to produce national and subnational population projections by ethnic group, fully consistent with the official national population projections, using existing data sources.

Customs

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when Customs records relating to regulatory controls on the importation of firearms at Farnborough airport in 1999 were destroyed; how many (a) prohibited firearms were controlled arising from a single flight arriving in March 1999 and (b) non-prohibited firearms were controlled at other times in 1999; and whether the date of March 1999 recorded as the month in which prohibited weapons were controlled at Farnborough has been ascertained from (i) a contemporaneous record and (ii) a secondary record; [143605]

(2) how many prohibited firearms were surrendered to Customs by passengers who arrived at United Kingdom airports in 1999 on civilian flights in such a manner that the incidents were deemed by Customs not to be irregular. [143673]

John Healey: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 20 November 2003, Official Report, column 1330W. The Customs records referred to in that answer were destroyed in February 2002. The date recorded in relation to the movement of prohibited weapons in March 1999 was obtained from a secondary record.

All four of the firearms controlled by HM Customs and Excise in the single importation in March 1999 were prohibited within the meaning of the Firearms Act 1968.

An accurate total of the number of non-prohibited firearms controlled by Customs at other times in 1999 is no longer available, as the only records still in existence are incomplete.

Information on the numbers of prohibited firearms surrendered at UK airports in 1999 could be provided only at disproportionate cost, and are also likely to be incomplete.

In accordance with international aviation agreements and Civil Aviation Authority regulations, Customs do not regard importations of prohibited firearms by air passengers as irregular where they are declared by:

a sky marshal who holds a firearm for the purposes of protecting and aircraft and its passengers;

a VIP bodyguard;

a properly authorised UK police officer; or any other passenger who is resident in a foreign state and whose possession of that firearm is lawful in that state.

Customs' normal policy is to require prior notification of the intended arrival of armed sky marshals or bodyguards. Properly authorised police officers may retain possession of their firearms. In other cases Customs detain the firearms and any ammunition, which are then returned to the person on departure from the UK.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Customs facilities at Farnborough airport included red and green physical channels in 1999. [143672]

John Healey: Customs controls at Farnborough airport in 1999 operated on the basis of individual clearance of all the incoming international passengers, rather than use of the red and green Channels system.

Departmental Procurement

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much Government Departments spent in procurement (a) from the private sector and (b) from International Business Machines Corporation and its subsidiaries in each year from 1997–98 to 2002–03. [143675]

Mr. Boateng: This information about expenditure by Government departments with suppliers from the private sector, including International Business Machines and its subsidiaries, could only be obtained from individual departments and agencies. They would need to consider the ability to supply such information in consideration of guidance on disproportionate costs.

Euro

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an update on euro changeover planning (a) within Government, (b) across the public sector and (c) in other areas of the economy. [143225]

Ruth Kelly: The Seventh Report on euro preparations was published on 18 November 2003. The report sets out progress in euro preparations across the UK economy since the Chancellor's statement to the House of Commons on UK membership of EMU on 9 June 2003.

EU Trade

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the number of jobs in England reliant on trade with the EU in (a) 2003 and (b) each of the past 10 years; [143231]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of jobs in Wales reliant on trade with the EU in (a) 2003 and (b) each of the past 10 years; [143253]

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of jobs in Northern Ireland reliant on trade with the EU in (a) 2003 and (b) each of the past 10 years; [143254]

(4) what estimate he has made of the number of jobs in Scotland reliant on trade with the EU in (a) 2003 and (b) each of the past 10 years. [143255]

Ruth Kelly: The Treasury estimates that 3 million jobs in the UK are linked, directly and indirectly, to the export of goods and services to the European Union. This figure is based on the assumption that the share of total UK employment associated with UK exports to the EU is equal to the share of total UK value added (GVA) generated by UK exports to the EU. The information necessary to apply the same method to derive comparable estimates for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is not available.

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the value of (a) exports from Northern Ireland to the EU and (b) imports to Northern Ireland from the EU in (i) 2003 and (ii) each of the past 10 years; [143232]

(2) what estimate he has made of the value of (a) exports from Wales to the EU and (b) imports to Wales from the EU in (i) 2003 and (ii) in each of the past 10 years; [143233]

(3) what estimate he has made of the value of (a) exports from Scotland to the EU and (b) imports to Scotland from the EU in (i) 2003 and (ii) each of the past 10 years; [143245]

(4) what estimate he has made of the value of (a) exports from England to the EU and (b) imports to England from the EU in (i) 2003 and (ii) each of the past 10 years; [143246]

(5) what estimate he has made of the value of (a) exports from the UK to the EU and (b) imports to the UK from the EU in (i) 2003 and (ii) each of the past 10 years. [143252]

Ruth Kelly: The information is given in the tables:

European Budget Deficits

Andrew Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effects on the UK economy of (a) budget deficits in (i) Germany and (ii) France and (b) an average euro zone deficit of 3 per cent. [143551]

Ruth Kelly: The Pre-Budget Report 2003 (Cm6042) forecast for the UK economy takes full account of economic developments in the euro area.

Financial Services Markets

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the timing of the N2+2 review of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000. [143059]

Ruth Kelly: The Government committed to assessing the impact of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (FSMA) on competition two years after it came into force in response to the Cruickshank Report on competition in UK banking.

The review will have three main strands. First, a review of the impact of FSMA on competition. This assessment will be carried out by the Office of Fair Trading. Second, changes to aspects of the FSA's practices and consideration of changes to the Financial Ombudsman Service. The FSA's practices to be examined include the complexity of the FSA's Handbook of Rules and Guidance and its cost-benefit analyses. On the Financial Ombudsman Service, among the issues to be considered are whether Ombudsman decisions should be subject to some form of appeal. The third strand will consider changes to the boundary of regulation, including in respect of advice or information provided by employers to employees about workplace pensions and by Citizens Advice Bureaux and similar advice centres to their clients.

I expect all the strands of the two-year review of FSMA to be completed within a year (with the possible exception of the scrutiny by the Office of Fair Trading).

Further information about the two-year review is in the written statement to Parliament that I made on 4 November 2003, Official Report, column 28WS.

Home Equity Release Products

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what discussions he has had with consumer groups on the prevention of mis-selling of home equity release products; and what impact the new regulatory structure will have on these efforts; [144334]

(2) what steps he is taking to improve the collection of Treasury statistics on the number of equity release products taken out each year; [144335]

(3) what steps are being taken to ensure that the new structure for the regulation of home equity release products allows for the easier collation of statistics on the number of products bought; [144336]

(4) what plans he has to regulate the valuation of properties for people taking out a home reversion policy. [144339]

Ruth Kelly: Mortgage-based equity release plans (lifetime mortgages) will be regulated by the Financial Services Authority (FSA) with effect from 31 October 2004. The FSA has published a consultation paper (CP 197) that sets out proposed reporting requirements for mortgage, insurance and investment firms. Regulated firms will have to provide product sales data regularly, and in particular, firms will be required to report on the type of product sold and the status of the borrower.

The Government published their consultation document on home reversion plans on 11 November and responses are due to be received by 13 February 2004. The issue of property valuation is discussed in paragraphs 21–23. My officials have met representatives of consumer bodies to discuss these proposals on a number of occasions.

Income Tax

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the additional revenue raised in Stoke-on-Trent by increasing the basic rate of income tax by one pence would be. [143876]

Dawn Primarolo: The additional full-year yield of increasing the basic rate of income tax by one pence in Stoke-on-Trent is £7.7 million in 2000–01. This estimate is based upon the 2000–01 Survey of Personal Incomes. The effects of the illustrative changes can be scaled up or down over a reasonably wide range. This result excludes any behavioural response to the tax change.

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the additional revenue raised in Stoke-on-Trent would be if the top rate of income tax were raised to 50 pence in the pound for income over £100,000 per annum. [143877]

Dawn Primarolo: Reliable information on this is not available.

Inland Revenue Staff

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the Inland Revenue employees transferred from the International Division in 2000–01 had immediately prior to transfer worked as part of the Advisory/Casework Team within the International Division. [143603]

Dawn Primarolo: It would be inappropriate to disclose the information requested as it would facilitate the identification of individual members of staff of the Inland Revenue. Exemption 8(a) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information applies in this case.

Iraq

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Government have spent on (a) the conflict in Iraq and (b) rebuilding the infrastructure in Iraq to date. [143544]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 2.57 of the Pre-Budget Report 2003 (Cm 6042).

National Statistics

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the result was of the Treasury's review of pre-release access to National Statistics First Releases and associated briefing; and what changes to (a) procedures and (b) the list of people having access have resulted from the review. [143412]

Ruth Kelly: The Treasury has not yet formally completed its review of pre-release access to National Statistics First Releases, but certain changes in procedure have already been put in place.

Penrose Report

Norman Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date he received (a) a draft copy and (b) the final copy of the Penrose Report into Equitable Life; when he intends to publish the report; and whether the published version will be in its complete form. [143841]

Ruth Kelly: Treasury Ministers have not received a draft or a final copy of Lord Penrose's report into Equitable Life. Ministers expect that when Lord Penrose does report, he will provide the final version.

Ministers intend to publish the report as soon as is reasonably practicable following its receipt.

Publication will be in full if at all possible.

Pensions

Kevin Brennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the net cost to the Exchequer caused by short-falls in final salary occupational pension schemes arising from company insolvency since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [143753]

Ruth Kelly: The Pensions Schemes Registry (PSR), administered by the Occupational Pension Schemes Regulatory Authority (OPRA), holds information on the number of final salary schemes which are currently in the winding-up process and the number of schemes which have entered and completed winding-up. The registry database is, however, limited in a number of ways. Consequently, it does not provide all the information requested, though it nevertheless remains the most comprehensive source of information available on the aggregate number of pension schemes in the UK.

According to the PSR's most recent data, around 1,400 private sector final salary schemes were in the winding-up process at the beginning of September, and around 4,800 private sector final salary schemes have completed winding-up. The data do not permit any further analysis on whether these schemes have commenced/completed winding-up prior to 1997. It is not possible to split the above by whether they are connected to a solvent or insolvent employer. No alternative data source exists to provide this information.

There will be a cost to the Exchequer from schemes winding up in deficit, from the loss in income tax receipts on pensions and an increase in income related benefits. As regards estimating the cost to the Exchequer, we have not estimated this due to the above data deficiencies.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Government have budgeted to spend on (a) the reconstruction of Iraq and (b) education in the United Kingdom in 2004. [143545]

Mr. Boateng: The information is as follows:

(a) At the International Donor's Conference in Madrid in October, the UK Government committed a total of £544 million to support the reconstruction of Iraq over the three years from April 2003. Of this, £296 million will be for the next two financial years, 2004–05 and 2005–06, including bilateral funds and the UK's share of the proposed EU contribution in Iraq.

(b) Education expenditure in the UK over a very similar period is forecast to be £190 billion (consisting of £58.6 billion in 2003–04, £62.9 billion in 2004–05 and £68.5 billion in 2005–06).

Public Sector Pensions

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the actuarial liability estimated for the future payment of public sector pensions was in each year from 1997–98 to 2002–03; and what the value was of the funds existing in each year to meet this liability. [143615]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury gave to the hon. Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth) on 7 January 2003 Official Report, column 172W.

Suicides

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the (a) total number and (b) number per 100,000 population of suicides amongst adult males in (i) England and (ii) each region in each year since 1997. [143705]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 15 December 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question concerning the (a) total number and (b) number per 100,000 population of suicides amongst adult males in (i) England and (ii) each region in each year since 1997. (143705)

The most recent available mortality data are for the calendar year 2002. The attached table gives suicide figures for each year from 1997 to 2002.

[1] Death rate per 100,000 population

[2] The cause of death was defined using the International Classification of Diseases, Ninth Revision (ICD-9) codes E950-E959 and E980-E989 excluding E988.8 for the years 1990 to 2000, and, for the year 2001 and 2002, the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision (ICD-10) codes X60-X84 and Y10-Y34 excluding Y33.9 where the coroner's verdict was pending.

[3] Figures are for deaths occurring per calendar year.

Tourism

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what definition of tourism he uses for tax purposes. [143193]

Dawn Primarolo: There is no definition of "tourism" for tax purposes.

Travel Insurance

Angela Watkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact of Financial Services Authority regulation of travel insurance on (a) business and (b) customers. [143415]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 11 December 2003]: The Government published a regulatory impact assessment

(RIA) on 5 June that covered the costs and benefits of implementing FSA regulation of insurance mediation including travel insurance sold as a standalone product. The RIA is available from the Treasury website www.hm-treasury.gov.uk.

Traveller Communities

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures are in place to ensure that members of traveller communities are assessed for income tax and capital gains tax; and what estimate he has made of their level of tax avoidance. [143924]

Dawn Primarolo: The Revenue adopts an approach to managing non-compliance whereby resources are deployed on the basis of risk assessment.

Weapons Flown Abroad

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances Customs and Excise seek Civil Aviation Authority approval for flights carrying abroad weapons they have previously confiscated; and how often such approval was sought in respect of flights from Farnborough in 1999. [143886]

John Healey: It is the responsibility of the carrier to determine whether or not the carriage of firearms requires approval from the Civil Aviation Authority under the Air Navigation Order 2000 and, if so, to seek such approval. This applies in cases where Customs have released from control any firearms previously detained on arrival into the United Kingdom. Customs do not collect information on such approvals. Their role is confined to releasing the firearms in such a way as to ensure they are retained on board an aircraft under suitably secure conditions until it departs.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Child Poverty

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the rate of child poverty is in (a) England, (b) the UK and (c) inner London. [143027]

Mr. Pond: Poverty and social exclusion are complex and multi-dimensional issues, affecting many aspects of peoples' lives-including their living standards, health, housing, the quality of their environment and not just low income. The fifth annual 'Opportunity for all' report (Cm 5956) sets out the Government's strategy for tackling poverty and social exclusion and presents information on the indicators used to measure progress against this strategy.

Specific information regarding low income for Great Britain is available in "Households Below Average Income 1994/95–2001/02".

All publications listed are available in the Library.

Access to Work Scheme

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many Access to Work applicants (a) have applied for sign language interpreting support and (b) have been successful since the introduction of the Access to Work scheme; what the average amount of hours of interpreter support awarded has been; and what the average award to people applying for human aids to communication through the Access to Work scheme has been. [140516]

Maria Eagle: The information requested is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Asbestos

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people have died from asbestos-related diseases in the United Kingdom in each year since 1990; and what estimates his Department has made of the number of likely deaths in future years. [140669]

Mr. Browne: The number of deaths in Great Britain due to mesothelioma and asbestosis each year from 1990 is given in the following table. In addition, it is estimated that for each mesothelioma there are one to two lung cancer deaths due to asbestos.

Death statistics for mesothelioma and asbestosis for Northern Ireland are not included.

Deaths from mesothelioma and asbestosis 1990–2001

	Mesothelioma	Asbestosis
1990	895	100
1991	1,023	113
1992	1,097	91
1993	1,152	112
1994	1,246	116
1995	1,317	109
1996	1,322	137
1997	1,367	129
1998	1,541	123
1999	1,615	121

2001	[1]1,848	158

HSE mesothelioma and asbestosis registers.

Statistical modelling has been used to estimate the future peak number of mesothelioma deaths among both males and females. The annual total number of mesothelioma deaths in Great Britain is expected to peak at around 1,950 to 2,450 deaths some time between 2,011 and 2,015. It is estimated that the ratio of one to two of the number of asbestos-related lung cancers to the number of mesotheliomas will decrease slightly over time. No estimates have been made of the likely deaths in future years due to asbestosis.

Assaults on Staff

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) physical and (b) non-physical assaults there have been on staff in the (i) Employment Service, (ii) Benefits Agency and (iii) Jobcentre Plus in each year since 2001; how many prosecutions resulted; what penalties were handed down; and if he will make a statement. [141504]

Mr. Browne: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Benefits/Pensions

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will assess the (a) nature and (b) quality of the advice issued by his Department under the Payment Modernisation Project. [143206]

Mr. Pond: The Department's information campaign, to support the move to Direct Payment, provides customers with factual information on the banking options available to them, including information on the Post Office card account.

This information campaign has been produced in consultation with the Post Office and a range of other stakeholders.

Customer information material is tested on groups of customers before it is issued. This helps to ensure that customers are supplied with all the information they need to choose the account option that is right for them and that they can understand that information.

The Department will continue to monitor and evaluate the quality and effectiveness of its customer information material and will make further changes if necessary. Our own internal monitoring suggests that our information material is working well and customers are choosing from all of the account options available to them.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many customers have (a) made enquiries about the Post Office card account, (b) received invitations to open an account as a result and (c) opened such an account. [143207]

Mr. Pond: Key figures on the progress of conversion to Direct Payment are available in the Library, updated every four weeks. Information regarding the number of Post Office card accounts opened is a matter that falls within the responsibilities of Post Office Ltd. (POL).

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much benefit he estimates was fraudulently claimed by claimants using false identities in 2002–03. [140565]

Mr. Pond: The Cabinet Office Study on Identity Fraud published in July 2002 estimated that between £20 and £50 million annually of benefit fraud was a result of benefit claims using false identities.

This estimate remains valid.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of payments in each category of benefit were paid by order book in each region of the UK for the most recent available period. [142421]

Mr. Pond: The figures in the table have been compiled from data available on 1 November 2003 and show the percentage of accounts paid by Order book, broken down by benefit and Government Office Region.

1. 2. Figures quoted are for GB only.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the evidential basis is for the claim in his Department's internal memorandum from the Project Manager for the Payment Modernisation Programme, that paying pensions through Post Office accounts costs 30 times as much as through bank accounts. [143202]

Mr. Pond: The internal memorandum states costs are at least 30 times more for making payments into a Post Office card account than into a bank account. This statement is on the basis that, whereas the financial institutions meet the operating costs of providing their bank accounts, the Government pay additional costs to the Post Office for the provision of the Post Office card account services.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will disregard the proposed Child Trust Fund in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit assessments for claimants over the age of 16. [144003]

Mr. Pond: We are considering the precise impact on benefits; however, at present, the general principle is that no account is taken of capital held in trust funds until a young person has access to it.

We are aware of concerns about what would happen when Child Trust Funds are realised when young people reach age 18. We said in the pre-Budget report that we will keep under review the treatment of capital in income related working age benefits so that it strikes a sensible balance between providing targeted state support and not unfairly penalising those who have acted responsibly by saving.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143159]

Maria Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House of Commons on 9 December 2003, Official Report, column 355W.

Carers Allowance

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people (a) over and (b) under 65 were entitled to carers allowance but did not receive payment in each (i) Scottish constituency and (ii) local authority area in the last year for which figures are available. [143718]

Maria Eagle: Information on the numbers of people in Scotland entitled to carers allowance, but not receiving payment due to the overlapping benefit regulations, is in the tables.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he will write to the hon. Member for Wycombe about the Child Support Agency with reference to the debate in Westminster Hall on 12 November. [140902]

Mr. Pond: A letter was sent to the hon. Member for Wycombe on 3 December 2003.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the implications of the appeal by Helena Smith against the Child Support Agency. [141261]

Mr. Pond: The period for appeal against the decision has not yet expired. However, the Agency is issuing guidance to its staff to assist them in handling inquiries arising from the decision.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what account the Child Support Agency takes of court orders when assessing the level of maintenance to be paid by non-resident parents; and if he will make a statement. [141937]

Mr. Pond: Where an application to the Child Support Agency is made as a result of a parent with care claiming a relevant benefit, any court order for the child concerned is cancelled.

Under the new child support scheme, in non-benefit cases either parent can choose to use the services of the Agency even though they may have a court order. In such cases the court order is cancelled. The new provisions only apply to court orders made on or after 3 March 2003 and provided that the order has been in place for at least a year.

Court orders for other children may be taken into account when the Agency determines a non-resident parent's liability for child support maintenance.

Child Support Payments (North-west)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many and what proportion of families are entitled to child support payments in (a) St. Helens, (b) Merseyside and (c) the North West region in the last year for which figures are available. [141299]

Mr. Pond: The information is in the table.

Number and proportion of families entitled to Child Support payments at 30 November 2002

	Number of families (Thousand)	Total number of Child Benefit families (Thousand)	Proportion of families entitled to Child Support payments (%)
St. Helens	4.6	22.1	20.9
Merseyside	32.9	173.6	18.9
North West	148.3	848.1	17.5

Notes

1. CSA figures include all full maintenance assessment cases only and include direct pay cases and zero assessments.
2. CSA figures produced using IAD 5 per cent. scan of Child Support Computer System (CSCS) and therefore may be subject to sampling variation.
3. Figures are in thousands and rounded to the nearest hundred.
4. As a family can occasionally be part of more than one CSA case (when a parent with care has children by more than one non-resident parent) these figures represent a small over-estimate.
5. The proportion of families entitled to Child Support payments is derived by comparing the number of CSA cases with the number of families in receipt of Child Benefit.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what estimate his Department has made of the number of pensioners eligible for council tax benefit in Blackpool. [141362]

Mr. Pond: I regret that the information is not available in the format requested.

Statistics for Great Britain are presented in the DWP series "Income Related Benefits Estimates of Take-Up". The latest estimates relate to financial year 2000–01 and are in the Library.

Disability Living Allowance

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in (a) City of Edinburgh local authority area, (b) the Edinburgh West parliamentary constituency, (c) Scotland and (d) the UK are in receipt of (i) the middle rate of disability living allowance care component, (ii) the higher rate of disability living allowance care component and (iii) the higher rate of the disability living allowance mobility component. Sample

Figures are in thousands and rounded to the nearest hundred.

Figures marked * are less than 500 and subject to a high degree of sampling variation. From November 2002, the methodology for producing these figures was changed to allow statistics to be published much sooner. This has resulted in a small increase in the reported caseload. This is because some cases which have actually terminated but have not yet been updated on the computer system are now included.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people were found to be fraudulently claiming the disability living allowance in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002. [141928]

Fareham Jobcentre

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many staff are located at the former jobcentre premises at 187–199 West Street, Fareham; [143697]

(2) what the (a) annual rental and (b) unexpired lease period is of the former jobcentre premises at 187–199 West Street, Fareham; [143698]

(3) if he will make a statement on the future use by the Department of the former jobcentre premises at 187–199 West Street, Fareham. [143699]

Mr. Browne [holding answer 11 December 2003]: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Gifts of Cash

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to issue guidance that small gifts of cash to relatives under the age of 18 will be exempted from the Pension Credit and Income Support deprivation of capital requirements. [144002]

Malcolm Wicks: As with all the income related benefits, someone may be treated as having capital they do not actually have if they deliberately deprive themselves of the resource to secure or increase entitlement to Pension Credit, but it is not necessarily the case that they will be. The main purpose of this is to guard against people giving away capital with the intention of increasing benefit entitlement.

In addition, in Pension Credit people will not be treated as depriving themselves of capital if they have used their resources to reduce or repay a debt (for example, a mortgage), or to buy something which was reasonable in their circumstances (for example, a car). This is part of normal financial planning which people age 60 and over may undertake, particularly on retirement.

Guidance provides that decisions must be made in the light of the circumstances of each case and the considerable body of case-law which has developed on similarly worded provisions.

Guaranteed Minimum Pension

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what steps the Government have taken since May 1997 to ensure that members of final salary pension schemes were made aware of risks to their accrued pension rights upon employer insolvency and scheme wind-up; [142380]

(2) what the Government's policy is on advising existing pension scheme members of risks to their pension rights as a consequence of employer insolvency. [142384]

Malcolm Wicks: The Government encourage anyone considering joining or leaving a pension scheme to obtain as much information as possible about the options open to them and to seek independent financial advice. As well as highlighting further sources of information, leaflets published by the Pensions Service provide basic information on occupational pensions for people to use as they decide the best way in which to provide for their retirement. Similar information aimed at pension providers is published by the Inland Revenue.

Occupational pension schemes are provided voluntarily by employers and the trustees are required as a minimum to make funding information available to members as part of the annual report. It is the responsibility of employers and scheme trustees to monitor how scheme assets compare with scheme liabilities and take whatever action is required to address any funding shortfall, working within the legislative framework provided by the Government. To reduce the risks to members' accrued pension rights as a consequence of employer insolvency, the Government is introducing the new Pension Protection Fund. The introduction of new scheme-specific funding requirements will raise member awareness and understanding by requiring that trustees send regularly updated information to scheme members each year, containing key information about the funding position of their scheme.

Housing Benefit

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average cost was in 2002–03 of housing benefit payments made to (a) council tenants, (b) tenants of registered social landlords and (c) private tenants. [142605]

Mr. Pond: The information is in the table.

Average weekly HB by tenure in Great Britain 2002–03

Tenure	Average weekly housing benefit (£)
Local authority	47.00
Registered social landlord	63.90
Private (excluding registered social landlord)	71.40

Notes:

1. The data refers to benefit households claiming housing benefit, which may be a single person or a couple or a family. More than one benefit household can live in one property, for example two or more adults in a flat or house share arrangement.

2. The average amounts have been rounded to the nearest 10 pence.

3. Figures for any non-responding authorities have been estimated.

4. Figures exclude any Extended Payment cases.

5. The figures are averages taken from the four quarters May, August, November 2002 and February 2003.

Income Support/Jobseeker's Allowance

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much money was claimed in (a) income support and (b) jobseeker's allowance between October 2001 and September 2002. [142832]

Mr. Pond: The information is in the table.

Amount of income support and jobseeker's allowance paid out between October 2001 and September 2002

	£ million
Income support	9,640
Jobseeker's allowance	2,260

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest £10 million.

2. The income support figure is for income support paid to people under 60 years of age. Persons over 60 years of age were paid the minimum income guarantee.

Jobcentre Plus

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has for the development of a Jobcentre Plus office in Gosport. [141827]

Mr. Browne [holding answer 10 December 2003]: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. Peter Viggers, dated 15 December 2003:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply direct to your question about the development of Jobcentre Plus in Gosport. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Jobcentre Plus has been established to deliver a radical change in the way that benefits and employment services are provided to people of working age. By 2006, we plan to introduce a network of around 1,000 fully integrated Jobcentre Plus offices.

Through the development of these new modern offices, Jobcentre Plus will provide an integrated, work-focused service to all people of working age. The introduction of work-focused interviews is extending the opportunity to more people to take advantage of the help, guidance and support we can provide to assist them to move into sustainable employment. We are also introducing new services for employers, which will help them fill vacancies more quickly with well-prepared and motivated employees.

The Jobcentre Plus Implementation Programme for Hampshire commenced in June 2002. Early on in the process, it became apparent that, for Gosport, the existing Jobcentre premises in South Street would not be suitable for the delivery of the new Jobcentre Plus services.

Following a lengthy search and subsequent negotiations, suitable premises have now been secured. Work to convert and refurbish the site, situated next to the Iceland store in Walpole Road, commenced Monday 1 December, with the new office, which will offer the full range of Jobcentre Plus services, due to open in May 2004. While the work is in progress, the existing Jobcentre in South Street, together with the Social Security Office in the High Street will continue to operate as normal. In May 2004, following the opening of the new office, the existing Jobcentre in South Street will close. In addition to the new premises in Walpole Road, the Social Security Office will continue to offer access to the Social Fund and issue counter payments to customers.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he will answer the letter from the hon. Member for Isle of Wight of 14 October 2003 about Jobcentre Plus jobs on the Isle of Wight. [142967]

Mr. Browne [holding answer 9 December 2003]: I regret we have no record of the hon. Member's letter. If he would send a copy to me I will arrange for it to be considered urgently.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many Jobseeker's Allowance claimants are signed up for further education courses for less than 16 hours; and what plans he has to extend the hours of coursework acceptable within his Department's guidelines. [142585]

Mr. Browne [holding answer 9 December 2003]: Information about the number of jobseekers who are engaged in part-time courses for less than 16 hours a week is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

People in receipt of Jobseeker's Allowance can undertake part-time learning provided they are available for and actively seeking work and have a valid Jobseeker's Agreement which takes their learning into consideration. We have no plans to extend the number of hours that are regarded as part-time learning.

The Social Security system is not intended to finance education—this is a matter for the educational authorities and the Department for Education and Skills. Most students engaged in full-time education are not entitled to Jobseeker's Allowance.

Jobcentre Plus has a wide range of programmes, such as the New Deals and Work Based Learning for Adults (in England), to help jobseekers gain the skills they need to help them find work. For people who wish to pursue full-time learning, there are various Adult Learning funding options available through the Department for Education and Skills.

Late Payment of Debt

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many claims for statutory interest payments have been submitted to his Department under the terms of the Late Payment of Debt Act 1998; how many claims were met; and what the total value was of such payments in each year since the Act has been in operation. [141599]

Mr. Browne: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, South (Nigel Griffiths) on 3 December 2003, Official Report, column 102W.

Legislation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation sponsored by his Department in 2002–03 was introduced to implement EU requirements. [141128]

Mr. Pond: The Department did not sponsor any primary legislation during the 2002–03 Session (13 November 2002–20 November 2003).

The Department was responsible for the making of 97 General Statutory Instruments during the 2002–03 Session (including 11 from the Health and Safety Executive), some of which consolidated and revoked previous instruments. 9.27 per cent. of the total (nine Statutory Instruments, including seven from the Health and Safety Executive) give effect to EU requirements.

Local Authorities

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the Government will issue the new regulations for payment and associated operations for (a) council tax benefit and (b) housing benefit by local authorities; and whether local authorities will be fully reimbursed by his Department for payments made under these benefits. [144195]

Mr. Pond: We have recently conducted a review of the Housing Benefit (HB) and Council Tax Benefit (CTB) subsidy rules and rates. Details of the new rules and rates, which are clearer and simpler to administer, were issued to all local authorities in HB/CTB Circular S9/2003, a copy of which is in the Library. Local authorities will be fully reimbursed for all correctly paid HB and CTB.

The Income-related Benefits (Subsidy to Authorities) Order 1998 (SI1998 No 562) and amendments provide the legislative basis of subsidy payments to authorities. The new rules and rates will be incorporated in an amendment to this Order which will be laid, in accordance with the normal practice, after the end of the 2004–05 year.

Ministerial Correspondence

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he will give a substantive reply to the letter of 23 October 2003 from the hon. Member for Walsall North, ref. PQ/03/400456. [143958]

Maria Eagle: I replied to the hon. Member today.

New Deal for Disabled People

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many people in the Wycombe constituency have (a) been registered and (b) found work under the New Deal for Disabled People this year; [143847]

(2) what organisations have helped to (a) register and (b) find work for people in the Wycombe constituency under the terms of the New Deal for Disabled People; and how many people each organisation has helped in each category. [143848]

Mr. Browne: Information about New Deal for Disabled People performance is not available by constituency.

There are four Job Brokers delivering New Deal for Disabled People in the Wycombe constituency: Support Shop Ltd.; Yes2Work; Shaw Trust; and Scout Enterprises (Western).

The latest national performance statistics are that, between July 2001 and September 2003, over 57,000 disabled people registered to find work; over 15,500 found work; and over 5,900 achieved sustained employment.

Notes:

1. Overall Performance and Resource Agreement (PRA) job entries in life of programme total over 20,000.

2. Sustained employment is defined as where a person remains in work for six months or more.

Parents with Care

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many and what percentage of Child Support Agency parents with care were in receipt of (a) income-based jobseeker's allowance and income support and (b) working families tax credit in each of the last six years. [141528]

Mr. Pond: The information is in the table.

Notes

1. All data taken from the published Quarterly Summary Statistics for the Child Support Agency.
2. The figures are based on a 5 per cent. scan of CSCS and therefore may be subject to sampling variation.
3. PWC benefit status derived using data on the IS, JSA and Family Credit/WFTC computer systems.
4. The figures are for cases with a full maintenance assessment.
5. The figures are for the February quarter because this is the latest point for consistent CSA data and data for WFTC.

Pension Credit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether pension credit applications can also indicate whether an entitlement to council tax benefit exists; and whether this information is passed to the (a) council tax benefit authority and (b) applicant for pension credit. [142657]

Malcolm Wicks: The Pension Credit application process alerts customers to the possibility of entitlement to housing benefit and council tax benefit and enables them to ask for a claim form for completion and return to the appropriate local authority. Entitlement to the guarantee credit element of Pension Credit provides linked entitlement to full housing benefit and council tax benefit. Information about Pension Credit awards is provided automatically to local authorities to enable them to determine entitlement to housing benefit and council tax benefit. Notification to customers about entitlement to housing benefit and council tax benefit is the responsibility of the appropriate local authority.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the additional cost of halving the assumed rate of income currently used to assess pension credit applications. [143088]

Malcolm Wicks: The additional cost of halving the assumed rate of income currently used to assess pension credit applications is estimated to be £220 million.

Notes:

1. Figure is rounded to the nearest £10 million.
2. Estimates relate to the year 2004–05.

Pensioner Poverty

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will update the table submitted by his Department to the Committee of Public Accounts and published in the 12th Report of Session 2002–03 on tackling pensioner poverty, Ev.20, setting out expenditure and out-turn for income support for the elderly and minimum income guarantee, to include figures for 2002–03. [143080]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is given in the following table updated with 2002–03 figures.

Income support for elderly/minimum income guarantee-expenditure and out-turn

Notes:

1. Numbers may not sum due to rounding.
2. 2000–01 plans were on a cash basis, published out-turn on a resource basis. To ensure consistency we have quoted the unpublished cash out-turn.
3. 2002–03 actual spending is an expected out-turn figure which was published at Budget 2003. The final out-turn figure will be published shortly in the Department for Work and Pensions Resource Accounts.

Post Office Card Account

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what monitoring takes place of the standard of response to telephone calls to his Department by claimants seeking to open Post Office Card Accounts. [142428]

Mr. Pond [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The standard of responses to telephone calls received by the Customer Conversion Centre (CCC) is subject to quality assurance monitoring, in keeping with industry practice, to ensure that agreed service standards are maintained.

All calls to the CCC are recorded and a selection of the calls are evaluated on a weekly basis.

Unemployment

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many economically inactive people of working age were seeking employment in each year between 1992 and 2002; how many workless households there were in each year; and if he will make a statement. [143132]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Nick Gibb, dated 15 December 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about economically inactive people of working age seeking employment and the number of workless households. (143132)

The attached table gives the information requested for the three month periods ending May each year. These estimates are from the Labour Force Survey (LFS).

Economically inactive people seeking employment are not classified as unemployed in the United Kingdom statistics unless, following the International Labour Organisation guidelines, they are also available to start work within the two weeks following their LFS interview. The figures shown in the table are for the group of people who stated they were not available to start work within that period.

A workless household is a household that includes at least one person of working age where no-one present is in employment.

The LFS is a sample survey and, as with any sample survey, the estimates are subject to sampling variability.

United Kingdom Thousands

Winter Fuel Payment

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate how many single (a) women and (b) men in 2003 will reach the age of 60 years after the qualifying week for Winter Fuel Payment eligibility, but before 25 December. [143085]

Malcolm Wicks: It is estimated that around 23,000 single women and 18,000 single men will reach the age of 60 after the qualifying week of 15 to 21 September 2003 but before 25 December 2003 in Great Britain.

We estimate around 11.5 million people will be eligible for a Winter Fuel Payment this winter and 11,316,111 payments have been issued to date.

Notes:

1. The figures have been calculated using the latest GAD population projections and the 2001 Census data.

2. Those recorded by the Census as being widowed or divorced have been included as being single.

3. The figure for entitlement should not be used to calculate take-up. It is an estimate and therefore subject to margins of error, the number of recipients will rise as late claims are proceeded.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate how many single (a) women and (b) men in 2003 will reach the age of 80 years after the qualifying week for the 80 + Winter Fuel Payment eligibility, but before 25 December. [143086]

Malcolm Wicks: It is estimated that around 36,000 single women and 12,000 single men will reach the age of 80 after the qualifying week of 15 to 21 September 2003 but before 25 December 2003 in Great Britain.

We estimate over two million people in Great Britain will be eligible for the 80 + Annual Payment this winter and almost all have received their extra entitlement with their Winter Fuel Payment.

Notes:

1. The figures have been calculated using the latest GAD population projections and the 2001 Census data.

2. Those recorded by the Census as being widowed or divorced have been included as being single.

3. Virtually all cases aged over 79 will be in receipt of State Retirement Pension, or another DWP benefit, and will therefore be paid automatically.

TRANSPORT

End of Life Vehicles Directive

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being implemented to prevent the Continuous Registration system of cars being circumvented, with regard to the End of Life Vehicles Directive. [143956]

Mr. Jamieson: The End of Life Vehicles Directive requires member states among other thing, to put in place measures to ensure that end of life vehicles are disposed of cleanly. In most cases initially, this will be by vehicle keepers and after 2007, by producers.

The purpose of continuous registration is to maintain an accurate vehicle register entry for every vehicle in use. In the event that it is disposed of by scrapping, the last keeper will be issued with a certificate of destruction by the DVLA. Under continuous registration the keeper is continuously responsible for licensing or declaring a Statutory Off Road Notice on their vehicle every year until transfer to another keeper or disposal.

A449

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the timetable for improving the safety of the A449 between Claines Roundabout and Ombersley. [143926]

Mr. Jamieson: The Highways Agency will be conducting a safety study on this section of the A449 within the next three months to develop a package of measures to improve safety. Any recommendations from this study will be added to the programme of safety improvements.

Aircraft (Pollution)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of technological improvements in aircraft which will be available to reduce levels of nitrogen dioxide by 2010. [144193]

Mr. McNulty: The Government keep abreast of emissions technology developments and future prospects through direct contact with the industry and through international regulatory discussions. Significant advances are forecast for reducing emissions of oxides of nitrogen (NO_x) for engines due to enter service before 2010.

In the context of air quality assessment work supporting decisions to be announced in the forthcoming White Paper, DfT has examined emissions technology developments out as far as 2020.

Aircraft Noise

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which areas he expects would be affected by aircraft noise following the possible construction of a third runway at Heathrow Airport. [144084]

Mr. McNulty: The areas that would be affected are set out in Chapter 7 of the consultation document "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom: South East, Second Edition", published in February 2003, pages 56 and 57.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate his Department has made of the level of increase in noise that residents living under and around the flight path would experience following the possible construction of a third runway at Heathrow Airport. [144085]

Mr. McNulty: The level of increase in noise would depend on the distance of individual residents from the proposed runway and its flight paths and the level of other existing noise sources. Illustrative noise contours, and the areas and populations contained within them at 3dBA intervals from 54dBA Leq up to 72dBA Leq are set out in Chapter 7 of the consultation document, "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom: South East, Second Edition", published in February 2003, pages 56 and 57.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he would take to mitigate the effects of aircraft noise on residents living under or around the flight path if a third runway at Heathrow Airport was constructed. [144087]

Mr. McNulty: We asked for views on noise mitigation and compensation measures in Chapter 16 of the consultation document, "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom: South East, Second Edition", published in February 2003, pages 144 to 149. Having considered the responses carefully, we will set out our conclusions in the White Paper to be published shortly.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the expected noise impact of a third runway at Heathrow Airport would breach the limitations on noise set out in the package of measures imposed by the Inspector for the Terminal 5 Inquiry as a condition for construction of a fifth terminal. [144088]

Mr. McNulty: The planning conditions for construction of Terminal 5, which were imposed by my right hon. Friend the Member for Tyneside, North (Mr. Byers) included a restriction, to apply from 2016, on the area enclosed by the 57dBA Leq 16-hour (0700–2300) noise contour to 145 square kilometres. Information illustrating the likely noise impact of a third runway was set out in Chapter 7 of the consultation document, "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom: South East, Second Edition", published in February 2003, page 56.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether aircraft using the proposed third runway at Heathrow Airport would be permitted to take off and land during the night. [144089]

Mr. McNulty: Restrictions on night movements at Heathrow will be decided in the light of periodic consultations on that issue.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action his Department is taking to reduce the level of noise pollution caused by (a) aircraft flying into and out of Heathrow airport (b) surface access routes into and out of Heathrow airport; and whether these measures would be affected by a further runway. [144115]

Mr. McNulty: Noise from aircraft flying into and out of Heathrow airport is regulated by Notices made under section 78 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982. These include night restrictions, departure noise limits, noise preferential routes and approach procedures. Noise from surface access modes is treated essentially as for those sources on non-airport routes or journeys. The noise implications of a further runway at Heathrow were set out in the consultation on the "Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom (South East)".

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the total (a) area and (b) population affected by aircraft noise was within (i) 57 Leq Contour, (ii) 63 Leq Contour and (iii) 69 Leq Contour and above at (A) Gatwick, (B) Stansted and (C) City airports in each of the last five years. [144170]

Mr. McNulty: The information for Gatwick and Stansted airports is provided in the following tables. London City airport produces maps showing the 57dBA Leq contour and 60dBA Leq contour but the information is not available in the form requested.

Airports

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what comparison he has made of the noise impact upon local residents of (a) the proposal to construct a third runway at Heathrow Airport and (b) other proposals for airport expansion in the South East. [144086]

Mr. McNulty: The data to inform such comparison are set out in Chapters 7 and following of the consultation document, "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom: South East, Second Edition", published in February 2003. We will announce the Government's conclusions in the White Paper to be published shortly.

ATOL Scheme

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of those booking overseas holidays from the United Kingdom were protected by the ATOL scheme in (a) 1995 and (b) the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [143552]

Mr. McNulty: In 1995 the proportion of people protected by ATOL compared with the number of people going on holiday overseas was 97 per cent. In 2002, the most recent year for which figures are available, that proportion was 92 per cent. If people going abroad to visit friends and relatives are included, the proportions become 82 per cent. and 75 per cent. respectively.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143157]

Mr. McNulty: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the Leader of the House of Commons on 9 December 2003, Official Report, column 355W.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will reply to the letter to him dated 4 November from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. T. P. Garvey. [142955]

Mr McNulty: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State replied to my right hon. Friend's letter on 11 December 2003.

Crash Barriers

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many lorries have crashed through barriers on (a) dual carriageways and (b) motorways in each of the last five years. [143011]

Mr. Jamieson: The following table shows numbers of Heavy Goods Vehicles that have either hit the central reservation or crossed it for both motorways and dual carriageways for the years 1999–2002. The information is not available for 1998.

Vehicles

	[1] Crossed central reservation	Hit central reservation	Hit near/offside crash barrier
Dual Carriageways
1999	42	171	104
2000	57	168	112
2001	48	152	118
2002	46	150	120
Motorways
1999	20	98	76
2000	31	86	89
2001	21	81	95
2002	26	80	95

[1] May include vehicles that either "hit the central reservation" or "near/offside crash barrier".

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has held with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on the implications for sustainable development in the areas of construction of a third runway at Heathrow. [143792]

Mr. McNulty: The Department is liaising with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on all aspects of the forthcoming air transport White Paper.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange for the British Airport Authority's air quality strategy and action plan for Heathrow to be assessed by independent consultants. [143814]

Mr. McNulty: The three local authorities (Hillingdon, Spelthorne and Hounslow) adjacent to Heathrow have declared Air Quality Management Areas in the vicinity of the airport and are now developing action plans in order to reduce emissions.

The BAA Air Quality Strategy and Action Plan has been developed in consultation with local authorities and will be considered by the authorities in their assessments of future achievement of emissions requirements.

BAA's Air Quality Strategy and Action Plan was published in 2002 and has been in the public domain since then. It is also available on the internet, http://www.baa.co.uk/main/corporate/publications frame.html.

Many of the actions contained in the strategy are independently assessed (by independent consultants Casella Stanger) through BAA' Heathrow's reporting of performance in its annual sustainability report (see www.baa.com).

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment his Department has made of the need to construct further terminals at Heathrow if a third runway were to be constructed; [143815]

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the effect on capacity on the north runway at Heathrow of aircraft crossing to access the third runway; [143820]

(3) what estimate his Department has made of how long it would take for aircraft to taxi from terminals to the proposed third runway at Heathrow. [143821]

Mr. McNulty: We have carefully considered all consultation responses on these issues and carried out some further assessment. We will announce the Government's conclusions in the White Paper to be published shortly.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the potential risks from aircraft crossing the northern runway to gain access a proposed third runway at Heathrow. [143822]

Mr. McNulty: In our assessment of all of the options for new airport capacity, we have taken full account of the need to ensure that all aircraft operations comply with the UK's very high aviation safety standards.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the need for further terminals at Heathrow airport, if a third runway is approved. [144173]

Mr. McNulty: We have carefully considered all consultation responses on these issues and carried out some further assessment.

The Government's conclusions on UK airport capacity, including the consideration of development at Heathrow airport, will be set out shortly in the White Paper.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the number of new areas in London which will be affected by noise pollution if the decision to create a third runway at Heathrow Airport goes ahead. [144180]

Mr. McNulty: The areas that would be affected are summarized in Chapter 7 of the consultation document "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom: South East, Second Edition", published in February 2003, pages 56 and 57, and supplementary documents which were published in July 2002.

Lifeboats

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 4 December 2003, Official Report, column 158W, on lifeboats, when the International Maritime Organisation's Design and Equipment Sub-Committee will conclude its review of the standards and guidelines which currently apply to the launching and operation of lifeboats; and what the main objectives of the UK delegation on this committee are. [143498]

Mr. Jamieson: The Design and Equipment Sub-Committee will next meet from 1 to 5 March 2004. The short term objective, which will be reviewed at this meeting, is particularly concerned with reducing the number of accidents during lifeboat drills and ensuring reliability of the equipment. Additional guidance and regulations are being developed on crew training and the maintenance of equipment.

In the longer term, the Sub-Committee seeks to simplify standards for the design of lifeboats in order to make them easier and more reliable to use. It is essential that safety standards in this area are established on an international basis. The UK delegation will therefore support the Sub-Committee by working with international partners to ensure guidelines to the shipping industry are sufficient and effective.

London Underground

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the overall investment figures in the London Underground were for each year between 1990 and 2003, broken down by line. [140927]

Mr. McNulty: London Underground, which transferred from central Government to Transport for London on 15 July, does not record investment by line. They have provided the following information. In April 2000, London Underground adopted new accounting treatment for its investment expenditure which removed the category 'investment renewals' the majority of this expenditure was reclassified as capital, although some (£90 million) became resource expenditure. Therefore the figures before and after April 2000 are not directly comparable and are presented in two separate tables with the years 1990–91 to 1999–2000 on one consistent basis and those for a restated 1999–2000 to 2002–03 are on another. It is normal accounting practice when a change in accounting treatment occurs to restate the previous year's figures on the same basis in the accounts, so that a true comparison can be made.

The deteriorating performance of London Underground in recent years reflects a long period of unstable funding and insufficient investment. That is why this Government have put in place stable long-term arrangements which will see more than £1 billion invested each year for the next 15 years in maintaining and modernising London Underground's assets, with financial incentives on the infrastructure companies to reverse the decline in performance.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) track and (b) signal failures there were on the London Underground in each year between 1990 and 2003, broken down by line. [140930]

Mr. McNulty: This is an operational matter for London Underground (LU), which transferred from central Government to Transport for London on 15 July. London Underground has provided the following information for those track and signal failures that caused more than two minutes delay to services. The information for the years before 1996 could be provided only at disproportionate time and cost.

The deteriorating performance of London Underground in recent years reflects a long period of unstable funding and insufficient investment. Mr. McNulty: This is an operational matter for London Underground (LU), which transferred from central Government to Transport for London on 15 July.

London Underground does not hold the information in the format requested. It only holds data on delays irrespective of their cause where the delay is greater than 15 minutes. The information for the years before 1996 could be provided only at disproportionate time and cost. London Underground has provided the following figures:

M20

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects Junction 10A of the M20 to be opened; and if he will make a statement. [140823]

Mr. Jamieson: Part of this scheme is required to provide access to development sites at Ashford. The completion date therefore depends on reaching agreement with the developers on the funding of those elements of the scheme required as a result of development, as well as the satisfactory completion of all necessary statutory and consultation procedures. The scheme is, currently, programmed to be completed by the end of the decade.

Maritime and Coastguard Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what budget is available to the Maritime and Coastguard Agency for (a) ship inspections and (b) related activity, with particular reference to enforcement, in each of the last five years. [144496]

Mr. Jamieson: The Maritime and Coastguard Agency's budget for ship inspections and related activity, including enforcement in each of the last five years, is listed in the table.

	Budget (£000)
Resource Accounts
2003–04	25,769
2002–03	25,072
2001–02	28,750
Cash Accounts
2000–01	18,955
1999–2000	15,473

The Resource Accounts figures include depreciation and capital charge, which are not included within the Cash Accounts outturns.

Offshore Wind Turbines

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps the Government are taking to limit the possibility of ships colliding with offshore wind turbines. [141909]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department will continue to strive to ensure that the risk of ships colliding with offshore wind turbines is kept as low as practicable. When granting consents under the Coast Protection Act 1949 my Department ensures that offshore wind turbines are not located in areas of high collision risk. When construction begins, the existence of offshore wind turbines in a specific location is made known to mariners by way of Notices to Mariners issued by the UK Hydrographic Office and, where necessary, by annotations on nautical charts. Offshore wind turbine developments are also required to be marked in accordance with guidance issued by the International Association of Lighthouse Authorities.

In considering the second round of bids for site leases, my Department is working with the Department of Trade and Industry and the Crown Estate to help direct offshore renewable energy developments towards areas of the sea associated with low numbers of ship movements. My Department wishes to obtain a full understanding of the cumulative impact on shipping caused by the potential development of the site leases and will consult the shipping and ports industries on the outcome of the Crown Estate's tender assessment panel.

There will also be further consultation by developers as the legislative consents process requires an environmental impact assessment to be made for each site. To assist developers assess the risks posed by shipping and the measures that they should take to mitigate those risks, detailed guidance has been made available by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency.

The Government are introducing legislative proposals in the Energy Bill for safety zones to be established around offshore renewable energy developments. The Bill, which was introduced into the other place (House of Lords) on 30 November, also makes provision for the creation of a new offence in respect of unauthorised ships entering, or breaching the restrictions on operating within, a safety zone. My officials will work closely with the Maritime and Coastguard Agency and the Department for Trade and Industry in establishing safety zones, appropriate to individual offshore turbine developments, in order to further reduce the risk of collisions.

Public Transport (Disabled Access)

David Davis: : To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision rail franchises are required to make for passengers who (a) are disabled and (b) have mobility problems, when deciding what rail links to maintain or discontinue. [143243]

Dr. Howells: The procedures for deciding whether to reduce or discontinue a rail service are designed, among other things, to ensure that the particular needs of passengers with disabilities or mobility problems are fully taken into account. The level of service which an operator must provide is governed by a Passenger Service Requirement (PSR) and any change requires Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) approval. Where station or line closures are proposed a statutory closure procedure, which includes consultation with passengers, must be followed. In deciding whether to approve a service reduction or closure, the SRA or statutory authorities are expected to take proper account of the implications for all affected groups, including disabled passengers.

Rail Services

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport at how many railway stations in England and Wales platform extensions are (a) under way and (b) planned within the next two years; and where each such railway station is. [142618]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 8 December 2003]: It is understood that Network Rail has work under way at Hollingbourne, Harrietsham, Charing, and Nuneaton, and that work is planned at Sandal and Agbrigg, Wakefield Westgate, South Elmsall, Fitzwilliam, Braintree, Braintree Freeport, Cressing, White Notley, Harrow and Wealdstone, Bushey, Kings Langley, Apsley, Hemel Hempstead, Berkhamsted, Tring, Cheddington, Bletchley, Billingshurst, Portslade, West Norwood, Hampden Park, Lewes, Farnham, Virginia Water, Basingstoke, Ascot, Farncombe, Milford, Witley, Liphook, Liss, Petersfield, Bentley, Brockenhurst, Poole, Moreton, Lymington Town, Camberley, Abercynon North, Penrhiwceiber, Fernhill, Cwmbach, Aberdare, Lichfield Trent Valley, Hinckley, Narborough, South Wigston, Princes Risborough, Beaconsfield, Gerrards Cross, High Wycombe, West Ruislip, South Ruislip, Wembley Stadium, and Denham.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the provision of rail services in the east of England. [143527]

Mr. McNulty: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is currently considering proposals put to him by the Strategic Rail Authority for a new Greater Anglia franchise to commence on 1 April next year. The SRA will also begin consultation on an East Coast Main Line strategy early in the New Year. This is the third in a planned series of 10 strategies and will consider the best use of the existing line and its links to other areas.

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans the Strategic Rail Authority has to develop train services to and from Faversham; [143916]

(2) what progress has been made with respect to phase 2 of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link as it affects Faversham. [143917]

Mr. McNulty: The Strategic Rail Authority recently completed consultations on the proposed Integrated Kent Franchise. The consultation included options for domestic services on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL) but the aim is to improve rail services throughout Kent, not only to destinations which might be served by the CTRL. Further consultations on a more detailed service pattern are planned for early in the new year and it is therefore too soon to say what the outcome might be for individual destinations.

The CTRL domestic service options set out in the consultation are, regardless of the stations they might serve, dependent on completion of the line. Section 2 is on target to open early in 2007.

Road Safety

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about safety on the (a) A14, (b) A134 and (c) A140 in Suffolk; and if he will make a statement. [143528]

Mr. Jamieson: I have received one recent representation on road safety on the A14, A134 and A140. The Highways Agency (responsible for the A14) and Suffolk County Council (responsible for the A134 and A140) are committed to achieving Government targets on reducing road casualties. The Highways Agency is making good progress with two Targeted Programme of Improvement schemes for resolving accident problems on the A14 in Suffolk, at Rookery Crossroads and the Haughley Bends, and Suffolk County Council have plans for further accident reduction measures on both the A134 and A140.

Safety Camera Partnerships

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines he has issued to the local camera safety partnerships. [142916]

Mr. Jamieson: The rules and guidelines for the safety camera netting off scheme are contained in a Handbook that has been issued to every partnership.

Shipping

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 4 December 2003, Official Report, column 162W, on shipping, how the Government determine that ships which do not fly the red ensign but qualify for the tonnage tax regime are strategically and commercially managed in the UK. [143499]

Mr. Jamieson: The strategic and commercial management test arises from the European Commission's guidelines on State Aid in the maritime sector. As no specific EC guidance is available on the meaning of "strategically and commercially managed" the Government adopt a common sense interpretation, taking into account the various different strands of management activity that can be carried out in respect of a ship. Elements of both legs of the test must be demonstrated. Among the indicators that might be considered are:

Strategic management:

Location of HQ, including senior management staff

Where the board of directors makes its decisions

Commercial management:

Route planning

Taking bookings for passengers and cargo

Managing bunkers, provisioning and victualling requirements

Personnel management

Technical management

None of the indicators for strategic or commercial management will be conclusive on their own. The Government will consider the number and weight of the various indicators exhibited for both legs of the test and will expect to see real economic activity from ship operations in the UK. Greater weight will be given to the higher levels of decision making and management as opposed to day to day management.

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 4 December 2003, Official Report, column 162W, on shipping, how many people have been employed in the UK in each of the last 10 years as inspectors to carry out monitoring and compliance inspections of ships to ensure that security measures are properly implemented. [143500]

Mr. Jamieson: The numbers of Security Inspectors employed by the Department for Transport with responsibility for compliance inspections of ships for each of the last ten years are as follows:

1994—6

1995—5

1996—5

1997—5

1998—5

1999—5

2000—5

2001—5

2002—5

2003—4.

In accordance with security priorities identified by my Department the inspections are carried out on passenger vessels under the provisions only of the Aviation and Maritime Security Act 1990. The Inspectors are also responsible for ensuring security compliance by the ports from which these vessels operate thereby providing a fully integrated ship/port security regime.

Small Businesses

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department uses a database of individual small businesses for consultation purposes. [142475]

Mr. McNulty: The Department for Transport is committed to good communications with all its stakeholders. Individual policy divisions consult widely with relevant stakeholders, including small businesses, as appropriate when formulating policy. The Department also uses the Small Business Service database of small businesses to seek views on policy proposals.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143154]

Hilary Benn: I refer the hon. Member the Leader of the House to the answer given by my right hon. Friend on 9 December 2003, Official Report, column 355W.

Burundi

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment he has made of UK aid levels in Burundi following the report of the UN Economic and Social delegation indicating that peace has been restored. [141367]

Hilary Benn: There have been encouraging developments in the peace process in Burundi, but it would be premature to say that peace has been fully restored. At the regional summit on Burundi which took place in Dar es Salaam on 16 November, the Burundi transitional government and the CNDD/FDD rebel group agreed to cease hostilities and share power pending national elections at the end of the transitional period in 2004. Efforts are continuing to persuade the remaining rebel group, the FNL, to cease hostilities and enter negotiations.

The UK is providing substantial aid support to Burundi. DFID assistance is likely to amount to some £7 million during the present financial year, comprising humanitarian assistance, and support to local peacebuilding programmes, government capacity building, and to the national HIV/AIDS programme. This does not include DFID's 5-year $25 million pledge to the Multi-Donor Demobilisation and Reintegration Programme for the Great Lakes Region, which will support Burundi's national Disarmament, Demobilisation and Reintegration (DDR) programme once it is under way. It also does not include the UK's contributions to the EC and other multilateral programmes in Burundi.

The UK is also contributing substantially to the African Union's peacebuilding force, the African Mission in Burundi (AMIB). So far this year we have contributed £3.9 million to help meet the equipment costs of the Mozambican contingent to AMIB, and have recently agreed a further contribution of £2 million to help meet AMIB's in-country costs.

Central Africa

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when his Department will publish a joint strategy paper on the Great Lakes Region; what assessment he has made of the most recent report of the UN panel of experts on the exploitation of natural resources in the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement. [141833]

Hilary Benn: DFID plans to publish a note shortly, agreed jointly with the FCO, which will outline its global and regional approach to conflict resolution and development in the Great Lakes.

The FCO will shortly make a statement on the final report of the UN Panel, representing its position and that of the Department for Trade and Industry and DFID.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps are being taken as part of the UK's initiative to improve primary education in (a) Rwanda and (b) Malawi. [142282]

Hilary Benn: The Government of Rwanda have made remarkable progress in providing education for all since the 1994 genocide. Primary Net Enrolment reached 81.7 per cent. this year, more than twice the figure for 1995.

DFID has committed more than £13 million to education in Rwanda since 2001, focusing on improving the access, equity and quality of primary education. This includes £3 million for the purchase of primary school textbooks, as well as support for the development of the curriculum, the decentralisation of basic education services, initiatives for out-of-school children and for girls, education on HIV/AIDS and capacity building for education officials.

In addition, DFID provides some £25 million a year and the EC some €17 million a year in flexible budget support to the Government of Rwanda, which supports the implementation of Rwanda's Poverty Reduction Strategy.

DFID is also supporting improvements to the quality and accessibility of primary education in Malawi. This includes support for a more relevant primary curriculum, improved in-service training of teachers and the involvement of communities in school management. We have also built 250 classrooms and plan to add another 1,250 more. The total value of our current financial commitment is £61 million. We spent £4.6 million in financial year 2002–03 on education in Malawi.

Energy Policy

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) whether he has carried out an analysis of the extent to which his Department's support for fossil fuel investment is consistent with (a) the UK's obligations under the Kyoto Protocol and (b) the Government's goal to reduce its carbon dioxide emissions by 60 per cent. from 1990 levels by 2050; [142349]

(2) what his policy is towards the provision of loans and loan guarantees by multilateral development banks to fossil fuel projects overseas, and whether he has reviewed that policy in relation to concerns about climate change. [142351]

Hilary Benn: The UK Government are committed to taking a lead in meeting obligations under the Kyoto Protocol, including reductions of carbon dioxide emissions. At the same time, we recognise the rights of other sovereign states to fulfil their own legitimate development needs. In considering support for fossil fuel based investments, it is standard procedure for DFID to liaise with other relevant Government Departments to ensure balance and consistency between these objectives. In addition, our policy is to ensure that lending institutions take account of possible social and environmental impacts such as climate change as part of their policies and procedures in assessing fossil fuel projects, before providing loans or loan guarantees. We are particularly concerned that the management of revenues from such projects occurs transparently and with a positive developmental impact. We hope that initiatives such as the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative will help to achieve this.

The UK Energy White Paper, Our energy future—creating a low carbon economy, sets out four core objectives of UK Energy Policy: Tackling Climate Change, Energy Security, Cutting Fuel Poverty and Competitiveness. DFID is working closely with other Government Departments, notably FCO, DTI and DEFRA, to ensure a co-ordinated Whitehall approach to international energy issues.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the total value of support from his Department is to overseas projects for (a) the extraction and transport of fossil fuels and (b) the development of renewable energy. [142350]

Hilary Benn: DFID does not fund any projects for the extraction and transport of fossil fuels. It supports six projects that develop and promote small scale renewable energy sources, especially for rural communities. Projects cover the range of energy options, including renewable/fossil fuel hybrid systems, decentralised power generation and comparison with conventional grid electrification. The total value is £1 million over three years[1].

Ethiopia

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions he is holding with the Ethiopian Government about the border dispute with Eritrea; and if he will make a statement. [141947]

Hilary Benn: Her Majesty's Government keep in touch with the Governments of both Ethiopia and Eritrea at all levels. The Prime Minister recently wrote to both the Prime Minister of Ethiopia and the President of Eritrea indicating that the Boundary Commission's decisions are final and binding and that the two parties should engage in dialogue.

I met the Eritrean Foreign Minister when he visited London recently, during which we discussed the peace process. He also met my hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Minister for Africa. In addition, the Foreign and Commonwealth Minister has recently met with both the Ethiopian and Eritrean Ambassadors.

We also keep in close touch with development in the peace process through our Ambassadors in Addis Ababa and Asmara.

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether it is the policy of his Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142811]

Hilary Benn: The Government are committed to supporting the Fairtrade Foundation's efforts in promoting the supply and marketing of Fairtrade products. The contract for DFID refreshment facilities requires that a range of fair trade products is available for sales on departmental premises and for meetings.

Gender Advisers

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what security considerations led his predecessors to refuse to reveal the salaries of the gender advisers he assigned to Iraq. [141826]

Hilary Benn: Salary details are confidential to the employer and the individual under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. They were not withheld for security reasons.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what guidance his Department sought in the appointment of two gender experts in Iraq from (a) recognised Muslim experts and (b) those with detailed understanding of Iraq. [141829]

Hilary Benn: DFID has extensive experience of working in Muslim countries in the Middle East and elsewhere.

In developing our understanding of Iraq, DFID draws on a wide range of expertise, inside and outside government, including our own staff, consultants and others working in Iraq.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what salaries are paid to the two gender experts who have been assigned by his Department to Iraq. [141830]

Hilary Benn: As the Lord President of the Council, Baroness Amos, answered on 17 November to a question in another place, salary details are confidential under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what experience of Muslim attitudes the two gender experts who have been assigned from his Department to Iraq have. [141831]

Hilary Benn: Both DFID-funded gender advisers in Iraq are Muslim and have extensive experience of working in Islamic cultures.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what arrangements he has made to ensure the co-ordination of gender advice to the Government of Iraq between (a) secondees he has assigned and (b) those of other countries. [141832]

Hilary Benn: Both DFID-funded gender advisers in Iraq have clear and specific terms of reference setting out their roles with respect to the Iraqi authorities and the Coalition Provisional Authority. They are expected to co-ordinate their own work with that of other professionals in the field, in particular through the development of women's networks in Iraq.

Ghana

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on International Monetary Fund opposition to the increase in rice and poultry tariffs in Ghana. [143635]

Hilary Benn: In his February 2003 Budget the Minister of Finance of Ghana proposed increases in duties on rice and poultry respectively. These increases were the subject of discussions with the International Monetary Fund, which was about to grant Ghana an arrangement under the Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility. The discussions centred on the effects of the proposals on food prices and public revenues and not on the principles of trade liberalisation. The proposals were later withdrawn by the Government of Ghana.

Global Fund

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans his Department has to help secure the long-term future of the Global Fund. [141499]

Hilary Benn: The UK is intensifying its efforts to tackle the HIV/AIDS epidemic, as set out in the recently published Call for Action. The UK was a prime mover in setting up the Global Fund to fight AIDS, TB and Malaria (GFATM) and we very much want it to be successful as one of a number of instruments in the fight to tackle these three terrible diseases. The long-term future of the fund will be decided by its ability to achieve good results. We and other partners are therefore working closely with the fund to help to increase its effectiveness.

The UK recognises that in order to be secure and to be able to plan well, the fund needs to have long-term stability of funding. We therefore extended our current commitment through to 2008 bringing our total contribution to the GFATM to US$280 million. Funding will be subject to the GFATM reflecting a clear poverty focus, achieving a better financing system, integrating the fund's activities more effectively with national programmes and meeting agreed benchmarks to monitor its effectiveness. We have been working closely with the fund on all of these issues and made some good progress at the recent Board meeting held in October—particularly on improving the financing system by moving to a more reliable system of replenishment based on commonly agreed performance measures. Good results will encourage increased contributions to the Global Fund—both from the UK and, importantly, from the wider international community and this will help to ensure its future.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans he has to contribute to the reform of the Global Fund's administrative structure. [141500]

Hilary Benn: The Global Fund was created as a new partnership between Governments, civil society, the private sector and affected communities in January 2002 and the UK was a prime mover in its establishment. It was set up with an innovative organisational structure—with Country Coordinating Mechanisms (CCMs), Local Fund Agents (LFAs) and Principal Recipients (PRs) at country level. The Fund recognises that there is a need at this early stage to assess the relevance, efficiency and effectiveness of the new structures in order to suggest and introduce improvements. Evaluation priorities for 2004–05 have been set these will include the Fund's governance structure and an assessment of the performance based funding system.

Members of the Board of the Global Fund have a collective responsibility to ensure its effectiveness. As a Board member and through our membership on committees of the Fund—such as the Monitoring and Effectiveness, Finance and Audit Committee, the UK will play its part in any reform resulting from these evaluations. We will be particularly keen to ensure that Global Fund processes do not add to the administrative burden of countries but align and harmonise with existing systems.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans his Department has to adopt a system of annual contributions to the Global Fund based on the Equitable Contribution Framework. [141502]

Hilary Benn: My Department has no plans to adopt a system of contributions based on an equitable contribution framework. At the sixth Board meeting of the Global Fund held in October, members of the Board of the Global Fund voted to move to a periodic replenishment model on a voluntary basis for all public donors, complemented by additional ad hoc donations. This is now the agreed system for contributions to the Global Fund and should put the Fund on a firmer financial footing.

Indigenous Peoples' Demonstration Project

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money was originally allocated to the Indigenous Peoples' Demonstration Project for the conservation of Brazilian rain forest; what proportion of this sum will be reallocated for middle income countries; and when support for the IPDP will end. [142647]

Hilary Benn: The Indigenous Peoples' Demonstration Project (IPDP) has a budget of £2.1 million for five years. It started in May 2002, with an estimated completion date of April 2007. As DFID is still in the process of reviewing its programme to Brazil, no decisions have been taken yet on the extent to which the project may be affected.

Iraq

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what expert advisers, other than on gender, he intends to send to Iraq for strategic advice; and on which subjects. [141824]

Hilary Benn: Within the Coalition Provisional Authority in Baghdad, DFID currently provides strategic advisers in the following areas: Urban Development and Infrastructure, and Food Security. We are planning to deploy additional experts in the following areas: Water and Sanitation, Local Government and Institutional Development, and Economic Policy.

DFID currently funds strategic advisers within the Coalitional Provisional Authority South (CPAS) in the following areas: Education, Economic Policy and Financial Management and Governance.

DFID has also agreed to fund strategic advisory posts within the Department of Economic Planning and Development within CPAS. Recruitment is on-going and advisers will work in the following areas: Economic Policy and Financial Management, Agriculture and Irrigation, Justice, Housing and Construction, Transport, Health, Power, Fuel, Water and Sanitation, Telecommunications and Internally Displaced Persons/Refugees.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what immunisation programme is in place for infants in Iraq; what percentage of babies born since the end of the conflict have been immunised; and if he will make a statement. [142614]

Hilary Benn: A national immunisation campaign is under way in Iraq which aims to vaccinate Iraq's 4.2 million children under five against preventable diseases such as polio, measles, tuberculosis, diphtheria and tetanus. The Ministry of Health, supported by UNICEF, has run a series of national immunisation days since June encouraging routine immunisation. DFID has provided £13.8 million to UNICEF to help fund this and other work.

Until the national immunisation days commenced in June, it is thought that no babies born since the end of conflict had been immunised. Since then, an estimated 3 million children under five (including babies) have been vaccinated. This implies that around 80 per cent. of under-fives have been vaccinated so far, though no comprehensive data are available.

There is also a continuing immunisation campaign which takes place twice a week, and aims to reach those children who have missed out on the routine programme of immunisation. In October, the estimated number of children under five reached through this programme was nearly 250,000.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the humanitarian requirements of Iraqi refugees along the Jordanian border. [142783]

Hilary Benn: The office of the United Nations Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) report that there are 1,150 refugees, mostly Iranian Kurds from Al-Tash camp (inside Iraq) and a further 822 in Al-Ruwayshid camp (350 km east of Amman), most of whom are Palestinians. These camps have been prepared for the winter by renewing and strengthening some of the tents and by providing additional blankets and mattresses.

An NGO partner, the Jordan Hashemite Charity Organisation (JHCO), say that they have changed summer tents for thicker winter ones which have a heater inside. Plastic covering is also provided for the outside of the tents and the ground. The number of blankets has doubled and each refugee will have four blankets. Provision has also been made for specific storm shelters and extra clothing. In the area where the camps are established, the temperatures can be warm in the daytime but drop below zero at night.

Mr. Andrew Smith

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what working arrangements there have been between Mr. Andrew Smith and his Department in Sierra Leone in the last 12 months. [142189]

Hilary Benn: There have been no such working arrangements.

Non-effective Anti-malarials

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what research he has undertaken into the distribution of non-effective anti-malarials to African countries; and what plans he has to discuss this with the (a) Global Fund and (b) World Health Organisation. [142182]

Hilary Benn: Death from malaria, due to poor management of the disease, is increasing in Africa. Evidence suggests that this is in part due to drug resistance. The World Health Organisation (WHO) provides recommendations for anti-malarial drug policy based on sound evidence. WHO and Roll Back Malaria provide technical support to governments and their decision on national policies for anti-malarial drug policy. DFID provides financial support to WHO and Roll Back Malaria.

We support the process whereby existing treatment protocols are reviewed regularly in the light of evidence from the field and changing patterns of resistance. We support national governments to help strengthen health systems to deliver effective treatment for poor people. A team from DFID will be meeting with Roll Back Malaria partners in Geneva shortly and we will raise these issues with them.

Reproductive Health

Chris McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what financial support his Department has provided for reproductive health supplies in each of the last three years; [143296]

(2) what proportion of his Department's support for sexual and reproductive health programmes since the International Conference on Population and Development has been utilised for the procurement of reproductive health supplies; [143297]

(3) whether his Department provides technical assistance to its partner countries in building their own capacity to forecast and procure reproductive health supplies; [143298]

(4) what proportion of his Department's financial support for reproductive health supplies in the past year has been channelled (a) bilaterally, (b) multilaterally and (c) to the private sector and NGOs; [143299]

(5) what proportion of his Department's support for HIV/AIDS programmes is spent on ensuring the availability of male and female condoms; [143300]

(6) whether his Department plans to make available to the United Nations Population Fund a grant for reproductive health commodities this year in addition to the core grant. [143301]

Hilary Benn: With permission, I will reply to all six questions together. Reproductive health supplies are normally provided as an integral part of broader programmes to promote sexual and reproductive health and prevent HIV/AIDS. The Department for International Development (DFID)'s data capture systems do not, therefore, allow us to isolate expenditure specifically on provision of reproductive health supplies.

DFID spent a total of over £270 million on reproductive health and HIV/AIDS programmes in the financial year 2002–03, up from around £40 million in 1997–98. DFID is one of the leading bilateral providers of condoms and other reproductive health commodities to developing countries. We are supporting a number of male and female condom social marketing programmes that combine condom procurement and distribution with encouraging behaviour change, communication and capacity building.

The Government have also committed £16 million (over five years) to the Medical Research Council's microbicide development programme. This promises to be an important new technology that, like female condoms, will empower women to protect themselves from sexually transmitted infections.

Condoms or drugs alone are not the answer to tackling HIV/AIDS. We regard provision of reproductive health supplies as an integral part of DFID's wide-ranging support for reproductive health. This includes HIV/AIDS programmes, prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted infections, family planning and maternal and adolescent health. The fight against HIV/AIDS must include effective public programmes involving education, prevention, treatment, care and support and impact mitigation.

Examples of reproductive health and HIV/AIDS programmes supported by DFID that include provision of reproductive health supplies are:

£2 million for a regional HIV/AIDS prevention programme in Asia;

£7.65 million for a regional AIDS programme in Southern Africa;

£2.9 million for support for reproductive health in Zambia.

DFID supports a £15 million HIV/AIDS Prevention and Care Project in China, which includes working with vulnerable groups, such as commercial sex workers, through civil society organisations. To date, this work has been focussed on reducing risk and vulnerability through increased condom use, access to education and health services. Government capacity to address the rights of children vulnerable to or affected by HIV and the need to address the gender dimensions of HIV and poverty are being given renewed attention.

More widely, DFID provides technical assistance to strengthen local capacity for health sector planning in a number of countries, including Bangladesh, Cambodia, Ghana, Nepal and Tanzania.

The Government are also a major donor to the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and supports the Fund's work to provide the widest achievable range of safe and effective family planning and contraceptive methods, including condoms to prevent HIV/AIDS. This includes providing technical assistance to strengthen local planning capacity. DFID's core support has increased from £15 million a year up to 2001–02 to £ 18million a year from 2002–03 (planned) until 2005–06. We intend to enter into a funding arrangement with UNFPA for several years ahead, to coincide with their work programme, which will give them greater stability of funding. We have no plans to make an additional grant to UNFPA in the current financial year for provision of reproductive health commodities in addition to the core grant.

The UK played a leading role in setting up the Global Fund to fight AIDS, TB and Malaria (GFATM), which is now an important source of funding for HIV/AIDS programmes. In July 2003 the UK pledged an additional US$80 million to GFATM (US$40 million per annum over two further years). This will extend our current commitment to 2008 and bring our total contribution to US$280 million.

The Government also support reproductive health activities at a country level. DFID works through Sector Wide Approaches and Direct Budget Support as ways of supporting countries' own development frameworks, which are often in the form of Poverty Reduction Strategies. We work to ensure that sufficient attention is given to reproductive health issues, including the supply and availability of reproductive health commodities. In many circumstances, for example in Cambodia, DFID is also continuing to ring-fence support for reproductive health and HIV/AIDS work, including the supply of reproductive health commodities. The most recent data shows that, in the financial year 2002–03, out of a total of £96 million spent by DFID on Sector Wide Approaches, £31 million (32 per cent.) was spent on programmes that had reproductive health services as one of their target objectives. We work with partners to increase access by poor people to good quality reproductive and sexual health care and services.

On 1 December—World AIDS Day—the UK Government launched their Call for Action on HIV/AIDS. Details on this can be obtained by contacting: AIDS@dfid.gov.uk. The Call for Action challenges the international community to intensify its efforts to tackle HIV/AIDS and to achieve real progress towards the international targets.

Research Strategy

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what development problems his Department is seeking to resolve through research. [142643]

Hilary Benn: The current research programme covers a very wide variety of development problems. DFID supports major research programmes, either alone or with other funders, on:

HIV/AIDS—including vaccine and microbicide research

Malaria

Tuberculosis

Reproductive and maternal health

Child health

Health systems and economics

Crop production, protection and post-harvest

Livestock and fish production and health

Forestry

Natural resources systems

Chronic poverty—how to reach the very poorest

The state, and how citizens can participate in decisions

Migration

Inequality and ethnicity

Competition, regulation and investment

How developing country governments respond to crises

Urbanisation

Water and Sanitation

Transport

Energy

Information and Communication Technology

I will also write to the hon. Member with some recent examples of DFID-funded research having an impact on poverty.

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on his Department's research strategy. [142644]

Hilary Benn: Following a review of DFID research last year, entitled "Research for Poverty Reduction", the Department is preparing a new research strategy which I hope to publish early in the new year.

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the remit of the Policy Division within his Department. [142645]

Hilary Benn: Policy Division's role is to develop evidence-based, innovative approaches to development, which make a real difference to the poor. Policy Division has been set up to react flexibly to changing needs and priorities. The main areas of work are Aid Effectiveness, Growth, Working in Difficult Environments, Service Delivery, Future Challenges, and Research.

Policy Division has four equally weighted functions:

New policy development

Knowledge sharing and lesson learning across countries

Core policy subjects eg civil service reform

Advisory support to our country programmes worldwide

All Policy Division teams are focussed on producing work that can be put to practical use in the field of poverty reduction.

Policy Division has four Public Service Agreement/Service Delivery Agreement (PSA/SDA) targets:

1. Take up of innovative approaches and research findings developed by DFID.

2. Progress on global issues with major impact on poor people.

3. Increased coherence and quality in the international system for reporting progress against the MDGs.

4. Analytical methods to integrate poverty-environment issues into PRSPs and other development plans.

Rwanda

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures the Government can deploy in the case of a breach of the Memorandum of Understanding with Rwanda. [142513]

Hilary Benn: Our engagement with the Government of Rwanda is based upon the joint commitments set down in the UK/Rwanda Memorandum of Understanding. These commitments include:

> the promotion of peace and stability within the Great Lakes regional, including the promotion of transparency and legality of the exploitation of the region's natural resources;
> the promotion and protection of all human rights, including social and economic rights, for all Rwandans, including through the promotion and observance of relevant international agreements;
> the promotion of democratic institutions of governance;
> the pursuit of poverty reduction, by placing poverty reduction and social inclusion at the centre of policy-making and resource allocation;
> strengthening systems for budget execution, financial management and financial accountability, to ensure that funds are used for the intended purposes, are properly accounted for, and provide value for money.

Progress against these commitments is reviewed each year by a team of independent consultants. That review forms the basis of the annual UK/Rwanda Partnership Talks. Any concerns arising from the independent review or from the UK's routine assessment of Government policy and practice are discussed with the Government of Rwanda.

Should we believe that the Government of Rwanda are not honouring the commitments made in the Memorandum of Understanding, and where the consultation process provided for within the Memorandum of Understanding fails to satisfy our concern, then we reserve the right to amend or entirely suspend our engagement with the Government of Rwanda. Our aim in any re-configuration of our engagement will be to continue to make the greatest possible impact on poverty in Rwanda.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment of the fairness of elections in Rwanda his Department has undertaken. [142511]

Hilary Benn: The recent national elections—the first since 1994, when genocide claimed the lives of over 800,000 Rwandans—were an important step towards Rwandan democracy. They were well organised and peaceful, they helped establish an electoral process in a country with no democratic tradition, and they demonstrated a genuine public thirst for democracy. But we believe that they were also flawed. The European Union's Election Observation Mission highlighted a number of irregularities, although it stopped short of questioning the validity of the process or the result (Observation Missions from the Africa Union and South Africa reported far fewer irregularities). And we assess that in the run-up to the elections, Government moved to control the activities of opposition parties, civil society and the independent media.

We have urged the Government to take confidence from its new popular mandate, to open up space for legitimate political debate and to continue its work to establish a democratic and inclusive state.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment his Department has undertaken of the time scale over which democracy will be introduced in Rwanda with free elections. [142512]

Hilary Benn: DFID's 2003 Country Assistance Plan, a copy of which was recently placed in the House of Commons Library, presents our analysis of the process of democratisation in Rwanda.

We conclude that the Government of Rwanda is committed to establishing a democratic and inclusive state, at the pace that Rwanda's continuing social fragility dictates. We see evidence of this in the recent national elections, the first since the 1994 genocide and civil war. Although flawed, these elections were also well organised and peaceful, and helped establish a democratic process in Rwanda. The Government aims to build democracy from the bottom, by empowering local communities to engage with local government structures around policy development and resource allocation. It believes that democracy built in this way, with its emphasis on social participation and inclusion, will act as a counter-balance to political extremism including genocidal ideology. Local government structures are being established at a rapid rate, and significant resources are now being channelled to them.

We cannot determine a particular year by which "democracy" should be established. The pace of democratisation will be determined by the country's experience as it moves to establish local government, re-integrate ex-combatants returning from the Democratic Republic of Congo and individuals guilty of genocide and allows greater space for Parliament and the public to scrutinise the executive. But we have identified with Government a number of actions that should be taken over the next 12 months in certain key areas of political governance which are necessary to strengthen and demonstrate the move towards democratisation. These actions will be set out in the 2004 UK/Rwanda Memorandum of Understanding, which we will sign with the Government of Rwanda in January. The annual independent review of the Memorandum of Understanding provides the basis for our Partnership Talks with the Government of Rwanda.

Swazi Maize Farmers

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment he has made of the impact which food aid to Swaziland is having on the ability of Swazi maize farmers to sell their produce; and if he will make a statement. [142782]

Hilary Benn: Food aid always has the potential to disrupt incentives to local farmers. That is why DFID looks carefully at the specific food needs in each humanitarian operation and discusses food aid programmes with the major agencies, including the World Food Programme. We encourage WFP to source grains locally whenever this is possible and cost effective.

The National Agricultural Marketing Board of Swaziland suspended import permits for maize at the beginning of November this year. In the view of the Marketing Board, food aid imports are depressing local market prices, and DFID has therefore been discussing the position with the World Food Programme. WFP has informed us that tenders for food aid in Swaziland have been open to Swazi suppliers.

DFID's own support for WFP programmes in Swaziland has prioritised the use of corn soya blend for the most vulnerable of the food insecure, mostly vulnerable children and expectant mothers. Corn soya blend has no locally-produced substitute and will not disrupt incentives for local maize trade or maize planting.

Timber

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development by what means the Department's policy for purchasing timber and timber products ensures that they are obtained from legal and sustainable sources. [141336]

Hilary Benn: DFID ensures that its contractors and procurement agents purchasing goods on our behalf, are aware of Government policies and requires them to obtain proof from their suppliers that timber and timber products have been procured from legal and sustainable sources.

Turkmenistan

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment he has made of the impact which new laws on NGO registration in Turkmenistan will have on the ability of organisations to carry out humanitarian work; and if he will make a statement. [141373]

Mr. Rammell: I have been asked to reply.

I am very concerned that the new legislation on NGOs will criminalise legitimate NGO activity and give the Ministry of Justice powers to curb the work of NGOs in Turkmenistan.

Our Embassy in Ashgabat has raised these concerns with the Turkmen Ministry of Foreign Affairs, urging the Turkmen government not to use the legislation to penalise NGOs. Our concerns have also been raised with the Turkmen Ambassador to London.

With OSCE and other partners we have sent two Note Verbales asking for a meeting with the Turkmen Foreign Minister to discuss our concerns. We await a response and will continue to monitor this issue carefully.

UN Relief and Works Agency

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid was donated by the British Government to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency in each of the last 10 years; and how much is pledged for 2004. [143216]

Hilary Benn: The UK's bilateral contributions to UNRWA for each financial year since 1994 are:

£ million

	Amount
1994–95	6.0
1995–96	6.6
1996–97	8.1
1997–98	10.0
1998–99	3.4
1999–2000	13.0
2000–01	18.8
2001–02	25.4
2002–03	18.8
2003–04	[1]18.1

[1] Spend to December 2003—the forecast for the financial year is £19 million.

Contributions since the start of the intifada in 2000 include extra funding allocated to UNRWA's emergency appeals for the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Our current bilateral framework for UNRWA for 2004–05 is £15 million.

The UK also contributes to UNRWA through its share of EC funding. EC contributions totalled €77 million in 2001, €65 million in 2002 and €82 million this year. The UK provides approximately 19 per cent. of funds to the EC's budget.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Asylum and Immigration

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs what plans he has to ensure consistency in decision making at adjudicator level if the Immigration Appeals Tribunal is abolished. [143465]

Mr Lammy: The majority of appeals within the Asylum and Immigration Tribunal (AIT) will be heard and decided by single immigration judges. In reaching decisions judges must follow case law set by a panel of senior immigration judges and practice directions from the President.

In addition senior immigration judges will be responsible for ensuring consistent standards across the jurisdiction.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs (1) if he will set out the hierarchy within the proposed new asylum and immigration appeals system; [143466]

(2) what the ratio of senior immigration judges to immigration judges will be in his proposed hierarchy for asylum and immigration appeals; [143468]

(3) what the criteria for selecting senior immigration judges will be; and in what respect their role will differ from that of immigration judges; [143469]

(4) if he will make a statement on the role of senior immigration judges. [143470]

Mr. Lammy: The Asylum and Immigration Tribunal will be headed by a President supported by one or more Deputy Presidents. The precise hierarchical structure of the Tribunal, including the selection criteria for senior immigration judges, is the subject of continuing discussions with the judiciary. The intention is to make the best use of the existing judicial complement who will transfer automatically to the new Tribunal. In broad terms, there will be a core body of senior immigration judges to support the work of immigration judges either by way of establishing case law, dealing with applications for review of Tribunal decisions or acting in supervisory positions.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs whether his proposals for a new asylum and immigration appeals system will provide for (a) a review of and (b) an appeal from decisions that can be shown to be incorrect because of an administrative error by the Immigration Appeals Tribunal; and whether his proposals will provide an opportunity to challenge decisions if the conduct of the Immigration and Appeals Tribunal judge is questioned [143467]

Mr. Lammy: The Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claims, etc.) Bill will make provision for the tribunal to review its decision only if there has been a clear legal error which goes to the heart of the decision. A review will be conducted by reference to written submissions only.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many (a) part-time and (b) full-time immigration adjudicators were in post on 1st October in each of the last four years. [143350]

Mr. Lammy: The numbers for fee-paid part-time, and for salaried immigration adjudicators are as follows:

Date	Fee-paid	Salaried
1 October 2000	143	15
1 October 2001	264	46
1 October 2002	394	80
1 October 2003	399	156

These figures do not include the following posts: 1 Chief Adjudicator, 1 Deputy Chief Adjudicator, 9 Regional Adjudicators and 7 Deputy Regional Adjudicators. In addition, a salaried Adjudicator with responsibility for training matters is in the process of being appointed.

Name Changes

Ms Stuart: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many cases of change of name by deed poll were recorded in each of the last five years. [143517]

Mr. Leslie: Figures are only available for the number of change of name deeds registered in the Central Office of the Supreme Court.

The figures are as follows:

	Change of name deeds enrolled
1998	227
1999	210
2000	254
2001	193
2002	184
Total	1,068

Judicial Oversight

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs whether the term judicial oversight in the context of the designated senior judge means (a) active oversight of substantive decisions and (b) purely administrative oversight [143471]

Mr. Lammy: The designated senior judge will have a managerial and an advice and mentoring role. The substantive decision will continue to be the responsibility of the judge conducting the tribunal hearing.

Art Acquisition

Norman Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how much his Department or its predecessors has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by his Department since 1997 has been; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by his Department through sales of works of art has been since 1997. [142356]

Mr. Leslie: My Department has neither acquired nor sold any works of art in the period since 1997.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143161]

Mr. Leslie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Leader of the House of Commons on 9 December 2003, Official Report, column 355W.

House Sales

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many house sales there were at more than (a) £20,001, (b) £50,001, (c) £75,001, (d) £100,001, (e) £150,001, (f) £200,001, (g) £250,001 and (h) £500,001 in Torbay in each of the last six years for which figures are available. [143593]

Mr. Lammy: The figures for each completed calendar year are as follows. Land Registry collects residential property price data by specified price bands and it is not possible to provide figures for sales specifically within the bands £75,001 and £250,001. Alternative ranges have therefore been provided.

	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chechnya

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the human rights situation in Chechnya. [143931]

Mr. Rammell: We remain concerned over consistent reports of human rights abuses in Chechnya, especially reports of rising numbers of "disappearances". We regularly raise our concerns on human rights in Chechnya with the Russian authorities. We most recently did so following the Chechen Presidential elections, when I called for human rights to be upheld in Chechnya.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143152]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House on 9 December 2003, Official Report, column 355W.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the treatment of members of political parties in the Democratic Republic of Congo, with particular reference to the UDPS. [143662]

Mr. Mullin: Political parties, including the Union for Democracy and Social Progress, in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) now enjoy a considerable degree of freedom of speech and of activity. New laws for registration and financing of political parties are on the agenda of the National Assembly of the DRC. Some political parties, newly formed from rebel movements in the east, do not want to register under the former Government's legislation until these laws are passed. With our support, the independent Electoral Commission and the High Media Authority (both civil society institutions) are monitoring closely.

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on human rights in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [143691]

Mr. Mullin: The UN Special Rapporteuse on Human Rights in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) reported to the Security Council in October 2003 on the current situation. We remain concerned about the high level of human rights violations across the country which she reported, particularly in the east.

Many violations committed during the war are also coming to light now that the fighting has reduced and the civilian population has more access to information, to the UN force (MONUC) and to NGOs. The new civil society institutions, particularly the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the National Human Rights Observatoire, will need to work with the Transitional National Government to deal with past and current abuses. The international community, including the UK, is offering political, financial and technical support to these Commissions.

European Constitution

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 245W, on the draft European Constitution, how his statement that Article I-10 (1) should be interpreted accordingly applies to interpretation by the United Kingdom courts in respect of any future enactment of the United Kingdom Parliament which UK courts had determined was unambiguously inconsistent with European Union law. [143765]

Mr. MacShane: The ultimate guarantee of parliamentary sovereignty lies in the power of Parliament to repeal all or any of the Acts which give effect to the EU treaties in this country. It is within Parliament's power to legislate contrary to the UK's treaty obligations. This of course includes legislation that might impact on the effective implementation of Article I-10 (1). The result of so doing, however, would be to place the UK in breach of its treaty obligations.

Gibraltar

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's position on the proposal for British/Spanish joint sovereignty for Gibraltar. [143555]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 12 July 2002, Official Report, columns 1165–80.

Hajj 2004

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what extra consular, medical and other support he proposes to offer to UK citizens attending the Hajj at Mecca in 2004. [144001]

Mr. Mullin: The delegation will include eight doctors, two counsellors and two members of staff from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Identity Cards

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications of the introduction of compulsory identity cards for his Department. [142943]

Mr. Rammell: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) has been involved from an early stage in detailed consultations with the Home Office and other Government Departments about the implications of an identity cards scheme. The FCO's initial concerns were addressed in the Home Office's paper "Identity Cards: The Next Steps" of November 2003. Issues such as the scheme's compatibility with EU legislation are being addressed in the drafting of the Bill. The FCO is represented on the interdepartmental programme board for ID cards which is taking into account the implications for foreign nationals and British nationals overseas, as well as our visa and consular services.

The Government have adopted an incremental approach to the introduction of ID cards which will ensure that successful roll-out in the first stage is a precondition for any move to compulsory cards.

Iraq

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role the Government is playing in the process of awarding contracts for the provision of mobile telecommunications services in Iraq; how this process is being managed; and if he will make a statement. [142018]

Mr. Rammell: The process of awarding licences for the provision of mobile telecommunications services in Iraq is the responsibility of the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA). The Iraqi Minister of Communications reviewed the outcome of the process and announced it.

The CPA put into place measures and safeguards in order to ensure the telecommunications licences were awarded in a transparent, fair and impartial manner, based upon full and open competition.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the extent of the involvement of Mr. Nadhmi Auchi in the process for awarding contracts for the provision of mobile telecommunications services in Iraq. [142020]

Mr. Rammell: The process for awarding licences for the provision of mobile telecommunications services in Iraq was the responsibility of the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA). The Iraqi Minister of Communications reviewed the outcome of the process and announced it. Mr. Nadhmi Auchi was not involved in the process of awarding licences.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) the Pentagon Inspector General and (b) other US authorities on investigations into the awarding of contracts for the provision of mobile telecommunications services in Iraq, with particular reference to the activities of Mr. David Leech and Mr. Jim Davis. [142208]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has had no discussions with the Pentagon Inspector General or other US authorities on investigations into the awarding of the licences for the provision of mobile telecommunications services in Iraq. The British Government have no knowledge of any investigation into or formal allegation against Mr. David Leech or Mr. Jim Davies, and no reason to doubt their integrity in any way.

The CPA put into place measures and safeguards in order to ensure the telecommunications licences were awarded in a transparent, fair and impartial manner, based upon full and open competition.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria will determine whether the results of investigations by (a) the Iraq Survey Group and (b) any other agency will be published; and if he will make a statement. [142637]

Mr. Straw: The Iraq Survey Group is a coalition body, not a UK Government body. The reports that they produce will be shared with the Governments of the coalition parties.

The criteria for the release of any information generated within the Government or received by the Government are laid down in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Middle East

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the action taken by his Department to address human rights violations in Middle Eastern states with particular reference to (a) Saudi Arabia, (b) Syria and (c) Iran. [143549]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and Foreign Office Ministers have discussed human rights concerns with their opposite numbers in these countries on many occasions. We also raise concerns through the EU.

On Saudi Arabia, we continue to have concerns about the failure to implement basic human rights norms. We have raised the use of capital punishment with the Saudi authorities, doing so most recently in conjunction with EU partners on 20 April 2003.

My hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Mike O'Brien) raised a range of civil society issues with Syrian President Bashar al-Assad during his visit to Damascus on 5 March 2003.

The Foreign Secretary most recently raised concerns about human rights in Iran, including restrictions on freedom of expression, with his Iranian counterpart in September 2003. The UK co-sponsored a Canadian-tabled resolution on human rights in Iran at the United Nations General Assembly in November this year.

Simon Chapman

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken to secure the release of Mr. Simon Chapman, arrested on 21 June 2003 in Thessaloniki, Greece; whether Her Majesty's representatives in Greece viewed the video evidence purporting to demonstrate Mr. Chapman's innocence of the charges made against him; how many days Mr. Chapman was on hunger strike; what the most recent assessment is of Mr. Chapman's medical condition; if he will make representations to the Greek authorities to lift the remaining barriers that prevent Mr. Chapman from returning to the UK; and what publicly-funded (a) legal advice and (b) financial support is available to Mr. Chapman to pursue a civil action against the Greek authorities. [143378]

Mr. Mullin: Simon Chapman was released on bail on 27 November 2003. Consular staff were in regular touch with him throughout his detention; and staff in the UK were in frequent touch with his family.

Neither the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) nor the British Embassy in Athens are in a position to comment on the video evidence put forward in Mr. Chapman's defence. It is for the courts to decide upon its relevance to his case.

Mr. Chapman started refusing food and liquids from 4 October 2003, although he did take honey and vitamin supplements. He started taking water from 25 October 2003. Since his release, Mr. Chapman has not contacted our staff but we remain in contact with his family, who have told us that Mr. Chapman is now eating certain foods and steadily regaining weight.

Mr. Chapman's lawyer has made an application to the Greek authorities to allow him to return to the UK pending his trial.

The FCO does not fund the legal costs of distressed British nationals but we have offered the use of a pro-bono lawyer from the FCO panel to assist Mr. Chapman's lawyer.

Sudan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will press the Government of Sudan to accept international monitoring of the situation in Darfur, Sudan; [143650]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Government of Chad with regard to the Sudanese peace talks. [143651]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development spoke with the President of Sudan on 10 December during his visit to Sudan on 10 and 11 December, about the situation in Darfur. He expressed the British Government's concern at the deteriorating humanitarian situation there, and made clear that the parties needed to stop fighting and renew the ceasefire as a matter of urgency. We will ask the Government of Sudan to consider inviting international observers to monitor a renewed ceasefire.

Our Embassy in Khartoum has also had contact with the Chadian Embassy there with regard to the Abeche peace talks.

Terrorism

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of steps taken by Saudi Arabia to combat al-Qaeda operations. [143550]

Mr. Rammell: The Government of Saudi Arabia have taken significant steps to combat al-Qaeda-related terrorism in the aftermath of the 11 September 2001 attacks and in response to increased terrorist activity in Saudi Arabia. It has ratified six of the 12 International Conventions on terrorism; and has signed, but not yet ratified, the Convention on the financing of terrorism. It publicly condemned the 11 September attacks and has made clear repeatedly its condemnation of all terrorism.

Over the past year, the Saudi authorities have adopted wide-ranging measures against terrorism. They have publicly identified wanted terrorist suspects, made many arrests, seized significant caches of terrorist weapons and explosives, sought to counter the ideology underpinning the terrorists' activities, enhanced the security presence in public places, including around residential compounds, and taken measures to counter the flow of terrorist funding. We are co-operating closely with the Saudi authorities, as is the US and other international partners.

Nevertheless, the terrorist attacks of 12 May and 9 November highlight the very real threat of terrorism in Saudi Arabia. We continue to believe terrorists are planning further attacks in Saudi Arabia. Foreign and Commonwealth Office travel advice makes this assessment clear.

UK Visas

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Visa and Correspondence section of UK Visas will reply to the letter of 18 November from the hon. Member for Walsall, North concerning a constituent case, ref. 659979. [143959]

Mr. Mullin: A substantive reply was sent to my hon. Friend on 11 December.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Alternative Voting Methods

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the impact of alternative voting methods in Northern Ireland. [143816]

Mr. Spellar: The Government are always ready to look at alternative voting methods if they lead to a more effective electoral system. However, before considering any alternative methods we would need to be sure that they would not compromise our anti-fraud measures.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what plans he has to introduce pilot schemes for electronic counting of votes in future (a) local government, (b) Assembly, (c) Westminster and (d) European Parliament elections; and if he will make a statement. [144007]

Mr. Spellar: Following the recent Assembly elections we will be talking to interested parties to ascertain their views on ensuring that election counts are efficient and effective as possible.

Ballyvester Primary School

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will make the necessary funding available to Ballyvester Primary School in North Down to facilitate the replacement of mobile classrooms. [143584]

Jane Kennedy: I understand from the Chief Executive of the South Eastern Education and Library Board that the long-term future of Ballyvester Primary School is being considered as part of the Board's five-year Capital Development Plan, which was published in October 2003 and is out for consultation until February 2004. The five-year plan indicates that a review of primary provision in the area will be carried out before the end of 2005.

In the meantime, the Board has carried out improvements to the heating in the main school and external repair to the existing mobiles. As a short-term measure, the Board also offered to replace some of the older mobile classrooms with newer mobiles but the school has declined this solution.

Closed Circuit Television

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding he has made available for town centre CCTV schemes in Northern Ireland; and what assessment he has made of the contribution of CCTV to the reduction of crime in Northern Ireland's town centres. [142689]

Mr. Spellar: During the period 1999–2001, the Government, through the Police Authority for Northern Ireland, invested £2.3 million in CCTV systems in seventeen town centres across Northern Ireland. We hope that it will be possible to build on this original investment and plan to make a further statement shortly.

In terms of the impact of CCTV, we have received evaluations from nine of the systems installed during 1999–2001. My officials are currently considering these and will be seeking a further independent view of their overall impact on crime across Northern Ireland.

We remain of the view that CCTV, when used as part of a wider crime reduction strategy, can be an effective tool in tackling crime.

Diabetes Framework

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in the implementation of the Diabetes Framework Strategy for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [143973]

Angela Smith: The Department will establish an Implementation Team, early in the new year, to produce an implementation plan for the Diabetes Service Framework. The Implementation Team will identify specific actions which can be taken forward within the additional resources which will be made available for diabetes services next year and produce a prioritised and costed list of further actions which can be taken forward as additional resources are secured.

Disability Discrimination Act

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to extend Part 3 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to cover education and transport services in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [142693]

Mr. Spellar: It is proposed to issue a Northern Ireland consultation document on the proposal to remove the exemption for transport services in Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 early next year.

In relation to the coverage of education, the Act will effectively be extended to cover Northern Ireland by way of Special Educational Needs and Disability legislation which is currently in course of preparation and is expected to be made next year.

Farming (Subsidy Claims)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many appeals have been heard against decisions by the Department to penalise farmers for errors in subsidy claims; and what percentage of these appeals have been successful. [143948]

Mr. Pearson: A total of 48 cases have been heard by the Independent Appeals Panel. Of these, eight relate to errors in subsidy claims and one of these (12.5 per cent.) has been successful. In total, 23 per cent. of the cases heard by the Panel have been successful either in whole or in part.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what grant assistance has been given to Harland and Wolff in Belfast since 1 January 2000 in respect of equipment purchased which has since been sold on to Swan Hunter. [143310]

Mr. Pearson: No grant assistance has been provided since 1 January 2000 in respect of surplus equipment sold by Harland and Wolff, to Swan Hunter, as part of ongoing restructuring activity.

Local Community Fund

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what electoral wards will receive grants from the Local Community Fund; and what projects will be supported in each. [143451]

Mr. Spellar: For 2003–04 the Local Community Fund has been allocated to communities using the Noble measure of multiple deprivation overlaid by the results of a mapping exercise carried out by the Community Foundation of Northern Ireland. A full list of areas benefiting from the Fund is shown in the following table. Allocation of the Fund has been calculated on a proportionality basis, using estimated populations for the list of selected areas.

It is intended that key activities, which the Fund will support, will involve capacity building and the strengthening of leadership at a neighbourhood level. Deployment of the Fund is based on a bottom up approach with local communities developing community ideas and identifying appropriate activities to be supported as a solution to tackling their problems against the allocated sums. Each area is currently working up initiatives/actions for support through the Fund. Some examples of the type of activity likely to be supported are refurbishment of community houses, youth intervention programmes and environmental improvement projects and it is hoped that activities will get on the ground early in the new year.

Northern Ireland Assembly

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the expected monthly running cost is of the Northern Ireland Assembly (a) while suspended and (b) when fully operational, broken down by (i) MLA salaries and office cost allowance costs, (ii) executive costs when the Assembly is operational and (iii) general administration costs. [142773]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The expected monthly running costs of the Northern Ireland Assembly while suspension continues are £1.93 million, comprising £0.83 million for MLA salaries, office cost allowance, travel and subsistence expenses and party allowances and £1.1 million for general administration. The monthly costs when the Assembly was last fully operational were £2.64 million, comprising 0.97 million for MLA salaries, office cost allowance, travel and subsistence expenses and party allowances and £1.67 million for executive and general administration costs. It is not possible to separate the executive costs of running Assembly business from the general administration costs.

Paramilitary Activity (Exiles)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people have been exiled from Northern Ireland by (a) Loyalist and (b) Republican paramilitary groups in each of the last five years; [142747]

(2) what his latest estimate is of the total number of people who have been exiled from Northern Ireland by paramilitary groups since 1973. [142748]

Angela Smith: There are no official figures on the number of people exiled from Northern Ireland as a result of paramilitary intimidation as not all incidents are reported. The needs of exiles are examined in detail in the Legacy Report, an independent needs analysis of victims of the Troubles living in Great Britain. One of the major contributors to this research was Maranatha, a Christian community which has considerable experience in this area. Maranatha estimates that around four people per month are exiled from Northern Ireland to Great Britain.

Police Fund

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Chief Constable of the Police Service of Northern Ireland in relation to the arrest of two members of staff of the Police Fund on 5 December 2003; and if he will make a statement. [143945]

Jane Kennedy: As the Chairman of the Northern Ireland Police Fund stated on 5 December 2003, he was made aware on the previous day of serious allegations, including financial irregularities, in respect of the Fund. Two members of staff were questioned by the police, although they were subsequently released without charge. I welcome the commitment of the Fund's Directors to provide continuity of care and services to the Fund's clients, as far as possible.

As there is an on-going police investigation, it would not be appropriate to comment further.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of possible breaches of confidentiality of the names and addresses of Royal Ulster Constabulary widows following the arrest of two members of staff of the Police Fund; and if he will make a statement. [143946]

Jane Kennedy: I refer the hon. Lady to the statements issued by the Fund Chairman on 5 December 2003. Copies of the statements have been placed in the Library.

Police Station (Belfast Airport)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what basis the decision to close the police station at Belfast International Airport was made; and if he will make a statement. [141726]

Jane Kennedy: While some functions are to transfer from the Police Station to the new Airport Control Centre, such as monitoring CCTV and managing operational communications, the Police Station itself remains a vital part of the security infrastructure at the airport and will not be closed.

Post-primary Education

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on reducing the number of disaffected pupils in post primary schools by 15 per cent. as set out in the Department of Education Business Plan 2003–04. [142210]

Jane Kennedy: The target is to achieve the reduction by 2006. At the end of the 2003–04 school year the baseline for persistent non-attendance and multiple suspensions will be determined and it is against this that progress will be measured. It will be November 2005 before the first report on progress is available.

School Enrolments

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the latest enrolment numbers available at schools and in pre-funded education are for 2002–03 in Northern Ireland. [142774]

Jane Kennedy: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
Children in Funded Places in Voluntary and Private Pre- school Education Centres	5,804
Nursery Schools	6,269
Nursery Classes in Primary Schools	7,823
Reception Pupils in Primary Schools	1,149
Reception Pupils in Preparatory Departments	31
Primary Schools (Year 1-Year 7)	165,179
Preparatory Departments (Year 1-Year 7)	2,620
Secondary Schools (Non Grammar)	92,645
Grammar Schools (Year 8-Year 14)	63,102
Special Schools	4,879
Hospital Schools	236
Independent Schools	948
All Schools and funded pre-school centres	350,685

Victims (Representation)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the interests of victims and survivors of the Northern Ireland Troubles from Great Britain are represented in the talks between the British and Irish Governments and the Northern Ireland political parties. [142750]

Angela Smith: The Joint Declaration of 6 May 2003 commits Government to work with the Irish Government, the political parties and victims and survivors to seek to establish what further practical steps can be taken to recognise and address the suffering of all victims, taking into account the state of readiness of the community as a whole to engage. The Government continues to work towards meeting these commitments and as part of this process I am currently engaged in a consultation process to develop the next generation of victims' policy. Included within this process are the findings of The Legacy Report, a recently completed needs analysis of victims of the Northern Ireland Troubles living in Great Britain. The report was commissioned by the Legacy Project, an initiative of the Tim Parry Jonathan Ball Trust which has been allocated Government funding of £250,000. The recommendations made in the report are now under consideration.

Victims Liaison Unit

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ask the Victims Liaison Unit to organise a conference to examine how best practice and experiences from Northern Ireland can be used in meeting the needs of victims and survivors of the Northern Ireland Troubles from Great Britain. [142751]

Angela Smith: The Legacy Report, an independent needs analysis of victims of the Northern Ireland Troubles living in Great Britain, makes a number of recommendations for Government across a range of its Departments. One of the recommendations is that the Victims Liaison Unit in the Northern Ireland Office should organise a conference to share best practice and experiences from Northern Ireland. This and other recommendations are currently under consideration.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Building Regulations

Llew Smith: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations he has received from the Association for Environment Conscious Building in respect of changes to the building regulations. [143509]

Mr. Raynsford: The Association is on the list of organisations consulted when changes are proposed to the Building Regulations in England and Wales, and most recently it has commented on the overall structure and aims of the current review of Part L of the Regulations, which deals with energy conservation.

Barker Report

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Barker report. [R] [144197]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister welcomes the report. Kate Barker and her team have done a thorough job in getting to grips with the issues of housing undersupply.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister believes the review complements the Communities Plan, by highlighting the need for additional housebuilding, and for a more responsive industry in high demand areas. The Barker report deepens our understanding of the constraints that must be overcome.

The report is right to emphasise that this is not just a matter of getting housing numbers up. We have to build sustainable communities, not just houses. For if we do not achieve this, we risk repeating the mistakes of the past, where residents are reluctant to see further development, and this reduces housebuilding further still.

The report says we need to deliver the socially optimal numbers, type and location of housing. That means carefully balancing different objectives and considerations—economic, social and environmental, which fits in well with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's overarching objectives.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister agrees that the planning system is not perfect. Reforms are currently before parliament in the Planning Bill. These, we believe will improve planning policy and process. We look forward to hearing what recommendations are produced in the final Barker report.

Finally, we welcome the analysis of the housebuilding industry, and agree that the industry seems to be in a low output equilibrium. We reinforce Kate Barker's conclusion that the industry could and should make better use of modern methods of construction.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what measures he will introduce to increase house building as recommended in the Barker report. [R] [144198]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister welcomes the research undertaken by the Barker Review, especially the figures for the additional housing required to fulfil particular aims. The review makes clear that it is not recommending a rate of housebuilding, however, and that it is up to Government to determine what the appropriate level is. It also makes clear that the country needs a housebuilding industry that is more responsive to prices.

The Planning Bill currently before Parliament already puts in place measures that the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister believes will deliver a more responsive industry and a higher level of housebuilding. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister also looks forward to seeing the recommendations in Kate Barker's final report in which she will present her policies. Only then will we be in a position to respond fully to any requirement for a higher level of housebuilding.

Brighton and Hove Albion

Norman Baker: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which directors of Brighton and Hove Albion football club (a) he has and (b) other Ministers in his Department have met since 1 January 2002; and if he will make a statement. [142431]

Yvette Cooper: Pursuant to my answer of 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 342W, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister met Derek Chapman, Managing Director of Adenstar Construction Group, when he opened Adenstar's new offices in Portslade, Hove on 13 May 2003. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, was not made aware until last week that Mr. Chapman was a Director of Brighton and Hove Albion Football Club.

Civil Servants (Secondment)

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether it is standard practice for civil servants from his Department who are seconded to other organisations to write a report to record their experiences and achievements during their secondment on their return from the secondment. [142389]

Yvette Cooper: The Office recognises the importance of setting objectives for each secondment and for evaluating the experiences and achievements of each secondee.

The standard terms and conditions covering outward secondments require the secondee to "provide a brief report on their work".

Reports are either verbal or written. Before secondees are posted within the Office on their return discussions are held to identify the skills and knowledge they have acquired during the secondment to ensure that the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister benefits from these.

Council Housing Lists

Mr. Steen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will take steps to allow parity of access to council housing lists between council officials and elected councillors. [143850]

Keith Hill: The Homelessness Act 2002 made changes to the legislation governing the allocation of accommodation by local authorities (Part 6 of the Housing Act 1996) which came into force on 31 January this year. As a result, local authorities can exclude persons the housing waiting list in only very limited circumstances: namely, if they are certain persons from abroad (who are ineligible for an allocation) or if the authority has determined that they have been guilty of unacceptable behaviour serious enough to make them unsuitable to be a tenant (who may be treated as ineligible).

Elected councillors are bound by the Local Authorities Model Code of Conduct (SI 2001 No. 3575). This does not restrict members' access to housing waiting lists, but does require them to register any interest that they have in land within the authority's area (including tenancies of council property). The Code also requires members to ensure that they do not use their position as a member improperly, to confer on or secure for themselves an advantage or disadvantage, or do anything that compromises the impartiality of those who work for the authority.

Council Tax

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what powers, in addition to existing age specific means-tested concessions on council tax, local or billing authorities have to offer discretionary council tax concessions to those over the age of 75. [143992]

Mr. Raynsford: The Local Government Act 2003 provides a power for local billing authorities to offer a locally defined council tax discount if they wish on an individual basis, or for a class of council tax payer. This new power came into force on 18 November 2003. More generally local authorities may also be able to use their "well being" power under section 2 of the Local Government Act 2000. It is for local authorities to decide how they use such discretionary powers.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on council tax bands for properties built after 1991. [143637]

Mr. Raynsford: For property built after 1991, council tax valuations are based on an estimate of the price the property would have fetched if it had existed and been sold on 1 April 1991.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what advice his Department gives to local councils on the banding for council tax purposes of homes built after 1991. [143638]

Mr. Raynsford: The Valuation Office Agency is responsible for the banding of homes for council tax purposes. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister therefore gives no advice to local councils on this matter.

Decent Homes Standard

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what impact he estimates the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October will have on the standard of housing in (a) South Norfolk and (b) Newton Abbot; [143744]

(2) how the Government will support the local authority in its bid to achieve the 2010 Decent Homes Standard if the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October is upheld and as a result South Norfolk's proposed transfer of houses to the South Norfolk Housing Partnership does not take place; [143745]

(3) how the Government will support the local authority in its bid to achieve the 2010 Decent Homes Standard if the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October is upheld and as a result Newton Abbot's proposed transfer of houses to the Teignbridge Housing Association does not take place; [143746]

(4) what impact he estimates the delay in the transfer of homes to the (a) South Norfolk Housing Partnership and (b) Teignbridge Housing Association will have on the local authority's short-to-medium term housing policy; [143747]

(5) what he estimates will be the delay to the transfer of housing stock to the (a) South Norfolk Housing Partnership and (b) Teignbridge Housing Association while the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October is considered. [143748]

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October on the standard of housing in (a) Bromsgrove, (b) Skipton, (c) Letchworth, (d) Maidstone and (e) Hereford, with particular reference to funds available to spend on housing stock; [144162]

(2) how the Government will support (a) Skipton, (b) Hereford, (c) Letchworth and (d) Bury St. Edmunds in their bids to achieve the 2010 Decent Homes Standard, following the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October; [144163]

(3) what assessment he has made of the impact of the delay in the transfer of homes to the (a) Bromsgrove District Housing Trust and (b) Maidstone Housing Trust on the local authority's short to medium term housing policy; [144164]

(4) what assessment he has made of the effect of the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October on (a) Skipton's, (b) Letchworth's, (c) Bury St. Edmunds' and (d) Hereford's ability to achieve the 2010 Decent Homes Standard; [144168]

(5) what he estimates will be the delay to the transfer of housing stock to the (a) Bromsgrove District Housing Trust and (b) Maidstone Housing Trust while the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October is considered. [144194]

Keith Hill: It will be for each local authority and registered social landlord to consider the implications on their local circumstances and in particular on their decent home delivery plan of the Inland Revenue's preliminary opinion. While there might be slight delays in any particular transfer it is unlikely this will impact on either the standard of housing or an authority's short-to-medium term housing policy.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the cost has been so far of the information campaign, Elected Regional Assembly: Your Say; what the total budget is; and what the cost for each of the three regions in which referendums are to be held has been so far. [143914]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) on 11 November 2003, Official Report, column 259W.

Departmental Spending

Norman Baker: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much his Department has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by his Department since 1997 has been; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by his Department through sales of works of art has been since 1997. [142357]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was created 29 May 2002. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has not spent any money purchasing works of art, and has sold none. As with previous Administrations, Government Departments are supplied Art work by the Government Art Collection (GAC) on a loan basis.

Deprivation

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the level of deprivation was in each local authority in England in each year since 1997. [143001]

Yvette Cooper: Since 1997, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and it's predecessor Department have published two Indices of Deprivation—the Index of Local Deprivation in 1998 and the Indices of Deprivation 2000. Tables containing the rankings for each local authority district in England for both years are available in the Libraries of the House.

These two Indices are not directly comparable. The methodology for measuring deprivation was completely changed in 2000 and the range of indicators were extended in 2000 from 12 to 33.

Devonport Regeneration Company

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what complaints he has received against the Devonport Regeneration Company from Devonport community activists; what steps he intends to take to investigate matters; and if he will make a statement. [142701]

Yvette Cooper: The Government Office for the South West (GOSW) has received a number of complaints about Devonport Regeneration Company and is working with the Company and Plymouth city council, the Company's accountable body, to address the issues raised.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of (a) the performance of the Devonport Regeneration Company and (b) its compliance with Government guidelines in staff employment and the allocation of funds; and if he will make a statement. [142703]

Yvette Cooper: All New Deal for Communities (NDC) programmes are subject to regular performance assessment by the relevant Government Office for the Region and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, which includes compliance with guidelines. The accountable body for each NDC is also required to carry out regular audits. The Government Office for the South West is working with Devonport Regeneration Company NDC and Plymouth city council, as the accountable body, to ensure improvements in the NDC's performance in a number of areas.

Ethnicity

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans his Department has to include a measure of the effect of ethnicity in indices of deprivation; and what assessment he has made of relevant methodologies. [143575]

Yvette Cooper: There is no direct measure of black and minority ethnic concentrations proposed for inclusion in the revised Indices of Deprivation 2000 because not all BMEs are deprived.

However the indicators proposed for inclusion in the revised Index do recognise the problems encountered by black and minority ethnic communities. For example, proposed housing indicators on homelessness, overcrowding and social and private housing in poor condition are all important issues for deprived BME communities. In terms of the Education, Skills and Training domain, indicators on school performance at Key Stages 2, 3 and 4 will identify areas where there are large numbers of children suffering educational deprivation. Similarly the indicator adult educational deprivation will be picked up through the proposed indicator on adults with 'no' or 'low' qualifications.

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the effect of a person's ethnicity on their access to public services within the responsibilities of his Department. [143578]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister published a Race Equality Scheme in May 2003. The scheme will monitor and assess policies and functions supporting public services, for which the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is responsible. The Race Equality Scheme is published on our website, and is in the process of being updated. The revised published document will be available in the Library of the House in due course.

Fire Authorities

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much each fire authority is expected to contribute towards Audit Commission costs for its evaluation of the recent pay agreement. [143658]

Mr. Raynsford: The Audit Commission has estimated the cost of the first phase of its verification of the local delivery of the recent pay and modernisation agreement will be £1 million and the second phase £0.9 million. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Local Government Association (LGA) are discussing how best to meet this cost.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made on the implications for Tri-Service Emergency operations of a move towards regional fire authorities. [143659]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government keep emergency public safety cover arrangements under constant review and will continue to do so in the light of any future fire authority organisational changes.

Green Belt

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans there are to allow building on the green belt. [R] [144199]

Keith Hill: The Government's planning policies on Green Belts are set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 2 (PPG2). These policies include a general presumption against inappropriate development in the Green Belt. Most new building is inappropriate development in the Green Belt and should not be approved, except in very special circumstances. In preparing development plans for their area and determining planning applications, local planning authorities must have regard to the policies in PPG2 wherever green belt land would be affected. In its action programme, "Sustainable Communities: building for the future", published by the Office of theDeputy Prime Minister in February 2003, the Government included a target for each region to maintain or increase the area of land currently designated as Green Belt in local plans.

Homelessness

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make it his policy that a housing applicant exiled from Northern Ireland because of intimidation should be accepted as homeless and entitled to an emergency payment. [142738]

Yvette Cooper: People fleeing violence or threat of violence in Northern Ireland and seeking homelessness assistance from a local housing authority in England would be treated on the same basis as any other applicant fleeing violence or a threat of violence likely to be carried out.

Under the homelessness legislation (Part 7 of the Housing Act 1996 as amended by the Homelessness Act 2002), local housing authorities must ensure that suitable accommodation is available for applicants who have become homeless through no fault of their own if they are eligible for assistance and fall within a priority need group (the main homelessness duty). Certain persons from abroad are ineligible for assistance. In deciding whether someone is homeless, authorities must consider whether it would be reasonable for someone to continue to occupy their current home. It would not be reasonable for someone to do so, if it was probable that continued occupation would lead to violence against the applicant, any member of his or her family or any other person who might reasonably be expected to live with the applicant.

The priority need groups include families with dependant children, households that include a pregnant woman; young people aged 16 and 17 (except those owed certain duties by social services); care leavers aged 18 to 20; people who are vulnerable as a result of fleeing their home because of violence; people who are vulnerable as a result of time spent in care, in custody or in the armed services and people who are vulnerable as a result of some other special reason.

Where an applicant is accepted as eligible for assistance, homeless through no fault of their own but not in priority need the housing authority must provide advice and assistance to help the applicant find accommodation for him or herself.

People coming from Northern Ireland would be able to apply to Jobcentre Plus for a Crisis Loan from the Social Fund. These loans are intended for applicants who are unable to meet their immediate short-term needs either in an emergency or as a consequence of a disaster.

The applicant does not have to be in receipt of any benefit, but the decision maker will generally take any income or capital that they have into account.

The need for help will generally be for a specific item or service or immediate living expenses for a short period, not normally exceeding 14 days.

Housing

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much money central government allocated to (a) London and (b) the London borough of Tower Hamlets to invest in social housing in each of the years from 1992 to 2005. [143851]

Mr. Raynsford: The following tables show the funds allocated to London and to the London borough of Tower Hamlets to invest in social housing in the years 1992–2005. In summary London has been allocated some £14.1 billion up until 2004–05 and London borough Tower Hamlets has received some £670 million up to 2004–05.

London	Total allocation
1991–92	661,268
1992–93	625,589
1993–94	669,081

Grand total	670.186

Note:

Please note that no figures were available for a full year-by-year breakdown for both EA and HAT within the specified time limits.

Legislation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation sponsored by the Department in 2002–03 was introduced to implement EU requirements. [141132]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister did not sponsor any primary or secondary legislation during the 2002–03 session that implemented EU requirements.

Local Authority Management Organisations

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the local authorities which have sought to set up Arms Length Management Organisations in 2003–04. [143944]

Keith Hill: The local authorities that have or are due to set up Arms Length Management Organisations (ALMOs) in 2003–04 to improve the condition and management of their housing stock are those for which was announced conditional funding on 28 July. These are: Barnet, Camden, Easington, Gateshead, Harrow, High Peak, Islington, Newcastle, Poole, Sheffield, Solihull, South Lakeland and Warrington. Bids from local authorities seeking to set up ALMOs in 2004–05 are due by 31 December 2003.

Local Government Funding

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will list the (a) Inner London boroughs, (b) Outer London boroughs and (c) Metropolitan districts who will have no increase in the level of grant for local authority service components, as defined in the Local Government Finance 2004–05 Revenue Support Grant Settlement, excluding the settlement for education; [143860]

(2) if he will list the level of grant change for all local authority service components as defined in the Local Government Finance 2004–05 Revenue Support Grant Settlement, excluding education, for West Sussex county council. [143865]

Mr. Raynsford: Formula grant distributed through the Local Government Finance settlement is not ring fenced for any purpose.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his policy is on resolving shortfalls in income between the level of grant allocated to local authorities and the actual cost of the provision of services. [142038]

Mr. Raynsford: Grant support to local authorities covers on average some 75 per cent. of their costs. The balance is funded through council tax. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister seeks to ensure that where new burdens are placed on councils by central government they are fully funded through the grant system.

Helen Jackson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) when he will finish his review of local government funding following the Audit Commission report; [143933]

(2) what options he is examining to address the fundamental flaws mentioned in the Audit Commission review of local government funding. [143972]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government's Balance of Funding Review, which I chair, is looking at how local government should be funded in future. It is taking evidence on a number of proposals for change identified in responses to the Review's public consultation. The Review is due to produce a final report of its work in summer 2004.

Projects (St. Helens)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which projects have been (a) wholly and (b) partly funded by his Department in St. Helens since 1997; when each project was announced; when it started or was expected to start; what funding was provided by (i) Government and (ii) a third party; what third party provided funding; what the target group of the project was; what the projected outcome of the project was; and what the name of the project was. [141270]

Yvette Cooper: Project support information is tabled as follows.

Project name	Period	Government funding	Other funding	Source of other funding	Target group	Projected outcomes
Single Regeneration Budget (SRB)[1] (round 1) St. Helen's Southern Corridor	1995–06 to 1999–2000	£4.5 million	Details not available	—	St. Helen's Town Centre	Comprehensive regeneration strategy building on: road links with M62, existing public private partnerships. Wide range of employment and other benefits to residents.
SRB (round 2) Newton 21 St. Helens	1996–07 to 2000–01	£14.08 million	Details not available	—	Newton-le-Willows	Intended to create a self sustaining community through a programme of economic, environmental, housing, training and education initiatives preparing residents for employment opportunities created by commercial development.
SRB (round 4) The Parr Partnership St. Helens	1998–09 to 2003–04	£5.25 million	£12.82 million	Other public funding and private sector leverage	Parr area of St. Helens	Addressing problems faced by Parr residents including health and living environments, the needs for skills and training, and improvements to social, transport and recreation facilities.
SRB[2] (round 5) St. Helens Count Me In	1999–2000 to 2003–04	£13.65 million	£52.5 million	Other public funding and private sector leverage	Former Coalfield Community of St. Helens	Major new centres of economic activity—stadium/leisure/conference centre; strategic site for employment; innovation centre to create new job opportunities. Environmental improvements. Capacity building, health initiatives and improved public transport links will address social inclusion.
Community Empowerment Fund	2001–02 to 2003–04	£390,000	n/a	n/a	St. Helens local authority area	To assist in establishing a Community Network to allow the community and voluntary sector to play a full and effective role in their Local Strategic Partnerships.

Community Learning Chest	2002–03 to 2003–04	£104,000	n/a	n/a	St. Helens local authority area	Aims to increase the capacity, skills and knowledge of local residents to engage in Neighbourhood Renewal.
Neighbourhood Renewal Fund[3]	2001–02 to 2003–04	£8.71 million	n/a	n/a	St. Helens local authority area	Aims to enable the local authority in collaboration with the Local Strategic Partnership to improve services, narrowing the gap between deprived areas and the rest of England.

[2] Scheme ends 2005–06.

[3] Funding allocated to 2005–06.

Small Businesses

Brian Cotter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether his Department uses a database of individual small businesses for consultation purposes. [142478]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister regularly consults the Small Business Service.

Travellers

Mr. Paice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what measures are taken to ensure that members of the traveller community occupying unauthorised sites pay council tax. [143923]

Mr. Raynsford: Council tax liability is based upon the identification of a "chargeable dwelling". Unauthorised sites are generally too transient to establish that a dwelling exists for the purposes of council tax. If, however, a caravan remains on private land for a period of at least six months, the listing officer may include an entry in the valuation list for council tax purposes. Council tax will then be collected by billing authority, based on the band in the list, by using their normal recovery procedures.

West Sussex County Council

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will give the percentage change in spending share for highways for West Sussex county council in 2003–04; and by how much this differs from the level of inflation. [143862]

Mr. Raynsford: In 2003–04, West Sussex County Council's Highway Maintenance Formula Spending Share (FSS) was £25,071,558. Formula Spending Shares were introduced in 2003–04 and are not directly comparable with Standard Spending Assessments. In order to provide a comparison, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister published Formula Spending Share Comparators. These are based on a control total that includes the additional resource equalisation amounts (comparable to 2003–04) but based on the 2002–03 formulae. The 2002–03 Highway Maintenance Formula Spending Share Comparator for West Sussex county council was £26,837,923. The percentage decrease in Highway Maintenance FSS for West Sussex county council was therefore 6.6 per cent. The October 2003 value of Retail Price Index Excluding Mortgages (RPIX)was 1.7 per cent.

Formula Spending Shares are neither grant nor the Government's estimate of how much an authority should spend on a particular service. West Sussex county council received a formula grant increase of 4.0 per cent. in 2003–04. It is up to each individual authority to set their budgets taking into account their local circumstances.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the percentage change in spending share for waste (EPCS) for West Sussex county council was in 2003–04; by how much this differs from the level of inflation; and if he will estimate what percentage of the change in spending share for waste (EPCS) would be spent on (a) implementing recycling targets and (b) increases in landfill taxes. [143863]

Mr. Raynsford: Waste disposal and waste collection are covered by the general Environmental, Protective and Cultural Services (EPCS) Formula Spending Share (FSS).

In 2003–04, West Sussex county council's EPCS FSS was £57,045,365. Formula Spending Shares were introduced in 2003–04 and are not directly comparable with Standard Spending Assessments. In order to provide a comparison, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister published Formula Spending Share Comparators. These are based on a control total that includes the additional resource equalisation amounts (comparable to 2003–04) but based on the 2002–03 formulae. The 2002–03 EPCS Formula Spending Share Comparator for West Sussex county council was £56,119,688. The percentage increase in EPCS FSS for West Sussex county council was therefore 1.6 per cent. The October 2003 value of RPIX was 1.7 per cent.

Formula Spending Shares are neither grant nor the Government's estimate of how much an authority should spend on a particular service. West Sussex county council received a formula grant increase of 4.0 per cent. in 2003–04. It is up to each individual authority to set their budgets taking into account their local circumstances.

HEALTH

"Valuing People"

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the targets for service improvements for adults with learning disabilities set out in the White Paper, Valuing People, to be achieved. [143502]

Dr. Ladyman: The White Paper, "Valuing People: A New Strategy for Learning Disability for the 21st Century" (Cm 5086), published in March 2001, sets out our proposals for improving services for people with learning disabilities, their families and carers. The White Paper said that it would take a minimum of five years to make the changes it described.

We have made good progress since "Valuing People" was published, with the basic framework for achieving change now in place:

The Learning Disability Task Force

Learning Disability Partnership Boards at local council level

The National Forum of People with Learning Disabilities

The Valuing People Support Team, headed by the National Director for Valuing People

A range of guidance, and plans developed by partnership boards to deliver change locally in areas such as person-centred planning, employment, and housing and support.

The Learning Disability Task Force monitors the progress of "Valuing People" and reports to the Government on this.

Our annual report on learning disability, "Making Change Happen" (HC 514), published in April 2003, described the progress made in implementing the "Valuing People" proposals; a copy was sent to all English hon. and right hon. Members. Our next annual report will describe developments since April.

Ambulance Equipment

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average life span of (a) ambulances and (b) defibrillator batteries is; and what measures ambulance trusts are required to put in place to ensure that there is an orderly process by which to replace obsolescent equipment. [143242]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The average life span of an ambulance is seven years for patient transport services and five years for accident and emergency ambulances.

Defibrillators are supplied with rechargeable batteries. Different battery technologies are used by different suppliers. The majority of suppliers suggest that the battery, if used and maintained correctly, will last between two to three years. This equates to an 'in use time' of in excess of 100 full power shocks (the full power rating differs between machines).

Community defibrillators—automatic external defibrillators (AEDs) which are currently in use in public places during this phase of the National Defibrillator Programme contain lithium batteries. The average life expectancy for this type of battery is five years, depending on the type of AED, the site it serves and the number of deployments.

It is for each national health service trust to maintain records and have systems in place that ensure this equipment is maintained and replaced at the appropriate times.

Ambulance Staff

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many assaults have been recorded on ambulance staff in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [142399]

Mr. Hutton: Recording details of incidents of assaults on staff is the responsibility of each individual national health service employing body.

The figures presently available refer to reported violent incidents in ambulance trusts as opposed to actual assaults on staff and include incidents of verbal abuse. These figures are shown in the table.

	Violent incidents
1998–99	1,641
2000–2001	3,882
2001–02	4,778
2002–03	5,412

The Counter Fraud and Security Management Service (CFSMS) was launched in April 2003, with a remit encompassing policy and operational responsibility for the management of security in the NHS. The CFSMS has introduced a national reporting system for recording physical assaults on staff and professionals working in the NHS with the ability to track cases and give accurate information on the level of assaults.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been convicted of assaulting ambulance staff in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what action is being taken to tackle violent crime against paramedics and other ambulance staff. [142400]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of successful prosecutions of individuals who assault staff and professionals in the national health service, including ambulance staff, has not been routinely collected through any central mechanism.

The Counter Fraud and Security Management Service (CFSMS) was launched in April 2003, with a remit encompassing policy and operational responsibility for the management of security in the NHS.

The CFSMS has introduced a national reporting system for recording incidents of physical assault. The system uses a legally based definition of assault, with the ability to track cases from start to finish, thus allowing for intervention where appropriate and necessary, in order to ensure the best possible outcome for the person assaulted. This system will be able to produce hard and accurate data about physical assaults as well as number of prosecutions.

The CFSMS has set up a Legal Protection Unit (LPU) to work with the police and Crown Prosecution Service to increase the number of prosecutions of persons who assault staff and professionals. The LPU will be providing health bodies with cost-effective advice on a wide range of sanctions, both civil and criminal, that can be taken against offenders.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what pay rises are planned for ambulance staff in the next 12 months. [142403]

Mr. Hutton: The proposed new pay system for all non-medical national health service employees, including ambulance staff, "Agenda for Change", has been negotiated over the past four years by NHS staff and employer representatives working in partnership. This includes a three-year pay deal that will give a 10 per cent., pay increase to all staff for the period 2003–04 to 2005–06.

From 1 April 2004, ambulance staff on national contracts will receive an uplift of 3.225 per cent., as part of this deal. From October 2004, when the new pay system is rolled out across the NHS, most ambulance staff are likely to receive further increases in pay on top of 3.225 per cent., but the impact on particular staff will vary depending on a range of factors, including the basic pay band to which their job matches and the amount of out-of-hours work they undertake.

Badgers (TB)

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the health implications for (a) ramblers and (b) their children of frequenting country areas in which infective material has been deposited by TB-infected badgers. [141991]

Mr. Bradshaw: I have been asked to reply.

No specific assessments has been made for ramblers and their children.

The threat to public health from bovine TB is low and the disease is treatable. Of the 40 or so cases now seen each year in Britain the majority are in people over 55 years of age. These are thought to have been infected before the introduction of widespread pasteurisation of milk. This figure has remained stable despite the increasing incidence of TB in cattle. The geographical distribution of human cases does not reflect the spread of bovine TB in the cattle population. Arrangements are in place with the Department of Health to investigate the potential links to human health, and monitor human cases of M. bovis.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143153]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, on 9 December 2003, Official Report, column 355W.

Blood Transfusions

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether virally inactivated fresh frozen plasma is available to the NHS for transfusions in respect of babies and young children born since 1 January 1996. [143749]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The decision taken to import fresh frozen plasma (FFP) from the United States for young babies and children born after 1 January 1996 will provide additional protection to the most vulnerable group who will not have been exposed to BSE through the food chain. The National Blood Authority (NBA) is currently involved in negotiating for supplies of FFP for this group of patients. This FFP will be virally inactivated, and its planned availability will be in the New Year. In addition, the NBA also implemented viral inactivation for UK FFP for this patient group in August 2002. Viral inactivation is designed to remove certain viruses that may be transmitted by transfusion.

Body Mass Index

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the adult population had a body mass index greater than 25 in (a) England and (b) each region in each year since 1990. [141582]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Figures available from the Health Survey for England have been placed in the Library. For those adult respondents with a valid height and weight measurement from which the body mass index could be calculated, it gives, for England, the percentage with a body mass index (BMI) over 25 by sex for the period 1991 to 2001 and by Government Office Region and sex for the period 1998 to 2001. Figures are not available for 1990. Figures prior to 1998 are not available by Government Office Region.

Breastfeeding

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish guidelines for primary care trusts on collection of statistics on breastfeeding. [142298]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 8 December 2003]: Guidelines for primary care trusts on the collection of statistics on breastfeeding initiation were made available to national health service staff on 28 November 2003 via the Department of Health's data collection website.

Cancer Survey

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the statistical tables analysing the national patient cancer survey to inform future surveys, commissioned by his Department and made available to the Commission for Health Improvement. [141580]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The analysis of the national cancer patient survey is expected to be complete by spring 2004. A copy of the analysis will be placed in the Library.

Choice and Plurality Policies

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether patients will be able to choose their general practitioner under the Choice and Plurality policies. [140624]

Mr. Hutton: Patients are already able to choose their general practitioner. "Building on the Best" (Cm 6079), published on 9 December 2003, commits us to extending the opportunities for patients to exercise this choice alongside the new general medical services contract which is now being implemented.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the application of his Choice and Plurality policies to patients suffering from mental ill health. [140626]

Mr. Hutton: On 9 December 2003, the Government published "Building on the Best: Choice, Responsiveness and Equity in the NHS". This strategy document sets out areas for priority action and those for further exploration including recommendations made by the mental health task group. A copy of the document in available in the Library.

Civil Servants (Disablement)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many senior civil servants in his Department are disabled, expressed (a) in actual terms and (b) as a percentage of WTE staff. [143065]

Ms Rosie Winterton: All staff are asked to volunteer information in our equal opportunities monitoring but they are under no compulsion to reply.

Of those that have made a declaration in returned Equal Opportunities monitoring forms there are seven disabled staff in the senior civil service in the Department of Health—excluding its agencies and arms length bodies. This represents 2.33 per cent. of whole-time equivalent staff which currently stands at 300.5.

Closed GP Lists

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of (a) general practitioners and (b) general practices in England have been operating closed lists each month since January 1990. [141060]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect this information. However we know that closed lists are restricting the exercise of patient choice in some areas. The new general medical services contract addresses this problem by including arrangements for primary care trusts to offer support to those practices which face the possibility of needing to close their patient lists.

Commission for Healthcare Audit and Inspection

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the appointment of Anna Walker as chief executive of the Commission for Healthcare Audit and Inspection was made by the NHS Appointments Commission. [141315]

Ms Rosie Winterton: No. The National Health Service Appointments Commission is not responsible for the appointment of executives. The appointment was made by the shadow Commission for Healthcare Audit and Inspection, in anticipation of paragraph 5(1) of Schedule 6 of the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Act 2003. As well as the shadow Chair and Commissioners, the selection panel included an independent panel member.

Community Hospitals

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds in community hospitals there were in each year since 1990. [141041]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not hold this information. However, the Community Hospitals Association carried out a survey, which was reported in the British Journal of General Practice (February 2001). This identified 471 community hospitals in the United Kingdom, containing 18,579 beds, and concluded there had not been a substantial reduction over the past 25 years.

Computer Games

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department has spent on developing computer games in each year since 1997, broken down by game. [142243]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Computer games commissioned by the Department of Health's Communications Directorate since 1997 are shown in the table.

Consultant Neurologists

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant neurologists are employed in the NHS. [142503]

Mr. Hutton: The number of consultant neurologists employed by the National Health Service was 407 as at June 2003.

Between September 1999 and June 2003, the number of consultant neurologists working in the NHS increased by 102, or 33 per cent.

Consultation with Businesses

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department uses a database of individual small businesses for consultation purposes. [142481]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department of Health does not use a central database of individual small businesses for consultation purposes. Individual client groups within the Department keep in touch with organisations operating within their policy responsibilities, as appropriate, but these bodies would rarely include small businesses. If a small business interest was identified, the Department would arrange for consultation through the small business service of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of regulations introduced by the Department have been subject to a consultation period of less than 12 weeks since the introduction of the Code of Practice on Consultations. [142489]

Ms Rosie Winterton: There is not always a direct correlation between Government consultations and individual regulations. For example, there would not be a consultation prior to certain statutory instruments setting up a new primary care trust or transferring property between national health service trusts.

The Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultation came into effect on 1 January 2001. In the period 1 January 2001 to 31 December 2002, the Department of Health has published 124 consultations covered by the Code, of which 18 were less than 12 weeks.

Delayed Discharges

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the Quarter 1 and Quarter 2 2003–04 delayed discharge statistics for England. [142066]

Dr. Ladyman: The latest figures on delayed discharge for Quarter 2, 2003–04 (September 2003) have been placed in the Library. The figures for Quarter 1 are available in the Library.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish statistics on the number of emergency readmissions to NHS hospitals of patients aged 75 and over in England, for each quarter since January, for which figures are available. [142067]

Dr. Ladyman: Monitoring information on readmissions within 28 days of discharge is collected for all ages only. Information is available at primary care trust and strategic health authority level. Information for Quarter 4, 2002–03 (January 2003 to March 2003), Quarter 1, 2003–04 (April 2003 to June 2003) and Quarter 2, 2003–04 (July 2003 to September 2003) has been placed in the Library.

Dentistry

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average cost of dental treatment per (a) adult and (b) child registered patient was in the last year for which figures are available. [141754]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The average costs of a course of dental treatment in the general dental service for adult and children in England for the financial year 2002–03 are shown in the table.

These costs are for payment made to the dentist for dental treatment and include the patient charges where applicable. Dentists also receive additional payments, unrelated to treatment provided, in recognition of the continuing care responsibility for registered patients. These payments contribute approximately 23 per cent. of dentists' gross earnings. Other additional payments, unrelated to treatment, contribute a further 10 per cent. of dentists gross earnings.

Dentists receive a capitation payment for each child registered. The average cost of dental treatment for children excludes treatments covered by capitation payments.

Departmental Employees

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many staff were employed in his Department in each of the last six years broken down by (a) headcount, (b) part-time and (c) whole-time equivalents; [143050]

(2) how many staff have (a) joined and (b) left his Department in each of the last six years, broken down by (a) headcount, (b) part-time and (c) whole-time equivalents. [143051]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested is available in the annual publication Civil Service Statistics which is published by the Cabinet Office. Copies of Civil Service Statistics 2002, which was published on 24 July 2003, and copies of Civil Service Statistics for the previous five years are available in the Library and at www.civil-service.gov.uk/statistics

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the reasons were for the transfer from the capital Departmental Expenditure Limit to the resource DEL of £318 million, as mentioned in the Winter Supplementary Estimates; and if he will make a statement. [142240]

Mr. Hutton: The transfer from capital is being used to support the Department's information management and technology programme, part of which will be accounted for as current expenditure and national health service spending by local primary care trusts and NHS trusts accounted for as current rather than capital expenditure.

Diabetes

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public funding will be allocated to treatment of diabetes in fiscal year 2004–05. [141155]

Ms Rosie Winterton: In his 2002 Budget announcement, my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced the largest sustained increase in funding of any five-year period in the history of the national health service. Over the years 2003–04 to 2007–08, these plans mean that expenditure on the NHS will increase on average by 7.4 per cent., a year over and above inflation. However in keeping with the philosophy of "Shifting the Balance of Power", primary care trusts are free to decide the allocation of resources locally.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investment is in place in diabetes management which will decrease the number of acute cases reaching hospital. [141156]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The diabetes national service framework standards, published in 2001, noted that the risk and severity of diabetic ketoacidosis can be reduced by the provision of guidance and advice to people with diabetes on how to manage changes in blood glucose control that occur during other illnesses and pointed out that episodes of hypoglycaemia can be managed in the community, either by the person with diabetes, a relative or carer, their general practitioner or by ambulance personnel.

"Improvement, Expansion and reform: the next three years", the planning and priorities framework for 2003–06, includes targets for diabetes services. One such target states the need for primary care trusts (PCTs) to update practice-based registers for people with diabetes by March 2006. This will help to ensure that they receive systematic treatment regimens and advice to help support them in managing their own condition, including acute episodes, more effectively.

In his 2002 Budget announcement, my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced the largest sustained increase in funding of any five-year period in the history of the national health service. Over the years 2003–04 to 2007–08, these plans mean that expenditure on the NHS will increase on average by 7.4 per cent., a year over and above inflation. However in keeping with the philosophy of "Shifting the Balance of Power", PCTs are free to decide the allocation of resources locally.

Doctor Recruitment

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what private agencies are used to recruit doctors from abroad; and what checks are put in place to ensure that these doctors meet the required standards. [140633]

Mr. Hutton: National health service trusts are responsible for their own recruitment. Trusts are strongly advised when recruiting internationally to use only those agencies that are compliant to the code of practice for NHS employers involved in the international recruitment of healthcare professionals, published in 2001. The list of compliant agencies can be found on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/international.recruitment/agencylist-nhs-ref.htm.

In order to practise as a doctor in the United Kingdom, a doctor must be registered with the General Medical Council (GMC) and satisfy the GMC that they have the acquired necessary knowledge, skills and experience.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it has been determined whether health professionals from (a) Hungary, (b) Slovakia and (c) Poland have the necessary qualifications to practise in this country after these countries join the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [140634]

Mr. Hutton: All acceding states are committed to ensuring that the qualifications they award to doctors, dentists, pharmacists, midwives and nurses responsible for general care who begin their training on or after the date of accession meet specified minimum requirements. Only those who meet these requirements will then benefit from automatic recognition throughout the European Union.

Practitioners from these states who are already qualified or who are currently in training must show that they either meet these requirements in full or have recent and substantial practice experience.

Drug Prescribing

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the increases in funding for

National Institute for Clinical Excellence approved drug prescribing made to each mental health trust in the current year. [141070]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Funding to meet recommendations of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has been included in the allocations notified to primary care trusts for the period 2003–04 to 2005–06. This funding is not separately identified.

Early Intervention Service

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the Department's definition of an Early Intervention Service is, as envisaged in the priorities and planning framework 2003–06. [141752]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The definition of an early intervention service, as envisaged in the priorities and planning framework 2003–06 is as follows:

Early intervention in psychosis services provide quick diagnosis of the first onset of a psychotic disorder and appropriate treatment including intensive support in the early years.

The service is for:

People aged between 14 and 35 with a first presentation of psychotic symptoms

People aged 14 to 35 during the first three years of psychotic illness

An early intervention service should be able to:

reduce the stigma associated with psychosis and improve professional and lay awareness of the symptoms of psychosis and the need for early assessment reduce the length of time young people remain undiagnosed and untreated develop meaningful engagement, provide evidence-based interventions and promote recovery during the early phase of illness.

East Sussex County Healthcare Trust

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the financial situation of the East Sussex County Healthcare Trust. [142393]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Surrey and Sussex Strategic Health Authority is aware of the challenging financial position faced by the East Sussex County Healthcare National Health Service Trust. Financial recovery plans have been developed and are currently being implemented.

I understand that the chief executive of the strategic health authority is currently arranging to meet local hon. Members to discuss the issues.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent by (a) East Sussex County Healthcare and (b) primary care trusts in England on (i) locum doctors and (ii) agency nursing in each of the last five years; and what these sums were as a percentage of total NHS staff costs. [142396]

Mr. Hutton: The figures shown in the table relate to all agency staff and other staff not directly employed by the national health service.

Electronic Recruitment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department's electronic recruitment project will start to operate; what sums have been invested in the system; what savings are expected in the NHS recruitment advertising budget; what the reach of the system will be in numerical terms; and whether the NHS will continue to use the print media and other forms of advertising after the electronic system is introduced. [141205]

Mr. Hutton: The NHS Careers jobs board pilot (www.nhs.uk/jobs) was launched on 1 December. The cost of the service will be £6 million over a five-year contract. Savings in advertising costs are estimated to be around £24 million a year once national rollout has been achieved. This estimate is based upon a 75 per cent. take-up over three years. The service will be voluntary and all savings will be directed to local patient care. The National Health Service will continue to use a wide range of media in order to attract the best candidates.

EU-required Legislation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation sponsored by his Department in 2002–03 was introduced to implement EU requirements. [141133]

Mr. Hutton: During 2002–03, the Department sponsored no primary legalisation to implement European Union measures and three per cent. of the 208 pieces of secondary legislation were of EU origin.

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it is the policy of his Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on Departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142805]

Ms Rosie Winterton: This Department's catering is supplied under contract. The contracting company's policy is to buy fair trade goods from its suppliers and has a commitment to support fair trade.

Foundation Hospitals/Trusts

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what written representations he has received from the British Medical Association (Scotland) on the subject of foundation hospitals. [142731]

Mr. Hutton: None.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what impact Government amendments on the governance of foundation trusts to the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Act 2003 will have on the validity of the consultation currently in progress. [142984]

Mr. Hutton: None. Section 6(5) of the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Act 2003 sets out that the Independent Regulator may not authorise an applicant as a national health service foundation trust unless satisfied that the applicant has sought the views of specified persons. The Department of Health guidance, issued to first wave applicants in August, is consistent with the requirements in the Act. The Secretary of State will only support applications where there is evidence that consultation has taken place in line with this guidance.

Health Boards Composition

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of board members of (a) primary care trusts and (b) hospital trusts are from ethnic minorities. [141030]

Ms Rosie Winterton: As at 1 December 2003, 10.4 per cent. of chairs and non-executives on the boards of primary care trusts and 10.2. per cent. of chairs and non-executives on national health service trust boards were black or from ethnic minorities.

Health Funding

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he gives to NHS trusts on the funding of treatments that will not be appraised by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. [143680]

\Ms Rosie Winterton: In August 1999, the Department issued Health Service Circular 1999/176, which asks national health service bodies to continue with local arrangements for the managed introduction of new technologies where guidance from the National Institute for Clinical Excellence is not available at the time the technology first becomes available. These arrangements should involve an assessment of all the available evidence.

Health Visiting

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on the role health visitor members will have on the Nursing and Midwifery Council if there is not (a) a statutory profession of health visiting and (b) a register of health visitors. [140629]

Mr. Hutton: Health visitors will be included in the third part of the Nursing and Midwifery Council register, which covers specialist community and public health nurses. The Nursing and Midwifery Order 2002, requires that each part of the register must have an equal number of registrant members on the Council. Their role will be to play a full part in the regulation of nurses and midwives, including health visitors.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who will be able to use the title health visitor after April 2004. [140466]

Mr. Hutton: When the new register opens in April 2004, the designated titles of the parts of the new register will be the protected titles. The Nursing and Midwifery Council does not propose to have a part of the new register with the designated title of health visitor. However, public protection will be assured because anyone proposing to work in a health visiting role must be registered on the specialist community public health nurse part of the register.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what risk assessment was undertaken by the Nursing and Midwifery Council with respect to public risk before removing statutory protection from the title registered health visitor. [140632]

Mr. Hutton: The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) has undertaken a series of public consultations on its proposals made under the Nursing and Midwifery Order 2001, including the structure and titles of the parts of the new register.

The Order recognised the expanding role of specialists in community and public health nursing, which includes health visiting. The NMC is proposing protected titles and parts of the register which reflect that expanding role.

Healthy Eating Schemes

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the basis is for the Government's policy that a potato is not a vegetable for the purposes of healthy eating schemes. [143093]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 9 December 2003]: Foods are classified according to the main nutrients they contribute to the diet. Potatoes provide mainly carbohydrate in the form of starch whereas foods classified as fruit and vegetables provide much less carbohydrate.

Heart Disease

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has met (a) milestones one to four for primary care management of heart failure and (b) milestones one to three for hospitals admitting patients for the management of heart failure in the national service framework for coronary heart disease. [142242]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The national health service has made good progress on the milestones for management of heart failure. We have made the improvement of care for patients with heart failure a major priority in the next phase of implementation of the coronary heart disease (CHD) national service framework (NSF). The importance of tackling service improvement in this area is reflected in the 2003–06 Priorities and Planning Framework targets for CHD:

> "Improve the management of patients with heart failure in line with the NICE Clinical Guideline due in 2003, and set local targets for the consequent reduction in patients admitted to hospital with a diagnosis of heart failure."

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence guideline was published in July this year and, combined with the new general medical services contract, will be a significant driver in improving services for heart failure patients and meeting the NSF standard.

HFEA

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what selection process the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority follow when appointing new members to the Authority. [141560]

Miss Melanie Johnson: All members of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority are appointed by the Secretary of State for Health, in consultation with the devolved administrations, in accordance with Schedule 1 (4) of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990, and in line with the Code of Practice of the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

High Security Infectious Diseases Unit

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) purpose and (b) cost is of the high security infectious diseases unit; and if he will make a statement. [142239]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are two high security infectious disease units in the United Kingdom, one in London at Coppett's Wood Hospital and one in Newcastle at the Newcastle General Hospital. They provide the UK's specialist facilities to care for patients suffering from rare, highly infectious and dangerous diseases such as Ebola and Lassa Fevers.

The Department provides funding for the running costs of the high security infectious disease units. This is currently £454,000 plus £47,000 (Scottish Executive contribution) per annum.

These units exist as a contingency arrangement. Sufficient medical, nursing and laboratory staff, who are routinely involved in the treatment, care and diagnosis of patients with infectious diseases, are on call for the medium and high security infectious disease units. This ensures that they maintain equipment and participate in regular training exercises so that the units remain in a state of readiness to admit and care for patients securely, in the event of need.

Hospices

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much money the NHS is spending in 2003–04 on hospice provision for (a) children and (b) adults; [141890]

(2) how many places in hospices are specifically designated for children. [141892]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information on national health service expenditure on hospice provision is not held centrally.

Children's hospices are funded from general NHS funding. As with adult hospices, this is a matter for local discussion and agreement. In addition, a central budget of £50 million per annum has been set up to meet the commitment in the NHS Cancer Plan to increase NHS funding for specialist palliative care, including hospices, by £50 million by 2004. The central budget is for all specialist palliative care services, including voluntary hospices. The level of funding for hospices, both from local allocation from the additional £50 million and from local resources, is a matter for local discussion and agreement.

Children's hospices have also received support from within the New Opportunities Fund, which is funding over 130 projects in England, with £48 million over three years, in support of initiatives for children with life threatening illnesses.

Information on the number of places in hospices designated for children is not collected centrally.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total current bed capacity is in hospices. [141891]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are approximately 2,043 specialist palliative care beds in the voluntary sector and 480 beds in the national health service in England (January 2003). This statistical information relating to the number of NHS/voluntary beds has been taken from Hospice Information, an independent organisation who are a resource for hospice and palliative care services.

Hospital Amalgamation

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with senior executives of London health authorities concerning hospital amalgamation. [143315]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health, has had no recent discussions with senior executives of London strategic health authorities concerning hospital amalgamation.

Identity Cards

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the introduction of compulsory identity cards. [142652]

Mr. Hutton: The introduction of such a scheme is a long-term undertaking and the Department will be involved in ongoing analysis of the benefits and costs. It is too early at present to assess fully the implications of the introduction of compulsory identity cards for the Department of Health.

Insulin

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for how long he estimates insulin manufacturers will continue to supply animal insulin for those who rely upon it. [142149]

Ms Rosie Winterton: There are two companies supplying animal insulin in the United Kingdom. The Department of Health is in regular contact with these companies and both have confirmed that they will continue to supply animal insulin for the foreseeable future.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the costing implications for the NHS of the Jaeger decision on working hours for junior doctors in the United Kingdom. [141577]

Mr. Hutton: The costs of implementing the Working Time Directive (WTD) are an integral part of modernising and improving national health services and of NHS planning. The NHS has been aware of the implications of implementing the WTD for doctors in training since 2000 and planning for it forms part of overall NHS planning. Strategic health authorities are currently ensuring that plans will achieve compliance by 2004.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the impact of the Jaeger decision on working hours for doctors on the ability of his Department to meet the deadline for implementation of the Working Time Directive by 2012; and what action his Department is taking to meet this deadline. [141578]

Mr. Hutton: The Jaeger judgment introduced unexpected case-law on compensatory rest. We are seeking legal advice on this issue and will issue guidance to the service shortly.

Implementation of the Working Time Directive (WTD) is an integral element of the national health service modernisation agenda. We have taken vigorous action to equip the NHS to meet the WTD deadline. NHS funding is expected to increase by an average of 7.4 per cent. in England over each of the next five years. This significant increase includes provision for the impact of the WTD. In addition, £46 million has been allocated over a three year period on top of baseline funding to cover costs associated with the set-up of new ways of working. The WTD pilot sites are testing solutions such as extended roles for non-medical staff, multi-disciplinary teams, networking between sites and consultants working differently. Lessons from the pilots are being disseminated through the WTD bulletin, "Calling Time". Priority is being given to hospitals facing WTD challenges when considering the allocation of 1,500 additional locally funded specialist registrar training opportunities available this year.

Legislation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pages of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation his Department put through Parliament in 2002–03. [141170]

Mr. Hutton: The Department of Health sponsored two Bills during the 2002–03 session, which made a total of 214 pages once enacted.

In the case of secondary legislation, the Department was responsible for the making of 208 General Statutory Instruments, which would have been considered by either the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments or the Select Committee on Statutory Instruments. These instruments made a total of 1,402 pages.

Manager Suspensions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the (a) number and (b) cost of suspensions of managers in the NHS in (i) England and (ii) each region in each of the last six years. [141107]

Mr. Hutton: No such data collection exercise is undertaken by the Department.

Maternity Services

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he would make a statement on the role midwives play in public health. [143419]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 11 December 2003]: Midwives play a key role in public health, as part of the multidisciplinary team providing pregnancy care. They are often the main pregnancy care provider and are in an ideal position to provide information and support in areas such as parenting, breastfeeding, smoking cessation and early detection and referral for women experiencing domestic violence or post natal depression.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of midwife-led maternity units. [143420]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 11 December 2003]: The national health service provides a variety of types of care for women during pregnancy and childbirth including care in midwife-led units for low risk births. The Government expects this variety to continue and does not support any one single model of maternity service provision in preference to all others. We advocate local decision making in designing appropriate, effective services within available resources. It is inevitable that the requirements of women will vary in different parts of the country and this is why it is so important that decisions about service provision are made at a local level and informed by the ethos of woman-centred care.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to expand the community-based role of midwives. [143421]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 11 December 2003]: Midwives currently provide an integrated service across primary and acute care sectors. Next year we shall be publishing the children's national service framework (NSF) which includes maternity services. The NSF will outline our plans for maternity services for the next 10 years and will examine the healthcare professionals needed to ensure that women's individual needs are met.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many midwives (a) took up and (b) resigned from posts in the NHS, in (i) England and (ii) each region in each year since 1997, broken down by strategic and area health authority; [142049]

(2) what proportion of midwife vacancies have remained vacant for more than three months in (a) England and (b) each region, in each year since 1997. [142051]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of midwives resigning from or taking up posts in the national health service is not collected centrally. The Department collects information on the number of midwives employed in the NHS as at 30 September each year. As at September 2002, there were 860 more midwives employed in the NHS than in 1997.

Information on the number of midwives employed in the NHS since 1997 and the rate of vacancies for midwives lasting three months or more since 1999, the first year the data were collected, by strategic health authority and Government Office for the Region has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list departmental targets relating to midwives and midwifery. [143799]

Mr. Hutton: There are no specific departmental targets relating to midwives or midwifery. Midwives are included in the NHS Plan, manifesto and "Delivering the NHS Plan" targets for increasing the number of nurses, midwives and health visitors employed in the national health service and the number of nurses and midwives entering training each year. The targets are for 20,000 more nurses, midwives and health visitors by 2004 over 1999 levels, 20,000 more by 2005 over 2000 levels, and 35,000 more by 2008 over 2001 levels respectively, and for 5,500 more nurses and midwives entering training each year by 2004 over 1999 levels.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Darlington, speaking at the Royal College of Midwives conference in May 2001, stated that we expect there to be an extra 2,000 midwives employed in the NHS by 2006 over 2000 levels. As at September 2002, there were 680 more midwives employed in the NHS than in 2000.

Men's Health

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce a chlamydia screening programme for men. [142065]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The chlamydia screening programme, which is being implemented nationally, actively promotes screening for both men and women. The programme is also targeting men that do not traditionally use health services by introducing screening at venues such as armed forces bases and male prisons. The Department of Health have also commissioned the Men's Health Forum to oversee the 'Men and Chlamydia Project'. This project will increase men's awareness of chlamydia, promote the adoption of safer sex practices and encourage men to seek screening and treatment where appropriate.

Mental Health

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting times were for child and adolescent mental health services in (a) England, (b) each region and (c) each strategic health authority in each of the last six years; and if he will make a statement. [141110]

Dr. Ladyman: The table shows the average waiting time for the first consultant out-patient appointment following general practitioner written referral to child and adolescent psychiatry.

The "Emerging Findings" of the children's national service framework (published April 2003) recognised the importance in a comprehensive child and adolescent mental health service of having agreed protocols in place to manage waiting lists and times according to need.

Department of Health form QM08R

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many graduate primary care mental health workers were employed by the NHS on the latest date for which figures are available. [142068]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The NHS Plan set out that 1,000 new graduate primary care mental health workers trained in brief therapy techniques of proven effectiveness will be employed by December 2004 to help general practitioners manage and treat common mental health problems in all age groups, including children. Revenue allocations to support the appointment of 1,000 such staff were made this financial year (2003–04). Central information on the number appointed began to be captured in September by the Durham Mapping Database at www.dur.ac.uk/service.mapping. However, the information is not yet complete.

Helen Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the incidence of people who are diagnosed as having a mental illness who also have a drug or alcohol dependency. [142769]

Ms Rosie Winterton: There has been no national assessment of the incidence of people who are diagnosed as having a mental illness who also have a drug dependency.

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) is responsible for compiling, analysing and disseminating information relating to the United Kingdom's economic, social and demographic statistics. Their report "Psychiatric morbidity among adults living in private households, 2000" is available on the website at www.statistics.gov.uk. Along with others due for publication, the report contains valuable information about the prevalence of mental disorders including those with problems relating to substance misuse amongst adults over the age of 16 in private households.

The Government's latest assessment of the numbers of people who have a mental illness and who also suffer from alcohol dependence is contained in the Interim Analytical Report published by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's strategy unit on 19 September 2003.

Helen Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that appropriate services are available locally for people who have been diagnosed as having a mental illness who also have a drug or alcohol dependency. [142771]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Government guidance on "Dual Diagnosis Good Practice Guide" sets out policy and good practice in the provision of mental health services for people with severe mental health problems who are also experiencing difficulties with drug and alcohol problems. It is aimed at all those who commission and provide mental health and substance misuse services and sets out a clear framework within which staff should continue to develop services in partnership with patients and their carers and families.

Helen Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that adequate information and support is available for carers of people who have been diagnosed as having a mental illness who also have a drug or alcohol dependency. [142772]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department of Health published guidance on "Developing services for carers and families of people with mental health illness" in November 2002. The guide is aimed at helping local mental health services develop support services for carers of people with mental health problems.

The Department also published "Dual Diagnosis Good Practice Guide" in May 2002. The guide sets out policy and good practice in the provision of mental health services for people with severe mental health problems who are also experiencing difficulties with any drug, including alcohol. It is aimed at all those who commission and provide mental health and substance misuse services and sets out a clear framework within which staff should continue to develop services in partnership with patients and their carers and families.

In addition, the Government's Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy for England is due to be published in the new year and will be implemented from 2004 in accordance with the timetable set out in the NHS Plan. This strategy will set the future direction for the development of alcohol treatment, which will encompass and be of relevance to carers as well.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what he attributes the rise in the number of children aged 0–14, treated by mental health trusts in West Sussex between 1996–97 and 2001–02. [143064]

Ms Rosie Winterton: This is a matter for Western Sussex Primary Care Trust.

I understand that the rise in children aged 0–14 treated by mental health trusts can be attributed to the creation of an Assertive Outreach team in 2001 which is based in one of the West Sussex Health and Social Care National Health Service Trust's two in-patient units.

The team works with children coming in to and leaving hospital. As a result, the number of children and young people the trust sees has increased.

MRSA

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the statistics for England for quarter 1 and quarter 2 of the 2003–04 on MRSA collated in the mandatory MRSA bacteraemia surveillance scheme; and if he will make a statement. [140860]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 3 December 2003]: Results for the first quarter of 2003–04 (April to June 2003) of the mandatory surveillance scheme are available in the Communicable Disease Report Weekly of 18 September 2003, available at www.hpa.org.uk/cdr/PDFfiles/2003/cdr3803.pdf. A total of 1,823 reports were received.

Data for the second quarter (July to September 2003) will be published shortly.

Nappies

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospital trusts have contractual arrangements with promoters of baby products which prevent them from making information about re-usable nappies available; and if he will make a statement. [143227]

Dr. Ladyman: I am not aware of any contractual arrangements preventing hospital trusts providing information about re-usable nappies. Parents are given two comprehensive manuals, "The Pregnancy Book" and "Birth to Five", also available at http://www.doh.gov.uk/birthtofive/. Both manuals give detailed information on disposable and reuseable nappies including information about nappy laundering services and contact details for voluntary groups which support the use of re-usable nappies. It is then up to parents or carers to choose which type of nappy to use.

National Patient Safety Agency

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the appointment of Lord Hunt of Kings Heath as chairman of the National Patient Safety Agency was made by the NHS Appointments Commission. [141314]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Yes, the appointment was made by the National Health Service Appointments Commission. The noble Lord Hunt of Kings Heath was interviewed by a panel, including an independent member, in accordance with the Code of Practice issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

National Service Framework for Renal Services

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what measures the forthcoming National Service Framework for Renal Services module on the effective delivery of dialysis will put in place to increase (a) the availability of and (b) equality of access to dialysis services; [143941]

(2) when he intends to publish the modules of the National Service Framework for Renal Services on the effective delivery of dialysis and transplantation; and what the timescale is for the development and publication of the modules on primary prevention and alternative models of care; [143942]

(3) how the forthcoming National Service Framework for Renal Services module on transplantation will incorporate the Transplant Framework for England, Saving Lives, Valuing Donors; [143979]

(4) what measures will be included in the the forthcoming National Service Framework for Renal Services specifically to increase care in the treatment and management of renal disease among ethnic minorities; [143980]

(5) whether he intends to publish an implementation plan alongside the National Service Framework for Renal Services, with specific timelines for implementation. [143981]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The national service framework (NSF) for renal services will be published shortly. It will set standards of care for people with renal failure to be achieved over the next 10 years. Details of how the standards can be implemented will be embraced in the document. The NSF will build upon other work, including the "National Service Framework for Diabetes and Saving Lives, Valuing Donors: a Transplant Framework for England". Work on the primary prevention and care towards the end of life modules is in development.

NHS Contractors

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the revenue recovered by the NHS for charging contractors for receiving tender documents in each of the last three years. [R] [144192]

Mr. Hutton: Neither the Department of Health nor national health service bodies charge contractors for receiving tender documents.

NHS Costs

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost of the national health service per head of population was in each year since 1996–97; and what the estimated cost is for each year from 2003–04 to 2005–06 in (a) each of the English regions and (b) Suffolk. [140701]

Mr. Hutton: Available information on the average amount of national health service spending per weighted head for the former English Regions and the Suffolk Health Authority area for 1996–97 to 2001–02 has been placed in the Library. This information is not available in the same format for 2002–03. Information on the average spending per weighted head for the strategic health authorities in 2002–03 has also been placed in the Library, although the Suffolk area cannot be separately identified after 2001–02, along with revenue allocations per weighted head for 2003–04 to 2005–06.

NHS Reservists

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS staff are deployed as reservists in Iraq. [141419]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect details centrally of the number of national health service staff deployed as reservists in Iraq. The number of NHS staff in Iraq with reservist commitments is dependent on operational circumstances.

NHS Secondees

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS employees in (a) medical and (b) non-medical posts are on secondment to developing countries. [141031]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect data on numbers of national health service employees in medical and non-medical posts currently on secondment to developing countries.

NHS Staff

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS staff, employed within the central function, are employed in (a) personnel, (b) finance, (c) information technology, (d) legal services, (e) library services, (f) health education and (g) general management support services. [141917]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected centrally. As at 30 September 2002, 85,706 people were employed in the National Health Service in central functions within the NHS infrastructure support staff group.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the timescale is for the introduction of a national incident reporting system for recording physical assaults on NHS staff. [141812]

Mr. Hutton: The Counter Fraud and Security Management Service (CFSMS) was launched in April 2003 with a remit encompassing policy and operational responsibility for the management of security in the national health service. The CFSMS has developed a national reporting system for recording incidents of physical assault. The system uses a legally based definition with the ability to track cases from report to conclusion and is designed to give hard and accurate information on both the nature and scale of assaults.

Secretary of State Directions were issued to health bodies in November 2003 to ensure that a consistent approach is taken with regards to the recording of physical and non-physical assaults. The national recording system for physical assaults came into operation on 8 December 2003.

Organ Transplants

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many organ transplants took place in (a) St. Helens and (b) Merseyside in (i) 2001, (ii) 2002 and (iii) 2003. [142912]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is shown in the table.

Main operation; transplant operations—Liverpool, St. Helen's and Knowsley Health Authorities—treatment count of finished consultant episodes NHS hospitals, 2000–01 to 2002–03

	St. Helen's and Knowsley	Liverpool
2000–01	0	82
2001–02	0	80
2002–03	0	78

Notes:

1. Finished Consultant Episode (FCE):

An FCE is defined as a period of admitted patient care under one consultant within one healthcare provider. Please note that the figures do not represent the number of patients, as a person may have more than one episode of care within the year.

2. Grossing:

Figures are grossed for both coverage and missing/invalid clinical data, except for 2001–02 and 2002–03 which are not yet adjusted for shortfalls.

3. Main operation:

The main operation is the first recorded operation in the HES data set, and is usually the most resource intensive procedure performed during the episode.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many primary care trusts have developed policies for osteoporosis in their health improvement programmes for older people; and if he will make a statement. [142993]

Dr. Ladyman: The national service framework for older people sets clear milestones for the planning and development of integrated falls services and provides the basis for a service model that will deliver improvements in prevention, care, treatment and rehabilitation. The most recent reports we have from strategic health authorities indicate that all but a few of the primary care trust local delivery plans include actions to achieve the 2005 milestone. We have collected no systematic information on what local plans cover.

Overnight Hospital Stays

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was to the NHS in (a) England and (b) each strategic health authority of overnight stays for patient visitors in NHS beds in each year since 1997. [141579]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect information relating to patient visitors.

Paediatricians

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many consultant paediatricians are currently employed in the NHS on a (a) part-time and (b) full-time basis; [143046]

(2) how many new consultant paediatricians have been appointed in each of the last six years; [143047]

(3) what the age profile is of consultant paediatricians currently working in the NHS. [143049]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect data on the number of newly appointed consultant paediatricians. Workforce data are collected through the annual Department of Health medical workforce census. The census is a snapshot of data as at 30 September in the appropriate year. The information in table 1 shows the net increases in the number of paediatric consultants since 1997.

Pain Management Services

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will take steps to ensure that regional variations in the provision of pain management services are tackled; [140676]

(2) what guidance is issued by strategic health authorities on the management of chronic pain in primary and secondary care; [140677]

(3) if he will ensure that the recommendations of the Clinical Standards Advisory Group report into pain services are fully implemented; [140679]

(4) if he will commission a review into provision of pain services, based upon the reforms undergone by the national health service since the Clinical Standards Advisory Group report in 2000; [140680]

(5) whether, in light of the Dr. Foster report, Adult Chronic Pain Management Services in the UK, he will reiterate the recommendations of the Clinical Services Advisory Group calling for closer links between local pain and primary care services; [140772]

(6) what action will be taken by his Department in the light of the Dr. Foster and Pain Society report, "Adult Chronic Pain Management Services in the UK". [140773]

Mr. Hutton: The Clinical Standards Advisory Group report showed that many national health service trusts had developed excellent services, but in some places more needed to be done to drive up standards. The report made recommendations to commissioners and trusts to review local provision of pain services, and how these might be improved. The Department welcomed the report, and expects commissioners and trusts to take these recommendations into account when they plan their service so that variations in provision is reduced and links with primary care trusts improved.

The Department encourages openness in the use of NHS performance information and welcomes independent scrutiny of this information, such as the Dr. Foster and Pain Society report on "Adult Chronic Pain Management Services in the UK". We are committed to making NHS performance information widely available to patients, carers and the public in an accessible and readily understandable format.

The Department has no plans to review the provision of pain services in the NHS or to reissue the Clinical Standards Advisory Group Report. The quality of the service should be monitored locally through the trust, primary care trust commissioners and strategic health authorities to ensure it is provided to meet the needs of the local population.

Patient Organisations

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the omission of (a) community health councils and (b) patient forums from the list of patient organisations who were sent the consultation document, "Choice, Responsiveness and Equity". [141936]

Mr. Hutton: The consultation document referred to was a resource pack developed specifically for strategic health authorities (SHAs) and voluntary organisations to support them in leading local consultations. It was not sent directly to community health councils (CHCs) as SHAs were responsible for involving CHCs in the local health community's contribution to the consultation. Patient and public involvement forums were not established until after the consultation period closed and therefore could not be consulted.

The resource document was openly available online or through the NHS Response Line.

Patients' Forums

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there was a fully contracted local network provider in place for each patients' forum on 2 December. [142440]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 8 December 2003]: Yes. On 2 December there was a fully contracted local network provider, now known as a forum support organisation, in place for each patients' forum.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time staff in local network providers were working exclusively on behalf of patients' forums on 2 December. [142442]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 8 December 2003]: It is not possible to give an absolute staffing figure as some staff are employed exclusively to support the patients' forums while others perform additional functions within their organisation. Since the contracts were awarded in September to the forum support organisations, which were formerly known as local network providers, the organisations have been working to recruit staff and build their capacity, ensuring sufficient support for patients' forums was in place from 1 December. Organisations which have been drawn from the not for profit and voluntary sector will continue to build their resources and to respond effectively to demands as they arise from the patients' forums.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of patients' forums were fully operational on 2 December; and if he will list those that were not. [142443]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 8 December 2003]: On 2 December, the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health (CPPIH) had received over 5,000 applications from members of the public volunteering to become members of the 572 patients' forums. At that point 505 forums, over 88 per cent., had the required minimum number of members. However, the position is changing daily as CPPIH continues to process the huge numbers of applicants and make final appointments.

Since 1 September, CPPIH has had in place regional centres and forum support organisations to provide information and guidance to members of the public who may wish to get involved or who have concerns that need addressing locally.

Training of forum members is currently underway and forums will be fully operational shortly. In the meantime all forums are contactable through the forum support organisations.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether each patients' forum had the required minimum of members on 2 December; and if he will list those that did not. [142444]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 8 December 2003]: On 2 December, the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health (CPPIH) had received over 5,000 applications from members of the public volunteering to become members of the 572 patients forums. At that point 505 forums had the required minimum number of members. However, the position is changing daily as CPPIH continues to process the huge numbers of applicants and make final appointments.

At 2 December, 100 per cent. targets had been reached in the East Midlands, the North East, North West and West Midlands. In the East of England the Commission required 44 appointments to fill specific forums; in Humberside 10 people; in the South East 61; London 17; and the South West 29.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the location of each patients' forum's associated local network provider and (b) those patients' forums for which no contracted local network provider was in place on 2 December. [142445]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 8 December 2003]: By 1 September, 140 contracts had been placed with 68 different local network providers (now known as forum support organisations), providing full national coverage of support for all forums as they come on stream from 1 December. Patients' forums have been set up for primary care trusts and national health service trusts and a list of these by forum support organisation is available from the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health.

Radiation Workers

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer from the Secretary of State for Defence on 1 December 2003, Official Report, column 39W, if he will make it his policy to (a) offer annual medical examinations to retired or ex-radiation workers and (b) to amend the guidelines to medical professionals to encourage them to note the profession of radiation workers in the medical notes of their families. [143034]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Ionising Radiation Regulations provides for an appointed doctor to undertake pre-employment health checks, reviews of health at least once a year while in work, and a review of health when the employment has ceased where this is necessary to protect the health of the individual.

Authoritative scientific and medical opinion is that health checks for all persons with past employment in the radiation industry would, in most cases, be both clinically inappropriate and a diversion of valuable clinical time away from patients with known needs; unless the person indicates symptoms of disease, or the general practitioner has been informed by the appointed doctor of the special circumstances leading to a possible need for continuing surveillance.

The content of patient records is essentially a matter for the clinical judgment of the practitioner, taking account of guidance from his or her professional body and all of the circumstances. However, in addition to a general obligation to render to patients all necessary and appropriate personal medical services—including offering to patients consultations and, where appropriate, physical examinations for the purposes of identifying, or reducing the risk of, disease or injury—general practitioners in the national health service are required to seek and record relevant information about patients' and patients' families medical history as well as social factors (including housing, employment, and family circumstances) that may affect patients' health.

Research Projects

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research projects will be conducted in response to the findings of the national consultation on how best to improve choice, responsiveness and equity in the national health service and social care; and if he will make a statement. [141694]

Mr. Hutton: On 9 December 2003 the Government published "Building on the Best: Choice, Responsiveness and Equity in the NHS". This strategy document sets out action on how we intend to expand choice for service users. A copy of the document in available in the Library. We are now considering with the national health service and partner organisations how further research might help inform future action.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the findings of the national consultation on how best to improve choice, responsiveness and equity in the national health service and social care; and if he will make a statement. [141696]

Mr. Hutton: On 9 December 2003, the Government published a strategy paper "Building on the Best; Choice, Responsiveness and Equity in the NHS", which draws out and develops the main themes that emerged from the Choice, Responsiveness and Equity consultation. The document broadly sets out how we will make NHS services more responsive to patients, by offering more choice across the spectrum of healthcare. A copy is available in the Library.

Sexual Health

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the reasons are for the exclusion of sexually transmitted infections from the new general practitioner contract; whether all GPs will (a) examine and (b) treat patients suffering from a sexually transmitted infection; and if he will make a statement. [140696]

Mr. Hutton: No disease is excluded under the new general medical services contract. All practices will provide essential services, which provide for the management and on-going treatment and care of patients who are ill, or believe themselves to be ill. Practices will continue to offer consultations and, where appropriate, physical examination for the purpose of identifying the need, if any, for treatment or further investigation.

Sperm Donors

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to change arrangements for anonymity of sperm donors; [142152]

(2) what plans he has to give a right to children produced as a result of donor insemination to know the identity of their parents. [142153]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This is a highly sensitive issue for the children born, their parents and their donors. Section 31 (5) of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 does not permit donors to be identified retrospectively. We are considering whether to ask Parliament to approve regulations to make identifying information about future donors available on request to donor-conceived people age 18 or older. The Government expect to make a decision on this shortly.

St. Helens Projects

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the capital projects (a) built and (b) being built in connection with health care provision in St. Helens in each year since 1997. [141476]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information is shown in the table.

Tamiflu

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria he is applying to the availability on prescription of Tamiflu as a treatment for influenza. [141313]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) recommends that Tamiflu should not be used for the treatment of influenza in children or adults unless they are considered to be 'at-risk'. Full details of the NICE guidance issued in February 2003 is available on the website www.nice.org.uk.

The Department is consulting on a proposal to enable other patients not considered to be 'at-risk' to receive Tamiflu from their doctor. The consultation is available at www.doh.gov.uk/tamifluconsultation.

Third Register Review

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the timetable is for the review of the third register; who will conduct the review; and when the report of the review will be published; [140627]

(2) if he will publish the terms of reference for the review of health visiting. [140628]

Mr. Hutton: The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) has now completed its consultation on the third part of the NMC register, where it is proposed that health visitors will be separately registered.

A separate review of the nursing, midwifery and health visiting contribution to children at risk is being undertaken by the Chief Nursing Officer (England) (CNO) in the light of the recent Green Paper, "Every Child Matters". The scope and process of the review are set out on the CNO web site at www.doh.gov.uk/cno/cnoreview.htm.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ministerial commitments to consult and respect the views of the profession were met during consideration on the review of the third register. [140630]

Mr. Hutton: The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) is required by the Nursing and Midwifery Order 2001 to consult representatives of any group of persons it considered appropriate including, as it sees fit, representatives of registrants or class of registrant, employers of registrants, users of the services of registrants and persons providing assessing or funding education or training for registrants or prospective registrants.

In exercising its function, the NMC must have proper regard to the interests of all registrants and prospective registrants and to any differing considerations applying to the professions and to groups within them.

I am satisfied that the NMC has consulted both appropriately and sufficiently in regard to this review.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when and by whom the health visiting profession was consulted regarding the third register; and what the outcome was of the consultation. [140631]

Mr. Hutton: The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) is an independent statutory body and is required to consult representatives of any group of persons it considers appropriate. Further specific information in respect of this is a matter for the NMC.

Top-up Fees

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on meeting charges for university variable top-up fees for student (a) nurses and (b) doctors; and if he will make a statement. [142063]

Mr. Hutton: For the first four years of the standard undergraduate medical course, and for year one of the shorter (4 year) graduate entry course, the Department for Education and Skills' (DfES) means tested arrangements currently apply, whereby students are required to contribute up to £1,125 for fees, depending on parents' or spouses' income.

For years five and six of the traditional medical undergraduate course, and years two to four of the graduate entry course, the Department of Health/ national health service-funded arrangements apply, in which students make no contribution to tuition fees; their liability being met from the Department of Health's multi-professional education and training levy and paid direct to higher education institutions by the NHS Student Grants Unit.

While the proposals contained in the DfES' White Paper, "The Future of Higher Education", include allowing universities to increase tuition fees, there is as yet no clear indication from the higher education sector of the scope or scale of any increased charges.

I have already made it clear that we will if necessary take measures to ensure that any increase in the level of tuition fees will not have an adverse impact on the supply, retention, diversity or quality of students undertaking medical training.

I also refer the hon. Member to the response I gave him on 11 December 2003, Official Report, column 600W.

University of Birmingham Hospital Trust

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what powers funds have been allocated to the University of Birmingham Hospital Trust to consult over its proposal to become an NHS Foundation Trust. [141559]

Mr. Hutton: Section 2 of the National Health Service Act 1977 gives the Secretary of State powers to do anything which is calculated to facilitate the discharge of his duty to continue the promotion of a comprehensive health service. Schedule 3, Paragraph 5 A of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 gives the Secretary of State the power to make a payment to a national health service trust. The payments were made under these powers.

Unwanted Pregnancies

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many unwanted pregnancies were terminated in each year since 1986 per 100,000 population. [141998]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information is contained in Table 1 of "Abortion Statistics, England and Wales, 2002" (ISBN 1 84182 782 7). Copies are available in the Library, or on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0323.htm.

Waiting Times

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have waited over 18 months for their operation. [141168]

Mr. Hutton: As at 30 September 2003, there were nine patients waiting over 18 months for elective inpatient admission in England.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the average waiting time for patients admitted to accident and emergency departments in hospitals in the St. Helens area to be admitted to a ward was in each year since 1992; [141479]

(2) what the average waiting time for patients admitted to accident and emergency departments in hospitals in the St. Helens area to see a doctor was in each year since 1992. [141480]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is not collected.

Information on the total time patients spend in accident and emergency departments from arrival to admission, transfer or discharge is collected each quarter from national health service trusts and is routinely published on the Department's website at http://www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/. Printed copies of the information are also available in the Library.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the cost to each NHS trust of the Working Time Directive. [141403]

Mr. Hutton: The Working Time Directive (WTD) is an integral part of modernising and improving services. The national health service has been aware of the implications of implementing the WTD for doctors in training since 2000, and planning for it forms part of overall NHS planning. Strategic health authorities are currently ensuring that plans will achieve compliance by 2004.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the change in the number of (a) doctors and (b) nurses needed in each NHS trust as a result of the implementation of the Working Time Directive. [141405]

Mr. Hutton: The Department's guidance to the national health service, HSC 2003/001 'Protecting Staff, Delivering Services—Implementing the European Working Time Directive for Doctors in Training', states that while the number of doctors on an individual rota will generally have to increase, trusts should find ways to reduce the number of resident rotas. A number of methods of doing so are being explored in the 20 Working Time Directive (WTD) pilots and several "Hospital at Night" pilots. Thus, the total staffing requirement does not increase substantially as a result of the WTD.

The NHS is currently developing action plans to achieve compliance with the WTD. As part of this, additional training opportunities will be made available for trusts where the need for a post is agreed by their strategic health authority. This agreement is subject to funding and educational approval being obtained.

It is for local organisations to determine the level of staff needed to implement the WTD and to deliver a quality service. However, the Department is supporting a programme of work to develop new ways of working for nurses and other professional staff.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment has been made of the cost to NHS trusts in (a) Chesham and Amersham and (b) Buckinghamshire of the Working Time Directive; [142523]

(2) what assessment has been made of the overtime needed in NHS trusts in (a) Chesham and Amersham and (b) Buckinghamshire arising from the implementation of the Working Time Directive. [142524]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Working Time Directive is an integral part of modernising and improving services. The national health service has been aware of the implications of implementing the Working Time Directive for doctors in training since 2000, and planning for it forms part of overall NHS planning.

Strategic health authorities are currently ensuring that plans will achieve compliance by 2004.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the change in the number of (a) doctors and (b) nurses needed in (i) Chesham and Amersham and (ii) Buckinghamshire as a result of the implementation of the Working Time Directive. [142525]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department's guidance to the national health service—Health Service Circular 2003/001 'Protecting Staff, Delivering Services—Implementing the European Working Time Directive for Doctors in Training' states that while the number of doctors on an individual rota will generally have to increase, trusts should find ways to reduce the number of resident rotas. A number of methods of doing so are being explored in the 20 Working Time Directive (WTD) pilots and several hospital at night pilots. Thus the total staffing requirement does not increase substantially as a result of the WTD.

Strategic health authorities are ensuring that trust plans will deliver compliance. Priority will be given to trusts facing WTD challenges in the allocation of an additional 1,500 locally funded specialist registrars training opportunities, subject to educational approval being obtained.

It is for local organisations to determine the level of staff needed to implement the WTD and to deliver a quality service. However, the Department is supporting a programme of work to develop new ways of working for nurses and other professional staff.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 16 December 2003

TRANSPORT

Leominster Station

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to provide disabled access to Leominster station. [144101]

Mr. McNulty: The SRA is considering how best to prioritise a programme of works to ensure stations and train services meet the accessibility requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act. The SRA will consult widely on draft criteria next year. The implementation of works will be subject to the availability of funding.

Heathrow Airport

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of whether the (a) M4 and the (b) M25 would need to expand to accommodate further traffic if a third runway was constructed at Heathrow airport. [144179]

Mr. McNulty: "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom: South East" consultation document covered the impact of a third runway at Heathrow airport on the M4 and the M25. These roads were also considered in the Thames Valley and Orbit multi-modal studies. The Secretary of State's response to those studies was published in July 2003.

The Government's conclusions on UK airport capacity, including surface access issues, have been set out in the White Paper, published today.

Ministerial Visits

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to visit the East Midlands to discuss the proposed expansion of East Midlands airport; [142927]

(2) when he next plans to visit Leicester. [142929]

Mr. McNulty: I visited East Midlands Airport in September and have discussed its future development with a number of interested parties. Our conclusions on the proposed development of the airport have been published today in the air transport White Paper. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to visit Leicester at present.

Parking Fines

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under what powers private operators of local authority car parks may pursue (a) civil action and (b) criminal action for unpaid fines levied on late and non-payers of car park charges. [143460]

Mr. Jamieson: Section 4(3) of the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 provides that the council of a county, district, London borough or the Common Council of the City of London may institute proceedings for offences under section 35A of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 (contravention of an order as to the use of a parking place). It is an established legal principle that a power delegated to one body may not be further delegated in the absence of express provision or necessary implication. This does not, however, prevent a local authority lawfully exercising its prosecution functions under section 4(3) with the assistance of service providers. In any given case, it is for the local authority to ensure that any arrangements it makes with a service provider are lawful and in accordance with its statutory functions.

Rail Services

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of the total public investment in transport in England and Wales was spent on railways in the last year for which figures are available. [142617]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The Department's provisional outturn expenditure for 2002–03 (as recorded in the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper 2002–03, Cm5884) was £8.8 billion. Of this, £2.8 billion or 32 per cent. was spent on railways. DfT's expenditure was across the UK as a whole, with additional funding for transport provided by the Scottish Executive and Welsh Assembly Government. It is not possible to provide a detailed breakdown of the proportion of spending specifically in England and Wales.

US Ships (Decommissioning)

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the earliest date is on which the Government expects the return to the United States of the US Navy ships moored in Hartlepool could safely begin, assuming normal weather conditions. [143763]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 15 December 2003]: A return passage would be permitted only when application is made; and detailed arrangements approved by the sending and receiving States.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Zimbabwe

14. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to enforce the sanctions regime in place against Zimbabwe. [144053]

Mr. Mullin: Her Majesty's Government continue to fully implement EU measures against Zimbabwe. These comprise an arms embargo, including for equipment that might be used for internal repression, and an assets freeze and travel ban on President Mugabe and 78 of his associates. The details are set out in the EU's Common Position 2002/145/CFSP, the EC Regulation 310/2002 and their subsequent amendments.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's future relationship with Zimbabwe following its departure from the Commonwealth. [144049]

Mr. Mullin: The UK maintains diplomatic relations with Zimbabwe. Following the Commonwealth decision to maintain Zimbabwe's suspension, some of Mugabe's supporters have called for the breaking of diplomatic relations with the UK and the expulsion of the British High Commission. This would only serve to damage further Zimbabwe's reputation and the Zimbabwean people.

Cameroon

18. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on human rights in Cameroon. [144058]

Mr. Mullin: We are concerned about Cameroon's record on human rights and regularly raise human rights issues with the Government of Cameroon. We are closely involved in the Commonwealth's work to assist the Government of Cameroon to meet the standards laid down in the Harare Declaration, and we provide bilateral assistance for relevant projects and initiatives.

Middle East

19. Ms Munn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what influence the United Kingdom is exerting on the United States to put pressure on the Israeli Government to stop the building of the wall. [144059]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister discussed the Middle East Peace Process with President Bush during his recent visit to London. In a joint statement on 20 November, they called on all parties to fulfil their obligations under the roadmap, and to refrain from steps which would prevent or prejudge the terms of a final settlement.

Additionally, the Foreign Secretary, FCO officials and I regularly discuss key elements of the Middle East Peace Process with the US Administration.

The Government recognises Israel's legitimate security concerns, and deplores the terrorist suicide bombings of Israeli civilians. But, we consider Israel's building of a wall, or fence, on occupied land to be unlawful, and have urged the Israeli government to reconsider the route of the fence.

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the US Administration to encourage them to exert pressure on the Israeli Government in relation to the building of the wall. [143810]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister discussed the middle east peace process with President Bush during the latter's recent visit -to London. In a joint statement on 20 November, they called on all parties to fulfil their obligations under the roadmap, and to refrain from steps which would prevent or prejudge the terms of a final settlement.

Additionally, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, my noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean and Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials regularly discuss key elements of the middle east peace process with the US Administration.

The Government recognise Israel's legitimate security concerns, and deplores the terrorist suicide bombings of Israeli civilians. But we consider Israel's building of a fence on occupied land to be unlawful, and have urged the Israeli government to reconsider the route of the fence.

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further consultation he has had with Palestinian and Israeli authorities on the impact of the security wall built by the Israelis. [144052]

Mr. Rammell: The Government continues to urge the Government of Israel to re-route the fence away from Palestinian areas. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary have made clear our concerns to the Israeli Prime Minister and Foreign Minister on a number of occasions. I raised the matter with the Israeli Foreign Minister during my visit to Israel on 30 September, and have since then discussed with the Israeli Ambassador and Israeli Minister for National Infrastructure.

We are in regular contact with the Palestinian Authority and NGOs on the ground.

Guantanamo Bay

20. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the use of the British Indian Ocean territory of Diego Garcia for the detention by the United States of terrorist suspects én route to Guantánamo Bay. [144060]

Mr. Rammell: Further to the written answer given on 11 September by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell), allegations that terror suspects are being, or have at any time been, detained in Diego Garcia are entirely without foundation.

Arctic Convoy Medal

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the award of the Russian Arctic Convoy medal to UK nationals. [144010]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer on 15 December 2003]: Government rules governing the acceptance of foreign awards by British Nationals preclude the acceptance of medals for services more than five years before consideration. In addition, the Defence of the Soviet Arctic Region Medal (DSARM) is a campaign medal and it was agreed at the end of the Second World War, by the then allied countries, not to exchange campaign medals. (The Atlantic Star is the British medal awarded for service in Atlantic Convoys.)

However, officials have been examining the possibility of an exception to the present rules to permit veterans to accept the DSARM should the Russian Government formally seek the Government's authority to award the medal to British Citizens. A decision on whether an exception can be made is expected shortly.

Bribery/Corruption

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many reports of possible cases of bribery or corruption abroad by UK (a) nationals and (b) companies have been referred to him by his Department's posts overseas since November 2001. [144014]

Mr. MacShane: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion (Mr. Thomas) on 28 October 2003, Official Report, column 181W.

The Anti-terrorism, Crime and Security Act was passed in November 2001 and entered into force in February 2002.

Burma

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international action he will propose to bring about democracy and human rights in Burma. [144326]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A number of countries including Burma, France, Germany and ASEAN members met on 15 December in Bangkok at the invitation of the Thai Government. We understand that Burma objected to Britain attending because we were strongly critical of the regime. The aim of the meeting was to see if there was a realistic prospect of a roadmap toward democracy and reconciliation.

We have regularly discussed Burma with our international partners, including what possible further measures we may take if the regime continues to thwart the democratic rights of the Burmese people. I hope to meet Thai Foreign Minister Surakiart Sathirathai on 18 December to discuss the 15 December meeting and how we can take matters forward. We will also continue to work with our EU partners through the UN, ILO and other international fora to put pressure on the Burmese regime to fully release Aung San Suu Kyi and her National League for Democracy colleagues and, together with the ethnic groups, begin a genuine dialogue leading to democratic change and national reconciliation.

Ethiopia/Eritrea

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to help resolve the dispute between Ethiopia and Eritrea. [144048]

Mr. Mullin: We take every opportunity to emphasise to both parties that the Boundary Commission's decision is final and binding; that both should avoid any return to war; and that dialogue is essential to address all the issues separating Ethiopia and Eritrea.

EU Constitution

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 245W, on the European Constitution, what assessment the Government have made of the impact of the territorial cohesion provisions in the draft EU Constitution Treaty on applications from peripheral and insular areas for regional European support and state aid; and what discussions his Department has held with local government representatives from Highland and Island councils on this subject. [143985]

Mr. MacShane: We do not expect the references to "territorial cohesion" to have any impact on existing arrangements for the structural funds and regional aid. The devolved administrations have throughout been closely associated with the development of government policy towards the IGC, and are also involved in the development of UK positions on structural funds and state aid.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects discussions on the European Constitution to reach a conclusion. [144332]

Mr. MacShane: In the light of the outcome of the meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference on 12–13 December, we expect discussions on the timetable of the negotiations to be taken forward by the future Irish presidency.

European Foreign Ministers (Combined Initiatives)

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is planning further combined initiatives with the Foreign Ministers of France and Germany. [144330]

Mr. MacShane: We have worked closely with the French and Germans on an informal basis on a range of issues of mutual interest (e.g. joint initiative on industrial competitiveness, consultations on European defence, co-ordinated foreign policy towards Iran) and will continue to do so as the need arises.

Mikhail Khodorkovsky

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department has had any representations relating to the detention of Mr.Mikhail Khodorkovsky; and whether this matter has been discussed with the (a) Russian Government and (b) the Russian Embassy. [143932]

Mr. Rammell: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office received one letter from a member of the House of Lords about the "Yukos affair", to which I have replied. Separately, I also discussed the issue with the Russian Ambassador last month, and the EU raised it with President Putin on 6 November during the recent EU-Russia summit.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will investigate claims of torture made against Saudi Arabia by the recently released British prisoner. [143811]

Mr. Mullin: Throughout the detention of the British men in Saudi Arabia, we raised with the Saudi authorities, at the highest levels, our concerns about the case, including the men's treatment and conditions in detention. We are in touch with the men and their lawyers and are doing what we properly can to assist them.

Singapore

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Singapore regarding the trading by Singapore-based companies with the military leadership in Burma; and if he will make a statement. [143713]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: While we have not made any representations to the Government of Singapore on this issue. We regularly discuss the problems of Burma with Asian countries, including Singapore. The UK has a long standing policy of not supporting trade with Burma.

This is well known to the international community. The EU Common Position is designed to target regime leaders and, as far as is possible, to avoid hurting the people of Burma. We would welcome a similar approach from Burma's neighbours.

United Nations

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's policy is on reforming UN structures; and if he will make a statement. [144322]

Mr. Rammell: The UK Government wish to see an efficient United Nations that can meet the challenges of the modern world and deliver the objectives established in the Millennium Declaration.

We want to see a stronger and revitalised general assembly. We strongly support the proposals of the GA President, Julian Hunte. We support the Secretary General's efforts to create a more effective secretariat with improved priority setting and financial management. We are encouraging efforts towards improving the wider UN system of Funds, Programmes and Specialised Agencies. We also look forward to the outcome of the high level panel set up by the Secretary General to review the way the UN deals with threats to international peace and security.

I also refer my hon. Friend to Command Paper CM5898, laid before the House in September, in which the UK's policy towards reform of the UN is described in more detail.

Visa Centres (India)

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit the new visa centres in India; and if he will make a statement on the operation of the new visa centres in India. [142936]

Mr. Mullin: I have no plans at present to make a visit to the new visa application centres in India. Full details of the service offered at the visa application centres can be found at UKvisas' website: www.ukvisas.gov.uk and the websites for our diplomatic posts in India.

WALES

Compulsory Identity Cards

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the implications of the introduction of compulsory identity cards for his Department. [141414]

Mr. Hain: Since the Wales Office does not provide services directly to the public, the implications of such a scheme would be minimal.

IRA Terrorism

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on which dates terrorist incidents ascribed to the IRA have taken place in Wales since 1973. [142752]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Home Secretary on 11 December 2003, Official Report, column 618.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how often he holds meetings with the First Minister of the National Assembly for Wales; what proportion of his working week is spent in the Wales Office; and if he will make a statement. [141189]

Mr. Hain: The First Minister and I meet virtually every Monday and routinely discuss by telephone matters of common interest. I begin my week at my office in Cardiff, travelling up later in the day to the Wales Office in Gwydyr House London to meet ministerial colleagues and Wales Office officials and others as necessary over the rest of the week.

TREASURY

Employment Statistics

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people (a) under 50, (b) between 50 and state pension age and (c) over state pension age were in employment, broken down by (i) region and (ii) gender, for each year since 1997; [143939]

(2) what the employment rate was for people (a) under 50, (b) between 50 and state pension age and (c) over state pension age, broken down by (i) region and (ii) gender, for each year since 1997. [143940]

John Healey: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Ms Sandra Gidley dated 16 December 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Questions about employment levels and rates.

The tables which have been placed in the Library give the information requested for the twelve month period ending August of each year from 1998 to 2003. These estimates are from the Labour Force Survey (LFS). As with any sample survey, estimates from the LFS are subject to sampling error.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost to the Exchequer was in tax receipts foregone of the 10 per cent. rate of corporation tax introduced in the 1999 Budget for the smallest companies, in each year since its introduction. [144655]

Dawn Primarolo: The 10 per cent. starting rate of corporation tax is estimated to have reduced the CT liability of small companies with accounting periods ending in 2000–01 and 2001–02 by £85 million and £140 million respectively. Estimates are not yet available of the impact of the starting rate on accounting periods ending in 2002–03.

Inland Revenue

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he estimates the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October will affect the welfare of tenants occupying the housing stock of Craven Housing Limited. [144634]

Keith Hill: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 15 December 2003.

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if the Government will compensate Bury St. Edmunds for the loss of funds available to the Haverbury Housing Partnership following the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October 2003; [144165]

(2) if the Government will compensate Letchworth for the loss of funds available to North Hertfordshire Homes Ltd. following the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October 2003; [144166]

(3) if the Government will compensate Skipton for the loss of funds available to Craven Housing Ltd. following the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October 2003; [144167]

(4) if the Government will compensate Hereford for the loss of funds available to Herefordshire Housing Ltd. that will result from the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October 2003. [144169]

Dawn Primarolo: On 24 October 2003, the Inland Revenue gave its preliminary view on the tax implications of contracts developed by a major accountancy firm. Discussions are continuing.

Pay-as-you-earn Schemes

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pay-as-you-earn schemes with one or two employees there were for companies, excluding unincorporated businesses, at April (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999. [144656]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is not available.

Pensions

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to the Government of increasing pensions in line with average wage increases. [143546]

Ruth Kelly: The costs of uprating retirement pension in line with earnings and these costs as a percentage of GDP are as follows:

	Gross Cost (£)	Gross Cost as (percentage)
2005–06	1.8	0.15
2010–11	6.3	0.54
2020–21	18.1	1.21
2030–31	38.1	1.99

As my right hon. friend the Chancellor said in his pre-Budget statement, UK public finances are sustainable in the long term. The UK is in a strong position relative to other countries to face the challenges ahead. To revert to the pre-1980 position, an earnings link with pensions would—by 2050—raise deficits by 3 per cent. a year just to cover this one item with the long-term sustainability of public finances undermined. The Government will proceed on a sustainable basis.

Notes

1. Figures are in 2003–04 price terms. Costs are in billions rounded to the nearest £100 million. Percentages are to the nearest two decimal places.

2. GDP figures are from HM Treasury Economic Assumptions provided 28 November 2003.

3. Gross costs are estimated by the Government Actuary's Department and are consistent with Budget 2003 assumptions.
4. The net costs take into account income related benefit offsets, which are calculated using the DWP policy simulation model.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the organisations which responded to the consultation document, "Simplifying the taxation of pensions: increasing choice and flexibility for all". [144663]

Ruth Kelly: The Government consulted widely on the proposals in last December's document "Simplifying the taxation of pensions: increasing choice and flexibility for all". The document elicited many responses, copies of which have been placed in the House of Commons Library. A summary of the responses can be found on the Inland Revenue website at www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/pensionschemes.

Project ASPIRE

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date board members of Inland Revenue first began planning for project ASPIRE or its antecedents; and who was responsible for project ASPIRE from that date up to 5 September 2002. [144692]

Dawn Primarolo: The planning for the ASPIRE project began in January 2001. John Yard, the Inland Revenue's Director of Business Services, took responsibility for this planning.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the purpose was of the market making exercise run by Inland Revenue as part of Project ASPIRE; what objectives were set to judge its success; and whether these objectives were achieved. [144693]

Dawn Primarolo: Competitions are generally accepted as the best way to deliver value for money. The market-making exercise was designed to encourage the major IT industry players to enter the ASPIRE competition. This objective was achieved and the competition has been genuinely tough and fair. In a written statement to the House on 11 December 2003 (column 107WS) I announced that the result of the competition was that Cap Gemini Ernst and Young had been named as the Inland Revenue's preferred supplier for the ASPIRE contract replacing the incumbent suppliers EDS and Accenture.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the potential suppliers who engaged in the market making exercise in support of project ASPIRE were made aware by Inland Revenue at the outset of the exercise of the identities of the other potential suppliers; whether the methodology adopted by Inland Revenue for the market making exercise provided for discussions between Inland Revenue and each of the potential suppliers engaging in the market making exercise; and whether the potential suppliers who responded to the Official Journal of the European Communities Notice placed by Inland Revenue with regard to Project ASPIRE were required in their submissions to provide indicative pricing information. [144694]

Dawn Primarolo: I cannot comment on whether the potential suppliers who engaged in the market making exercise were aware of the identities of the other potential suppliers. However, there were ongoing discussions between the Department and potential suppliers, at their request, throughout the market-making exercise. In addition, as I stated in my reply of 18 September, an open meeting was held for all interested suppliers on 7 March 2002, which was attended by 42 potential suppliers. The potential suppliers were not required to provide indicative pricing information in their response to the Official Journal of the European Communities notice that was placed by the Inland Revenue.

Redundant Workers

Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many redundant workers, found employment three months after their Labour Force Survey interview in each of the last six years in London, broken down by age group. [144171]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 15 December 2003]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Simon Hughes, dated 16 December 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Questions about unemployment in London boroughs. (143995)

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) compiles statistics of unemployment from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) following the internationally standard International Labour Organisation definition.

Table 1 gives estimates of unemployment levels and rates for each London borough for the twelve month period ending February of each year from 1997 to 2002. These estimates are from the LFS annual local area databases. As with any sample survey, estimates from the LFS are subject to sampling error. The LFS sample size is too small to give reliable estimates of youth unemployment and long term unemployment in nearly all of London boroughs.

ONS also compiles statistics of those claiming Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) for local areas. Table 2 gives, for each year since 1998, the average number and proportion of the working age population claiming JSA benefits. The number of these claiming for over 12 months and the numbers for those aged 18–24 years old are given in Tables 3 and 4. The data are not seasonally adjusted.

Tax Compliance

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise inform other Government Departments when a potential supplier has poor compliance in tax affairs. [143885]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise and the Inland Revenue only inform other Government Departments when a potential supplier has poor compliance in tax affairs in very exceptional circumstances. Such disclosures will only be made where statute permits, or otherwise, is justifiable on public interest grounds and will be confined to a general description of the potential supplier's compliance status and will not contain any detail.

Tax Rates

David Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps have been taken to ensure that high income earners pay the 40 per cent. income tax rate and not the standard one on the basis that a company is being run by them; and if he will make a statement. [144649]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made in this House on 10 December 2003 by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and to paragraph 5.91 of the Pre-Budget Report published the same day.

David Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals in the last three tax years were informed by the Inland Revenue that, though claiming to be eligible to pay the standard income tax rate because of running a company, the amount they would have to pay was 40 per cent.; and if he will make a statement. [144651]

Dawn Primarolo: None. There is no direct correlation between the amount of income tax an individual would pay on profits if self employed and the amount of income tax payable on salary and dividends received from a limited company.

Unemployment (London)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the rate of (a) unemployment, (b) long-term unemployment and (c) youth unemployment in each borough of London was in each of the last six years; and how many individuals this represented in each case. [143995]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 15 December 2003]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Simon Hughes, dated 16 December 2003:

As the National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about redundant workers. (144171)

The attached table gives estimates, from the Labour Force Survey, of the number of people resident in London who were made redundant in the three months prior to their LFS interview, and who were in employment again at the time of interview. These estimates are for the twelve month period ending August each year from 1998 to 2003. The LFS does not collect information about respondents' labour market status three months after their interview. As with any sample survey, estimates from the LFS are subject to sampling error.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Staff

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many days were lost to illness by employees in her Department in each of the last five years; [143880]

(2) how many days' sick leave per staff year were recorded in her Department in each of the last five years. [143881]

Ms Hewitt: The following table sets out the number of days lost due to sick absence in DTI HQ and the Small Business Service between 1 April 1998 and 31 March 2003.

Correspondence

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will reply to the letter of 15 October from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan regarding his constituent, Mr. A. Downie of Whitehills. [141743]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The delay in replying to the letter has been caused by the need for several Government departments and agencies to be consulted on preparing a response. I hope to be able to reply shortly.

Electricity Supplies

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans are in place to ensure that electricity supplies to homes and industry are maintained in the event of severe winter weather. [141854]

Mr. Timms: The market has responded to concerns about a possible shortfall by returning plant to service so that margins are at a similar level to the mid 1990s. However no system can be guaranteed and in the event of a possible power shortage there are a number of steps that NGT could take in order to maintain supplies and avoid rota cuts.

The Government has robust, and well rehearsed plans, for dealing with extreme circumstances that cannot be dealt with by NGT's normal operating arrangements.

Employment Regulations

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assessment she has made of the impact that the Employment Equality (Sexual Orientation) Regulations 2003 will have on businesses, with particular reference to the costs they will incur; and if she will make a statement; [143832]

(2) what assessment she has made of the impact that the Employment Equality (Religion or Belief) Regulations 2003 will have on businesses, with particular reference to the costs they will incur; and if she will make a statement. [143833]

Mr. Sutcliffe: We have set out the impact on business of the Employment Equality (sexual orientation or religion or belief regulations) regulations 2003 as part of the last consultation on our proposals in the document "Equality and Diversity: the way ahead". In the case of sexual orientation, quantifiable benefits outweigh the costs significantly throughout the period analysed. For religion or belief, the initial costs are outweighed by the future benefits. Copies of the consultation document have been placed in the Libraries of the House and are also available online at dti.gsi.gov.uk/er/equality.

Equal Treatment at Work Directive

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) which religions are to be protected under the Equal Treatment at Work Directive; [142842]

(2) if she will make a statement on which philosophical beliefs are to be protected by the Equal Treatment at Work Directive; and what guidance her Department has offered to companies on how to make an assessment of this. [142849]

Jacqui Smith: This aspect of the Employment Directive is implemented by the Employment Equality (Religion or Belief) Regulations 2003. The regulations define "religion or belief" as "any religion, religious belief, or similar philosophical belief". It will be for the courts and tribunals to determine, in accordance with the Directive's requirements, whether a religion or belief falls within this definition. However, guidance to help employers put the new legislation into effect is available from Acas, and on the website acas.org.uk. In addition the Acas national helpline (08457 47 47 47) is able to offer advice on employment related issues.

The reference to "religion" includes religions such as Christianity, Islam, Hinduism, Judaism, Buddhism, Sikhism, Rastafarianism, Baha'is, Zoroastrians and Jains. Branches or sects within a religion can be considered as a religion or religious belief, such as Catholics or Protestants within the Christian church.

The reference to "similar philosophical belief" includes philosophical belief which is similar to a religious belief in that it is a profound belief affecting a person's way of life, or perception of the world. The belief should occupy a place in the person's life parallel to that filled by the God or Gods of those holding a particular religious belief.

EU Funding (Yorkshire and Humber)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much EU regional funding has gone into the Yorkshire and Humber region in each of the last five years. [143304]

Jacqui Smith: The information is as follows:

Table of Expenditure in Yorkshire and the Humber

ERDF and ESF Spend by Year	£ million
1998	54.817
1999	92.188
2000	94.294
2001	135.953
2002	96.095
2003	116.665

Fusion Research Reactor

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the decision to site the next International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor fusion research reactor at Cadarache in France; and what financial commitment has been made by the United Kingdom in its support. [142450]

Ms Hewitt: I am pleased that it was possible to reach a unanimous decision on the European candidate site for ITER. The UK will not make a direct financial commitment to ITER; instead its financial participation will come from the EURATOM budget, which the UK contributes to through its annual payment into the EC budget.

Give as You Earn Scheme

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many and what percentage of staff in her Department contribute to a charity through the Give as You Earn scheme; how much money is donated to charity per month by staff in her Department through the scheme; and what steps she is taking to encourage greater participation in the scheme by staff in her Department. [143904]

Ms Hewitt: In my Department 404 staff, 4.43 per cent. of the workforce, contribute £7,390.17 per month to charity through the Give As You Earn scheme. We regularly encourage greater participation by publicising the scheme to staff. We are planning the next awareness campaign for the new year.

Learning and Skills Councils

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the answer of 4 December 2003, Official Report, column 168W, on Learning and Skills Councils, if she will discuss with the Deputy Prime Minister contacts which have taken place between officials of her Office and the North West Regional Development Agency concerning that RDA's aspirations to assume control of the responsibilities and funding of Learning and Skills Councils in that region. [143455]

Jacqui Smith: The North West Development Agency has assured the Learning and Skills Council that it is not looking to usurp its role, and my answer of 4 December makes the Government's position clear. The Deputy Prime Minister is aware of the situation.

Manufacturing Employment

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by how much employment in manufacturing has changed in each of the last six years; and if she will make a statement. [140951]

Ms Hewitt: The following table shows changes in manufacturing employment in each of the last six years.

Manufacturing employee jobs (1997 to 2003)

June	Employee jobs (000s)	Change on the previous year (per cent.)
1997	4,191	1.3
1998	4,209	0.4
1999	4,060	-3.5
2000	3,960	-2.5
2001	3,808	-3.8
2002	3,628	-4.7
2003	3,502	-3.5

Source:
Office for National Statistics, Department of Trade and Industry

A trend of declining manufacturing employment has been a feature of advanced economies over the last 30 years. Overall the UK labour market is performing well, with total employment rising by nearly 1.7 million since Spring 1997, and unemployment falling in every region.

We published the Government's Manufacturing Strategy in May 2002—the first such strategy for 30 years—which we developed in partnership with industry, trade unions and other stakeholders, following a summit meeting on the challenges facing manufacturing held in December 2001. The Manufacturing Strategy aims to create a high value manufacturing sector in the UK with a highly skilled well paid workforce, moving away from competing on the basis of low skill and low wages.

Internet/E-mail Traffic

Mr. Roger Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Government announcement that it is lawful, under EU Single Market regulations, for private sector internet and e-mail traffic to use public sector-installed IT infrastructure covered the use of wide band IT infrastructure installed in schools and libraries. [140574]

Mr. Timms: I am not certain which announcement the hon. Member is referring to. If he cares to write to me I will respond as soon as possible.

North West Regional Development Agency

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the per capita expenditure by the North West Regional Development Agency was in each of its five sub-regions in each year since its inception. [143557]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 11 December 2003]: The North West Development Agency does not allocate its funding by sub-region or on a per capita basis. Funding levels for the last three financial years were:

£ million

Financial Year	Allocation
2003–04	345
2002–03	306
2001–02	292

Nuclear Power

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons (a) THORP and (b) the Sellafield MOX plutonium fuels plant were excluded from consideration in the strategy review of BNFL on which she made her announcement on 11 December. [144573]

Mr. Timms: The 2001 Government White Paper "Managing the Nuclear Legacy—a strategy for action" stated that THORP and the Sellafield MOX plant at Sellafield would pass to the Nuclear Decommissioning Authority when it is established in April 2005. For this reason it was not appropriate for them to be considered as part of the review.

Post Office Closures

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what definition of deprivation is used for the half-mile rule applied to post office closures. [143036]

Mr. Timms: There is no such rule but, in England, post office branches in the 20 per cent. most deprived wards (as defined by the Indices of Multiple Deprivation 2000) and more than half a mile from the nearest alternative post office are, other than in exceptional circumstances, ring fenced from inclusion in closure proposals under the Urban Reinvention programme. In Scotland and Wales the relevant national indices are used.

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post offices in each constituency have remained open because of the half-mile rule. [143038]

Mr. Timms: There is no such rule, but, in deprived urban areas, post office branches which are more than half a mile from the nearest alternative post office are, except in exceptional circumstances, ring fenced from inclusion in closure proposals under the Urban Reinvention programme. Final decisions on any such closure proposals, after consideration of representations received during public consultation, are an operational matter for Post Office Ltd.

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post offices notified for closure under the Network Intervention Programme have (a) closed and (b) remained open after public consultation procedures, by constituency, in the last year. [143039]

Mr. Timms: Decisions on post office closure proposals under the urban reinvention programme following public consultation are an operational matter for Post Office Ltd. and I have asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) consultations on post office closures have taken place as part of the urban reinvention programme and (b) post offices have remained open following such consultation in each region in the United Kingdom. [143109]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 9 December 2003]: Decisions on post office closure proposals under the urban reinvention programme following public consultation are an operational matter for Post Office Ltd. and I have asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Postwatch

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what funding is made available to Postwatch from (a) Royal Mail and (b) her Department. [143040]

Mr. Timms: The Consumer Council of Postal Services (CCPS), also known as Postwatch is funded through grant in aid from the Department of Trade and Industry. A three-year budget envelope is agreed between Postwatch and the Department. The cost is recovered by the Exchequer from the licence fees paid by operators of postal services. Details of the Postwatch budget are set out in its Forward Work Programme; the 2004–05 Programme will be published shortly.

Renewable Energy (Greater London)

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was spent on renewable energy projects in Greater London in each of the last five years. [143834]

Mr. Timms: The Government are supporting a number of projects in London under photovoltaic (PV) domestic and large-scale field trials, the Major PV Demonstration Programme, and the Clear Skies scheme.

The Greater London Authority is leading the London partnership taking forward renewables planning facilitation and awareness raising work in London. DTI has allocated £233,000 funding for this work, total funding from all partners is £401,000, and spend so far is in the region of £85,000. The first phase of this work includes research into public and stakeholder attitudes. The GLA plans to publish a report on work so far, including proposals for encouraging renewable energy in London and ways of overcoming barriers, on 16 December.

The London partnership will take forward these recommendations in the next phase of its work, which will include a stakeholder consultation on a renewable energy target for London. This will inform the Mayor's energy strategy due to be published next year.

The Department does not gather information about investment by private companies in renewable energy projects.

Royal Mail

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much revenue has been lost by the Royal Mail Group Ltd. as a result of industrial action in each of the last five years. [142136]

Mr. Timms: The amount of revenue lost by Royal Mail as a result of industrial action is an operational matter that falls within the day-to-day responsibility of the Royal Mail Board. I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Sex Discrimination (Private Clubs)

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what policies she has towards sex discrimination against women in private clubs; what plans she has to change the law; and if she will make a statement. [143894]

Ms Hewitt: There can be no justification for treating women club members as second-class citizens. Sex discrimination in private clubs is contrary to this Government's principles of opportunity for all and we have supported attempts to legislate in this area in the past.

I cannot give any assurances about our future legislative plans, but we are keeping the matter of sex discrimination and private clubs under review.

Trading Standards

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether a local authority trading standards officer is permitted to inform members of the public that a complaint has been made against a company. [143450]

Mr. Sutcliffe: It would be for the individual Local Authority to decide whether they wish to pursue a policy of informing members of the public of businesses that have been the subject of a complaint.

Any such policy would be subject to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1998 regarding the disclosure of personal information in relation to individuals.

US Steel Tariffs

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action has been taken by her Department to prepare the UK steel industry for the lifting of US steel tariffs. [142854]

Ms Hewitt: My Department is in regular contact with the UK steel industry and its stakeholders, on this and other issues. We have used these contacts to keep them informed of developments in the EU's WTO case against the US.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her Department's estimate is of the cost to the UK steel industry of the United States' tariffs on imported steel. [142855]

Ms Hewitt: UK steel exports to the US fell by 14 per cent. in 2002 compared with the figure for 2001. The negative consequences of the US decision for the UK steel industry were reduced by our success in securing exclusions for UK products from the US safeguard measure. At the point when the safeguard was lifted, 74 per cent. of UK steel exports to the US were free of safeguard tariffs. The Government also supported the EU steel safeguard, which prevented any surge into the EU of steel from third countries diverted from the US market.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Places of Worship

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list beneficiaries of the listed places of worship grant scheme. [143213]

Mr. Caborn: To date, 3,953 listed places of worship throughout the United Kingdom have received grant payments under the Listed Places of Worship Grant Scheme. A list of all recipients of payments could be produced only at disproportionate cost. This scheme returns in grant aid the difference between the amount of Value Added Tax paid on eligible repairs and maintenance and a lower 5 per cent. rate. Listed places of worship of all religions are eligible to claim under the scheme.

Pleasure Piers

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps her Department takes to encourage non-departmental public bodies to take into account principles of sustainable development in allocating funding for pleasure piers; what guidance has been issued; and what reference it contains to timber. [144249]

Estelle Morris: Applications to allocate funding for pleasure piers would not be addressed to my Department directly. Should the application be addressed to one of the 15 bodies which distribute lottery funding, the policy directions DCMS issue to Lottery Distributors ask them to take into account 'the need to further the objective of sustainable development'. Guidance to non-departmental public bodies forms part of DCMS's sustainable development strategy, which will be published in January. The strategy also contains a specific reference to our commitment that all timber used in construction and repair work should come from fully certified sources.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Horse Transportation

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with other EU Ministers about the international transportation of horses; and if she will make a statement. [141938]

Alun Michael: The international transportation of horses is being considered as a part of the European Commission's proposal to update and improve the current EU rules on the welfare of animals during transport. This review has the potential to improve significantly the way many horses are transported into and within the EU. We are also taking the opportunity of this review to consider the best way to protect British equines. This is a matter that we will raise with other EU Ministers in the course of normal business and in particular when the proposals are presented to the Agriculture Council.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the organisations which she has consulted about the welfare of horses during transport. [143712]

Alun Michael: We consulted 50 animal welfare and trade organisations, and almost 800 transporters who hold specific authorisations to transport animals, on the European Commission's proposals to update and replace the current directive on the welfare of animals during transport. In addition, further discussions, on horse transport and related issues, are taking place with the British Horse Industry Confederation and representatives of the British Horse Society, the International League for the Protection of Horses, the National Equine Welfare Council, the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the World Society for the Protection of Animals.

Art Acquisition

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much her Department has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by her Department since 1997 was; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by her Department through sales of its works of art has been since 1997. [142367]

Alun Michael: No works of art have been purchased by Defra (or MAFF) since 1997.

No works of art have been sold by Defra (or MAFF) since 1997.

Badgers

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of whether perturbation in badger populations can be eliminated or substantially reduced by improved badger culling programme design and execution. [141384]

Mr. Bradshaw: No such assessment has been made.

Bovine TB

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what proportion of TB lesions found in cows subject to post-mortem examination for TB were considered to be of a type which would have rendered the cattle in which they were found capable of transmitting bovine TB to another bovine animal in England in the past 10 years; [141089]

(2) where the main TB lesions have been found on those cows which have been subject to post-mortem examinations for TB by or on behalf of her Department, in England in the past 10 years; [141389]

(3) what inferences have been drawn from the sites of TB lesions found on those cows which have been subject to post-mortem examination for TB by or on behalf of her Department, in England, in the past 10 years, as to the routes of transmission. [141392]

Mr. Bradshaw: The vast majority of lesions found in reactors to the TB skin test and in cases disclosed in the slaughterhouse are found in the lymph nodes of the throat and lungs (i.e. retropharyngeal, bronchial and mediastinal nodes).

Any bovine animals infected with the causative agent for bovine tuberculosis (Mycobacterium bovis) becomes potentially infectious for other animals after a period of latency. By the time shedding begins, the animal may or may not have developed visible lesions.

The routes of transmission in field conditions are not fully understood but the distribution of the lesions strongly suggest that the respiratory and oro-pharyngeal routes are the most common.

Reactors to the tuberculin test and confirmed slaughterhouse cases are considered to be infected and infectious. The testing regime applied to the remainder of the herd after removal of the reactors takes account of this.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the implications are for the UK beef and dairy industries should the UK lose its Organisation International des Epizooties TB-free status. [142000]

Mr. Bradshaw: The United Kingdom does not satisfy the requirements of the OIE or EU to be regarded as TB-free.

Article 2.3.3.11. of the OIE Terrestrial Code states that international trade in beef requires the:

> "presentation of an international veterinary certificate attesting that the entire consignment of meat comes from animals which have been subjected to ante-mortem and post-mortem inspections for bovine tuberculosis with favourable results".

Thus, beef can be traded provided the Meat Hygiene Service has passed the meat as fit for human consumption.

In the case of dairy products, the OIE does not provide recommendations for the international trade in milk to protect against TB.

Departmental Costs

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the (a) running costs of and (b) number of staff in the Department and its predecessors were in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2002. [144176]

Alun Michael: The information requested can be found in the annual Departmental Reports. In particular, Annex 7 of the 2000 MAFF Report for 1997 running cost statistics (CM 4612), Table 6 of the 2003 Defra Report (CM 5919) for staff numbers in both years, and Table 5 of the 2003 Defra Report for administrative costs in 2002. Copies of these Reports are in the Library of the House.

Employment

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many UK nationals were employed in (a) horticulture and (b) fruit farming in each year since 1997. [143920]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 15 December 2003]: The following figures show the total labour force on holdings in England where horticulture is the predominant activity (this includes specialist horticulture, specialist glass and specialist fruit). The June Agricultural Census does not record nationality, only number of people working on holdings.

Total labour force

	(a) Total labour force on horticulture holdings (excludes specialist fruit)	(b) Total labour force on specialist fruit holdings
1997	35,237	8,084
1998	36,826	8,528
1999	38,262	7,740
2000	35,463	8,639
2001	35,993	9,120
2002	34,605	8,988

Notes:

1. Figures for the other UK countries fall under the jurisdiction of the devolved authorities.
2. Figures prior to 2000 show main holdings only. From 2000 onwards all holdings are included.
3. Due to a register improvement exercise in 2001 labour figures prior to this are not directly comparable with later results.

Farmed Cod

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much food, by weight, is required to produce one kilo of marketable farmed cod; how much raw marine resource, by weight, is required to make one kilo of food; where that food is sourced from; and what the content of that food is. [143013]

Mr. Bradshaw: This Department does not collect data on feed usage and composition from the limited number of enterprises engaged in cod farming in the UK. However, we estimate that between 1.2kg and 1.4kg of feed is needed to produce 1kg of farmed cod of a marketable size.

We do not have information on the weight of the raw marine resource used in feed for farmed cod. The quantity involved will vary depending on the proportion of fishmeal used in the different grades of dry fish feed produced for cod at various stages of growth. Cod, like other farmed piscivorous species are unlikely to consume more natural marine resources through feed than their wild counterparts would consume in the natural environment.

The fish used for aquaculture feed are generally small, bony pelagic species sourced from non food grade fisheries, usually off the coasts of Peru and Chile, and in the North Atlantic, North Sea and Baltic Sea.

We understand that feed for farmed cod includes protein and oils derived from marine sources, carbohydrate, starch, minerals and vitamins.

Fisheries

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether active acoustic deterrents will be made compulsory in all static net fisheries; and if she will make a statement. [143539]

Mr. Bradshaw: The UK Small Cetacean Bycatch Strategy published in March 2003 recommended that it should be a legal requirement for pingers to be used in specific set net fisheries in the North Sea and the Channel to reduce bycatch of harbour porpoises. I will be making an announcement early in the New Year on the results of consultation on the UK strategy following discussion with the Devolved Administrations.

Since the publication of this strategy, the European Commission has produced proposals for the reduction of cetacean bycatch in EU waters. These proposals include the mandatory use of pingers in set net fisheries in the North Sea and the Channel. Discussions on this regulation are still at an early stage.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will undertake to assist fishing businesses with the costs of purchasing and maintaining compulsory active acoustic deterrents on their gear; and if she will make a statement. [143581]

Mr. Bradshaw: The UK Small Cetacean Bycatch Strategy published in March 2003 referred to funding available under the EU FIFO structural programme to encourage fishermen to adopt more selective fishing methods. This could provide part of the costs required to alter fishing practices to reduce cetacean bycatch, such as the purchase of active acoustic deterrents. I will be making an announcement early in the New Year on the results of consultation on the UK strategy following discussion with the Devolved Administrations.

Hired Fishermen

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what compensation payments have been made to hired fishermen since the Fisheries Council in December 2002. [143949]

Mr. Bradshaw: Neither this Department nor the Scottish Executive Environment and Rural Affairs Department have made any payments to hired fishermen since last December's Council.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what penalties apply to farmers who supply incorrect details on their application forms for the Integrated Administration and Control System. [143591]

Alun Michael: Penalties apply to farmers who have claimed a greater area or a larger number of animals than that determined. These penalties are graduated in severity depending on the level of discrepancy found. If the discrepancy is severe, this may lead to a loss of entitlement to aid for the current scheme year and once again in the following three years.

Regional Producers (Wiltshire) Ltd.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the public objectives of Regional Producers (Wiltshire) Ltd. as reported to the South West Regional Development Agency. [143598]

Alun Michael: The South West Regional Development Agency tell us they have not received any formal public objections to the support for Regional Producers (Wiltshire) Ltd. However, the Government Office for the South West has received representations from a number of shareholders in Regional Producers (Wiltshire) Ltd. that the organisation should not at present be considered for further public support. Copies of these also have been passed to the South West Regional Development Agency, Business Links for Berkshire and Wiltshire and to Defra.

Renewable Energy

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether UK companies met the Government's targets for the purchase of renewable energy in 2002. [142024]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

Under the terms of the Renewables Obligation Order (2002), and the Renewables Obligation (Scotland) Order 2002, licensed electricity suppliers in Great Britain are required to supply specific proportions of their electricity sales from renewable sourced electricity—with the aim of reaching the target of 10.4 per cent. in the period 2010–11.

For the year to April 2003, the level of the Obligation was set at 3 per cent. (The current level is 4.3 per cent.) Suppliers demonstrate their compliance with the Obligation through presenting Renewables Obligation Certificates (ROCs) for all or part of this quota to Ofgem.

Taking all licensed electricity suppliers in Great Britain together, the proportion of the Renewables Obligation met by the actual supply of renewables in 2.002–03 was 58.9 per cent. 41 per cent. of suppliers met their obligation fully; 23 per cent. met their obligation in part, and 36 per cent. failed to meet any of their obligation target through the supply of renewables.

River Nene

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on trends in populations of invertebrates in the River Nene following the pollution incident earlier this year; what evidence is publicly available of population levels; what evidence she has collated on whether species that are restricted to the affected section of the river are now extinct; whether there has been a survey for the Red Data Book of the riffle beetle Stenelimis canaliculata; whether a survey is planned; and what plans the Environment Agency has to repair damage to biodiversity as a result of the incident. [143261]

Mr. Morley: The results of the routine biological monitoring of the River Nene in spring 2003 showed that biological water quality at Cogenhoe (NGR SP 831 615) (mid reaches of the River Nene) and sites as far downstream as Orton Staunch (NGR TL 167 973) were uncharacteristically poor. In particular, there was a general absence of water hog louse, mayflies and freshwater shrimp, normally commonly occurring freshwater invertebrate species in the River Nene. In contrast, the invertebrate community at Duston Mill (NGR SP 730 597), the routine monitoring site further upstream of Cogenhoe, suggested good water quality with these taxa found in abundance.

Results of a survey undertaken in September 2003 from sites along the River Nene show that biological water quality at Billing Road Bridge and Cogenhoe (mid reaches of the River Nene) is improving (although water hog louse and freshwater shrimp is still absent). In contrast, the invertebrate community at sites in the lower reaches of the River Nene has largely recovered, and these sites achieved their water quality target rating.

Recently an additional survey has been undertaken at the same sites. Although sample processing is not yet completed, initial observations suggest that mid reaches of the River Nene are still impacted by the pollution incident that occurred earlier in the year. Of particular concern is the continuing absence of water hog louse and freshwater shrimp.

The Environment Agency undertakes routine freshwater invertebrate surveys in spring and autumn seasons each year at specific sites along the River Nene. This information is available to members of the public upon application to the Environment Agency Customer Services Department in Lincoln (Tel. 01522 513100). Additional surveying of the River Nene and Hardingstone Dyke was undertaken to locate the source of the pollution. Data arising from these surveys is not currently available pending the outcome of the Environment Agency Special Enforcement team review of this case. Monitoring undertaken to record recovery of the River Nene and Hardingstone Dyke, is also available to members of the public, on application to the customer services department.

Surveys have been undertaken at three-monthly intervals at important sites along the River Nene using standard methods which sample the accessible margins of the watercourse using a pond net. Key species (water hog louse and freshwater shrimp) which were absent at sites along the mid reaches of the River Nene remain absent. The Red Data Book riffle beetle Stenelimis canaliculata was not found in any samples taken in 2003, although it has been recorded very infrequently in the lower reaches of the River Nene in the past. It is difficult to say whether its absence is related to the pollution incident, as it is a deep-water species and unlikely to be sampled using Environment Agency standard methodology.

The Environment Agency have not carried out a specific survey for the Red Data Book riffle beetle Stenelimis canaliculata and have no plans to conduct such a survey. To do so would disturb the habitat, which could be damaging to this and other deep water species.

It is not normal practice to restock invertebrate populations damaged by pollution incidents; invertebrate populations usually recover through natural colonisation from tributaries and unaffected sites upstream, or natural invertebrate re-distribution.

Fish were not affected directly by the pollution incident, so fish re-stocking is not necessary. However, the longer term health of fish populations in the mid reaches of the River Nene may be affected because their food source remains depleted.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the impact of the pollution incident on the River Nene earlier in the year was on the invertebrate populations of Morton's Leam Special Area of Conservation; and whether the site has favourable conservation status. [143263]

Mr. Morley: Environment Agency monitoring of the Morton's Leam SAC shows no impact of this pollution incident on the Morton's Leam, which was surveyed in July 2003. The results showed a diverse and abundant invertebrate community and the biological data suggested excellent water quality. The key species impacted by the pollution on the River Nene, water hog louse (Asellus aquaticus) and freshwater shrimp (in this instance, Crangonyx pseudogracilis) were abundant in Morton's Leam. The results compare favourably with earlier surveys, which date back to 1985.

The Nene washes (of which Morton's Leam are a part), have unfavourable and unchanged conservation status.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on invertebrate biodiversity in the Nene water system in the last 10 years. [143264]

Mr. Morley: The River Nene normally supports an invertebrate community consistent with that type of river. Reductions in invertebrate biodiversity occurred after the 2003 pollution incident at sites as far downstream as Orton Staunch, near Peterborough. Components of the invertebrate community remain absent at some impacted sites.

Shellfish Licensing Scheme

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when a new shellfish licensing scheme will be introduced; and whether the scheme will take account of its impact on (a) small boat (under eight metres) fishermen and (b) future new entrants to the industry. [141113]

Mr. Bradshaw: A restrictive licensing scheme for shellfish (crabs and lobsters) will take effect from 1 January 2004 for vessels over 10 metres and from 1 April 2004 for vessels under 10 metres. Shellfish entitlements are being granted to existing fishing vessels which, with their current licences, have taken more than 200 kg of lobsters or 750 kg of crabs in any 12 month period between 1 January 1998 and 31 December 2002. The scheme will apply to vessels under eight metres which will account for more than 40 per cent. of the vessels qualifying under the scheme. Anyone wishing to take up shellfishing will need to acquire an appropriate fishing vessel licence carrying a shellfish entitlement from an existing vessel. Licensed fishing vessels without a shellfish entitlement will be permitted to land up to five lobsters and 25 crabs per day.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Law Officers

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Solicitor-General what recent (a) democratic and (b) human rights issues the Law Officers have considered. [144484]

The Solicitor-General: There is a longstanding convention that the fact that the Law Officers have been consulted is not publicly disclosed. This is consistent with paragraphs 2 and 4*(d)* of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Afghanistan

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the progress is of the UN programme for voter registration in Afghanistan. [143936]

Hilary Benn: On 1 December voter registration for the 2004 general election started in eight regional capitals (Kabul, Bamian, Jalalabad, Mazar-e-Sharif, Konduz, Kandahar, Heart and Gardez). Initial results indicated that the UN backed programme has proceeded smoothly with 21,370 voters, including 2,395 women registered to vote in the first week. The government, with the help of ISAF and the international coalition forces has taken measures to ensure security of the teams carrying out the registrations. Voter intimidation however, as well as the reluctance in rural areas to allow women to register, continues to be a major concern. The UN remains confident that they will meet their goal of registering 10 million Afghan voters.

Aid

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list the expenditure allocated to each programme in middle income countries prior to his written statement to the House of 6 November 2003, Official Report, columns 41–43WS. [143268]

Hilary Benn: DFID's internal resource allocation process allocates funds to many middle income countries (MICs) on a regional basis only. Individual country expenditure plans within these regions are flexible and are managed collectively within the overall budget. The table shows indicative figures for the amount we were planning to spend on middle income country programmes within these regional budget lines and excludes any multi-country programmes.

Middle income country expenditure plans (£ million)

	2003–04	2004–05	2005–06
South Africa	35	35	35
China	38	60	55
Sri Lanka	15	20	8
EC Pre Accession (Romania, Bulgaria)	8.1	6.4	5.4
Balkans (Serbia and Montenegro, Bosnia, Kosovo, Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Albania)	19.6	18.8	18.2
Russia	19.7	17.6	12.4
Latin America (Brazil, Peru, Honduras, Bolivia)	17.7	16.2	15.2
Caribbean (Jamaica, Guyana, Belize, Windward Islands)	11.3	10.6	10.3
Overseas Territories (Turks and Caicos, Anguilla, Montserrat, St. Helena)	33.2	30.0	28.1
Palestinian Authority	15.5	11.5	11.5
Middle East Regional (Egypt, Jordan)	6.4	6.0	4.0
Iraq (prior to 14 October statement)	201.9	5.9	5.9

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list the aid programmes in middle income countries whose funding from the Department will be reduced as a result of the recent announcement on the diversion of aid. [144677]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Secretary of State outlined the middle income countries and regional programmes that will be affected in his statement to the House of 6 November 2003, Official Report, column 42WS. More detailed plans are now being made, in consultation with partner countries and other donors. They will be embodied in the annual revision of DFID's Aid Framework, which is expected to be completed over the next two months.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations he has received concerning the UK Government's performance in meeting the UN's international development aid target as a proportion of gross national product. [142725]

Hilary Benn: Representations have been received on this subject from a wide range of correspondents. Since 1997, the UK's level of official development assistance has increased in real terms by 93 per cent. It currently stands at 0.33 per cent. of Gross National Income for this financial year, and will rise to 0.4 per cent. in 2005–06, exceeding the EU target of 0.39 per cent. for member states, and more than double the current G7 average of 0.19 per cent. The UK remains committed to the UN target of 0.7 per cent. oda/GNI and to meeting the Millennium Development Goals.

Art Acquisition

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much his Department has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by his Department since 1997 was; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by his Department through sales of its works of art has been since 1997. [142369]

Hilary Benn: DFID has not spent any funds on the acquisition of works of art since 1997. All works of art in our UK offices are on loan from the Government Art Collection. Most DFID offices overseas have some low value works of art that have been purchased locally, but we have no central records, and the information could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Eritrea

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance his Department is giving to (a) the Government of Eritrea and (b) aid agencies operating within Eritrea. [144156]

Hilary Benn: We are not providing any direct assistance to the Government of Eritrea.

However, in 2003, we have provided the following assistance for Eritrea to address humanitarian needs:

International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC)	500,000
UNICEF	1,000,000
World Food Programme (WFP)	1,000,000
CAFOD	200,000
Dutch Interchurch Aid	550,000

We are considering what support we should provide to the 2004 Consolidated Annual Appeal for Eritrea that has recently been issued.

We also have a Small Grants Scheme, which is managed by our Embassy in Asmara and is for the funding of small development projects in Eritrea. Our total support for this scheme in the current financial year is £200,000.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions he has had with the Government of Eritrea on development aid; and what plans he has to link aid to progress on human rights issues in that country. [144157]

Hilary Benn: We have written to the President of Eritrea indicating that we plan to provide our development assistance to Eritrea through the EU, IMF and World Bank. DFID provides funds to these organisations.

We also indicated that in order for Eritrea to make progress on eliminating poverty through support from partners, they needed to engage in developing a strong Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper. We also stressed the need for these development partnerships to be based on frank dialogue and the sharing of information.

During his recent visit to London, I explained to the Eritrean Foreign Minister that we do not have a bilateral programme with every country and referred to our support through the EU, World Bank and IMF. We also reminded him of the substantial humanitarian support that we have provided to Eritrea in 2003.

Iraq

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what assessment he has made of the role in the reconstruction of Iraq of the privatisation of state-owned enterprises being pursued by the Private Sector Development Department of the Iraqi Coalition Provisional Authority; [143302]

(2) if he will make a statement on the privatisation of Iraqi state-owned enterprises being pursued by the Private Sector Development Department of the Iraqi Coalition Provisional Authority; and if he will make a statement on compatibility of such action with Article 55 of Section III of the Annex to the Hague Convention (IV) 1907. [143303]

Hilary Benn: No decision has been made on the privatisation of Iraqi state-owned enterprises. As Paul Bremer, the US Administrator of the Coalition Provisional Authority, stated at the Madrid Conference,

> "Decisions on that matter [privatisation of Iraqi State Owned Enterprises] will be made in due course by Iraqi authorities".

Mr. Andrew Smith

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what contracts his Department has entered into in the last 12 months with (a) Avient Air and (b) other companies in which Mr. Andrew Smith has an interest; what services have been provided to his Department under these contracts in (i) Sierra Leone and (ii) other countries; what the value of these contracts is; when these contracts were entered into; and if he will make a statement. [142188]

Hilary Benn: We have no contracts with Avient Air. As far as my Department is aware, we have none with any other companies in which Mr. Smith has an interest.

Zimbabwe

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the nature is of (a) food and (b) HIV/AIDS programmes he is funding in Zimbabwe. [143991]

Hilary Benn: At least 5.5 million Zimbabweans will require food assistance in the run up to the next harvest in April 2004. This year DFID is providing support worth £21 million for emergency feeding programmes. This is being channelled both through the World Food Programme's Emergency Appeal and directly to international and Zimbabwean NGOs. This direct DFID support reached 1.2 million people in October 2003, 80 per cent. of whom are children.

HIV/AIDS remains a key challenge for Zimbabwe and kills over 2,500 people each week, while 25 per cent. of the adult population are infected. DFID has committed £27 million for longer term HIV/AIDS programming. This includes the supply of condoms through clinics and private sector outlets, promoting behavioural change and home-based care for the chronically sick.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many internally displaced persons there are in Zimbabwe; and how many Zimbabwean refugees there are abroad. [143990]

Hilary Benn: There is a significant population of Internally Displaced People (IDPs) in Zimbabwe, mainly due to growing food shortages and the continued farm seizures. This has resulted in the displacement of an estimated one hundred thousand people, predominantly farm workers. However, exact numbers are difficult to assess. The Government of Zimbabwe's reluctance to acknowledge the disastrous effects of the fast-track land reform programme has prevented the humanitarian community from carrying out a comprehensive assessment or establishing recognised IDP camps.

Numbers of documented Zimbabwean refugees are negligible—the vast majority of Zimbabweans fleeing the crisis are classed as migrants. Again, exact numbers of this transient population are difficult to assess, as many are illegal migrants in the sub-region. However, there are believed to be 2.35 million Zimbabwean migrants in the Southern Africa region. The vast majority of these, approximately two million, are in South Africa.

DFID is providing support to the International Organisation for Migration and also a Zimbabwean NGO working with former farm workers to prevent displacement and provide, humanitarian assistance for displaced people.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether food aid supplies in Zimbabwe have been secured beyond December. [143986]

Hilary Benn: The UN World Food Programme (WFP), who are the principal coordinators for general food distributions in Zimbabwe, have to date secured over 50 per cent. of the funding requested for this year's Emergency Operation (EMOP) in Zimbabwe. This follows recent pledges of US$8 million from the European Union, and £5 million from DFID. This means that food will be available for distribution until mid-February 2004, when there will be a shortage of cereals if further contributions are not forthcoming. A substantial additional pledge is anticipated shortly from the United States.

Despite this funding, the WFP have reduced monthly ration levels in order to accommodate the growing number of vulnerable people, above the level anticipated when the EMOP appeal was originally prepared. This increase in beneficiary numbers is partly due to increased urban vulnerability, as spiralling inflation (now over 500 per cent.) has affected food prices in shops. There is also emerging evidence of up to several hundred thousand people facing crisis in the former commercial farming areas, most of whom are former farm workers displaced by the Government's disastrous land reform programme. Additionally, the state-controlled Grain Marketing Board has proved erratic and unreliable in contributing to food supply and distribution in the country. Donors are monitoring the situation closely, in close consultation with the WFP.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Departmental Administrative Costs

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the administrative costs were for the Department in each financial year from 1996–97 (a) before adjustments for machinery of government changes and (b) after such adjustments. [143122]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 9 December 2003]: The information requested is set out in the following table. the changes have been projected backwards to provide a consistent set of figures for the period requested.

Net administration costs

£ million

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04 (planned)
Total Admin Costs before adjustment	269	244	232	245	254	270	258	252
Machinery of Government changes from 2001	-28	-25	-26	-26	-26	-33	-32	-32
Machinery of Government changes from 2003 (provisional)	0	0	5	5	5	5	5	6
Total Admin Costs after adjustment[1]	241	219	211	224	233	242	231	226

[1] Figures include Sure Start and the Children and Young People's Unit where appropriate.

Child Protection Investigations

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which local authorities have instituted child protection investigations with regard to children held in custody or removal centres during 2003. [144024]

Margaret Hodge: The information requested is not held centrally.

Directorate Staff

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many civil servants were employed in the (a) Schools, (b) Lifelong Learning and (c) Youth Policy Directorates in each year since 1997. [141731]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 3 December 2003]: The numbers of civil servants employed in the Schools, Lifelong Learning and Youth Directorates as at 1 April for the years in question so far as the information is available are:

	Directorate
	Schools[1]	Lifelong Learning[2]	Youth[3]
October 2003	969	906	0
April 2003	1,602	661	376
April 2002	1,385	681	336
April 2001	1,134	1,017	—
April 2000	1,017	—	—
April 1999	913	—	—
April 1998	800	—	—

[1] The rise in School Directorate figures over the period is largely a result of additional responsibilities, for example, the creation of Sure Start and Children and Young Peoples' Unit.

[2] Lifelong Learning Directorate was established in May 2000 drawing on staff from the previously existing Employment, Lifelong Learning and International, Further and Higher Education and Youth Training and Operations Directorates.

[3] Youth Directorate was set up in September 2001 with staff from Lifelong Learning and Employment, Equality and International Relations Directorates. In October 2003, Youth Directorate ceased to exist and its responsibilities were transferred to other Directorates within the Department.

Emergency Contraception

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what measures are in place to ensure that girls aged under 16 are properly supervised when taking emergency contraception. [141893]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 15 December 2003]: NHS provision of emergency contraception is always by a health professional under medical supervision. Health professionals can provide contraception to young people under 16 provided they are satisfied that the young person is competent to understand fully the implications of any treatment and to make a choice of the treatment involved. Health professionals work within an established legal framework which involves assessing the young person's competence to understand the choices they are making and encouraging them to talk to their parents. All professionals are bound by their professional code of confidentiality. A young person's request for confidentiality is respected unless there are serious child protection issues.

Providing emergency contraception through a range of community outlets aim to increase early access. All health professionals providing emergency contraception are trained to ensure that young women are informed about and encouraged to visit local services that provide regular forms of contraception and condoms to protect against sexually transmitted infections.

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether it is the policy of his Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on Departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142817]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Fair trade products are offered for sale in all Departments' head office buildings, restaurants and can also be supplied, on request, for meetings and receptions.

Fees (Repayment)

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research the Learning and Skills Council is carrying out into (a) the level of and (b) repayment arrangements for fees in (i) post-16 education and (ii) further education colleges. [144650]

Alan Johnson: The research work carried out by the Learning and Skills Council is the Council's operational responsibility. Mark Haysom, the Council's Chief Executive, will write to the hon. Member providing the information requested and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Foundation Courses

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many places for students taking foundation degrees the Government are planning to fund in 2004/05. [143657]

Alan Johnson: The Higher Education Funding Council for England is in the process of allocating up to 10,000 additional full-time equivalent foundation degree places for the academic year 2004/05. Bidding closed on 3 December and the outcome will be announced in February 2004.

These places will be additional to any already in the system and planned for by individual institutions. The Higher Education Students Early Statistics survey (2002) data for the academic year 2002/03 showed 12,417 students (headcount—a mix of full and part-time) studying for a foundation degree. Early data on the numbers studying for a foundation degree in the current academic year will not be available until January 2004.

Outside specific Additional Number Exercises such at the current one, the Higher Education Funding Council for England does not normally plan the detailed funding of places. The number and type of places offered are a matter for the funded institution to determine within the resources available to them.

Free School Travel

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the costs were of free school travel (a) to grammar schools, (b) to upper schools and (c) for children with disabilities in Buckinghamshire in (i) 2000, (ii) 2001 and (iii) 2003. [143536]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 11 December 2003]: This information is not held centrally.

Further Education

Mr. Mahmood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research his Department has carried out on the ability of (a) individuals and (b) employers to pay increased fees for further education courses. [143639]

Alan Johnson: We have little direct evidence about the impact of higher fees in further education (FE) on individuals' or employers' ability to pay. However, in a recent DfES study of adult learners in FE, 40 per cent. assessed themselves as "financially comfortable" and a further 38 per cent. as "not particularly struggling but don't have much to spare", 14 per cent. said they "found it quite hard to cope financially", and only 7 per cent. said they were "finding it very difficult to cope financially".

Dietary Advice

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what measures his Department has taken to promote healthy eating in schools; and if he will list the funding commitment for each measure. [141784]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The National Healthy Schools programme, jointly sponsored by Department for Education and Skills (DfES) and the Department of Health (DoH), through funding of £5.7 million since 2000, promotes healthy eating and healthy lifestyles. The National Healthy School Standard (NHSS) promotes a whole school approach to health. Healthy eating is one of the eight themes of the NHSS. Schools demonstrate that the taught curriculum complements informed messages about healthy eating, for example, food on offer in vending machines and tuck shops. Schools will supply, promote and monitor healthier food at lunch and break times and in any breakfast clubs where they are provided. Over 14,000 schools are taking part in the healthy schools programme and over 8,000 schools are working 'intensively' to achieve the NHSS.

Additionally, we are: working with the Food Standards Agency and Ofsted to examine aspects of school meals and good practice in food and nutrition (DfES contribution—£330,000); working with Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on promoting healthy lifestyles through greater engagement with growing and farming and local food procurement (in excess of £720,000 between March 2002—March 2004); providing a top up to the EU school milk subsidy scheme (£0.5 million annually from January 2001); on a range of other education, food and health interests on improving teaching and learning about healthy eating for pupils of all ages (exact figures not available, but in excess of £0.5 million).

Learning and Skills Council

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the areas where the Learning and Skills Council is reviewing the provision of post-16 education. [144066]

Alan Johnson: Local Learning and Skills Councils are conducting Strategic Area Reviews of post-16 LSC-funded provision in all areas of England. These started in April 2003. Nine local LSCs have been Identified as pathfinders: Nottinghamshire; Bedford and Luton; Northumberland; Cheshire and Warrington; Berkshire; Bournemouth Dorset and Poole; Birmingham and Solihull; North Yorkshire; and a pathfinder involving all five local LSCs in the London region. They will undergo early evaluation and lessons learnt will be shared with local LSCs across the country.

Pupil Absences

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many half days have been lost owing to unauthorised absence of pupils in each year since 1997 (a) in absolute terms and (b) as a proportion of the total number of half days. [141895]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The data for unauthorised absence, as requested, is shown in the following table.

Yearly unauthorised absence between 1997/98 -2002/03

	Total possible sessions	(a) Half days missed due to unauthorised absence	(b) Percentage of half days missed
1997/98	2,074,028,975	15,355,180	0.74
1998/99	2,140,513,917	15,644,482	0.73
1999/2000	2,125,665,642	15,008,057	0.71
2000/01	2,124,473,604	15,423,004	0.73
2001/02	2,128,700,388	15,296,933	0.72
2002/03[1]	2,105,577,893	14,846,088	0.71

School Trips

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance he has issued to schools and local education authorities on making parents aware of assistance available (a) to cover the cost of school trips and (b) to help provide school uniforms; and if he will make a statement. [143488]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 11 December 2003]: Detailed guidance for LEAs and schools on charging for school trips is contained in Circular 2/89. The same information is reproduced in the School Governors' Guides to the Law, which are revised and re-issued annually. In March 2003 we sent out a letter to all Chief Education Officers and Directors of Education explaining how remission of charges for school trips would work once child tax credits were introduced. This letter is posted on The Parent Centre website.

All LEAs and schools must have a charging policy in place, which is readily available to parents. In addition, when schools make charges, or request money, they must explain whether parents are being asked to pay for a specific activity or make a general contribution to school funds. Schools must also be clear whether or not contributions are voluntary.

We do not provide guidance to LEAs on the assistance they may provide to parents on meeting the cost of school uniforms. LEAs may delegate this work to schools, but must ensure that all their schools adopt a consistent approach.

Student Loans

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how much his Department spends each year on the cost of subsidising the student loan book; and what proportion of every pound loaned this represents; [143074]

(2) what the net present value including administration and the subsidy cost, of each pound loaned to students is as part of the student loan book. [143075]

Alan Johnson: The interest subsidy is calculated on the loans issued in year rather than the loans stock. Based on the loans issued during 2001–02, the cost per pound of the subsidy and administration costs was 42p. This is based on > the increase in the interest subsidy provision (including the cost of unwinding the discount) which can vary from year to year according to a number of factors, e.g. the Retail Price Index, HM Treasury discount rate; and > the cash Grant in Aid paid by DfES for administration costs to the Student Loan Company.

No figures have yet been published for 2002–03. Information for that year will be contained in the 2002–03 resource accounts which will be published within the next month. The outstanding student loan stock at 31 March 2002 was £7,203,199,000; the closing balance of the interest subsidy provision was £1,593,670,000 and the Grant in Aid to the Student Loans Company was £27,650,000.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much of the money loaned to students by the Student Loans Company has been written off in each of the past ten financial years. [143648]

Alan Johnson: The table shows the total value of student loans in the UK and in public ownership which have been written off or cancelled in each financial year.

£ million

Financial year	Amount written off or cancelled[1,2,3]
1993–94	0.2
1994–95	0.3
1995–96	0.5
1996–97	0.9
1997–98	1.0
1998–99 of which:	0.9
Income Contingent Loans	[4]—
1999–2000[5] of which:	1.2
Income Contingent Loans	[6]—
2000–01 of which:	1.1
Income Contingent Loans	0.2
2001–02 (provisional) of which:	1.4
Income Contingent Loans	0.4
2002–03 (provisional) of which:	2.6
Income Contingent Loans	0.7

[1] The table shows the value of loans cancelled or written off during each financial year.

[2] Two portfolios of student loans to the value of just over £2 billion have been sold to the private sector in March 1998 and March 1999. The figures in the table relate to the public debt only.

[3] A cancelled loan is one where the borrower no longer has any liability to repay as set out by legislation. A borrower's liability to repay a mortgage style loan shall be cancelled: on death of the borrower; after 25 years or when the borrower reaches the age of 50 (60 if the borrower was aged over 40 when he/she last borrowed), whichever is the earlier, provided the borrower is not in arrears of any loan agreement; and if the borrower is in receipt of a disability related benefit and permanently unfit for work. Income contingent loans are cancelled because of death or permanent disability in the same way, but are cancelled on the grounds of age when the borrower reaches the age of 65. A written off loan is one where the borrower remains liable to repay but recovery is deemed unlikely by the loan administrator or not possible by legal judgment.

[4] Not available.

[5] Amounts written off in 1999–2000 include some transactions which relate to the previous financial year.

[6] Nil/negligible.

The amount written off or cancelled may relate to loans advanced in any of the previous financial years. Therefore data cannot be expressed as a proportion of amount lent.

In addition to the amount shown in the table, £0.5 million was written off under the Repayment of Teacher Loans scheme in respect of accounts in public ownership in financial year 2002–03.

The introduction of the income contingent loan based system of student support from 1998–99 meant that the amount of student loans paid out each year has increased. The amount of loan advanced in 1993–94 was £292.3 million (all mortgage style); in 2002–03 it was £2,618.0 million (of which £2,599.2 million was income contingent loans). A consequence of this increase is a higher level of write-off or cancellation.

Teachers (Work Permits)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the work permits granted since January 2003 by country for (a) primary teachers and (b) secondary teachers in each Government office region. [143191]

Beverley Hughes: I have been asked to reply.

The numbers of work permits granted to teachers, by country, from 1 January 2003 to 30 September 2003 (the latest date for which information is available) are as follows:

	Work permits granted
South Africa	1,284
Australia	986
New Zealand	539
United States of America	502
Canada	432
Jamaica	430
Zimbabwe	228
India	150
Ghana	102
Japan	61
Others	682
Total	5,396

Work Permits (UK) is unable to provide from its management information a breakdown of this data by type of school to which permits have been issued or by region.

Top-up Fees

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what level of top-up fees student teachers will be expected to pay on undergraduate teacher training courses at universities in the Russell Group; and if he will make a statement. [142648]

Alan Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Paul Farrelly) on 20 November 2003, Official Report, columns 1497–1498W.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will estimate the cost of servicing the debt outstanding on the income-contingent student loan scheme after the introduction of top-up fees; and if he will make a statement. [144383]

Alan Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Epsom and Ewell (Chris Grayling) on 15 December 2003, Official Report, column 671W.

Tuition Fees

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what liability for tuition fees those who choose to drop out of a degree course incur; and how this money is required to be repaid. [143646]

Alan Johnson: Where the student withdraws from their course and is assessed to make a private contribution towards their fees, it is for the student and the institution to determine the amount that should be paid. It is also for the institution to determine any repayment that may be due. Guidance is provided to institutions by Universities UK. There is no liability on the student to repay the tuition fee grant once it has been paid to the institution.

DEFENCE

A400M Project

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the A400M project. [143547]

Mr. Ingram: A contract for the development and production of the A400M aircraft was signed with Airbus Military on 27 May 2003 by the Organisation for Joint Armaments Co-operation on behalf of the participating nations (Germany, France, Turkey, Spain, Belgium, Luxembourg and United Kingdom). The UK will take 25 aircraft out of a total 180. The contract milestones are being achieved. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 2 July 2003, Official Report, column 314W to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones).

Aircraft Numbers

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many aircraft, of each type, will be deployed over the time scale covered by the Defence White Paper; [144465]

(2) when he will complete his review of the future numbers of aircraft to be deployed by the RAF over the period referred to in his statement of 11 December 2003. [144464]

Mr. Hoon: As I said in my statement of 11 December 2003, Official Report, column 1211, the Ministry of Defence is currently undertaking work to develop the details of the individual systems and structures appropriate for the policy context as set out in the Defence White Paper, "Delivering Security in a Changing World." I shall make further announcements on the results of that work next year.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are (a) employed in and (b) seconded to the Defence Export Services Organisation; and how many departmental staff are engaged in oversight of the licensing of military equipment and weapons for export. [142521]

Mr. Ingram: The Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO) employed 606 personnel as at 31 October 2003; three were on secondment from industry.

The Department of Trade and Industry is the licensing authority for the export of military equipment. Within the Ministry of Defence the equivalent of 65 full-time staff have specific responsibility for considering applications to licence the export of military equipment, or the policy associated with this activity. This number includes 34 employed full-time within DESO.

Defence Fire Service

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what activities, other than those directly related to the provision of fire cover to UK military forces, the Defence Fire Service has been involved in in Iraq since February. [143754]

Mr. Ingram: The Defence Fire Services deployed in Iraq assist in the provision of fire service support to coalition forces and provide advice on the production of fire safety orders and procedures to enhance safety.

They have also provided assistance to the host nation and the civil community. They continue to train the host nation civilian fire service and have attended a variety of emergency host nation incidents including oil pipeline fires, road traffic accidents, and rescue from buildings. They have also undertaken comprehensive fire inspections to enable the re-commissioning of electricity and water supplies and have assisted in the sanitation of warehouses for receipt of humanitarian aid.

Eurofighter

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Government remain committed to purchasing 232 Eurofighter Typhoons. [144463]

Mr. Ingram: The United Kingdom remains committed to the Typhoon programme. Under the four partner nation Memorandum of Understanding, the UK has undertaken to acquire 232 aircraft out of a total production of 620.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will order Tranche II of the Eurofighter Typhoon; and how many aircraft he will order. [144466]

Mr. Ingram: Work is under way involving our partner nations and industry to enable contracts for the second tranche of Eurofighter Typhoon aircraft to be placed as soon as possible over the coming months. The Tranche 2 contract comprises 236 aircraft of which 89 will be for the RAF.

Iraq

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many reservists are in Iraq; and what plans he has to change this number. [143733]

Mr. Ingram: As at 11 December 2003, there were 1,235 reservists serving in Iraq. As the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 27 November 2003, Official Report, columns 32–33WS, we intend shortly to conduct a roulement of forces in Iraq. At the end of the roulement the number of reservists in Iraq will remain broadly similar. We continue to keep our forces levels in theatre under review in the light of the operational situation.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hazardous sites the Coalition estimates there are in Iraq; how many of these relate to cluster bombs; what steps are being taken to make them safe; and if he will make a statement. [141183]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 17 November 2003, Official Report, column 504W to the hon. Member for Moray (Angus Robertson).

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the circumstances were surrounding (a) the death of Radi Nu'ma in British custody in May, (b) the death of Baha Musa in British custody in September and (c) the fatal shooting of Ali Salim in May, in Iraq. [141677]

Mr. Ingram: The Special Investigations Branch is currently investigating the deaths of Radu Nu'ma, Baha Musa and Ah Salim (also known as Radhi Nama, Baha Nasheem Mohamed and Ali Salaam). It would, therefore, be inappropriate for me to comment.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether individuals have been charged in connection with Special Investigation Branch investigations into Iraqi civilian casualties allegedly involving British forces; [141689]

(2) what action has been taken as a result of the Special Investigation Branch investigations into Iraqi civilian casualties allegedly involving British forces. [141676]

Mr. Ingram: The Special Investigations Branch has completed two investigations into Iraqi civilian fatalities. The first found there was no case to answer. In the second the SIB has sent a report to the unit concerned but it would be inappropriate for me to comment further as it might be prejudicial should further action be taken. The other investigations have not yet been completed and I am, therefore, unable to comment.

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Scottish regiments are in Iraq. [143726]

Mr. Ingram: The only Scottish regiment currently deployed to Iraq is the 1st Battalion, The Royal Scots.

The 1st Battalion, the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders will deploy in Iraq in January 2004.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance has been issued to (a) civilian staff, (b) military staff and (c) outside organisations regarding the transport of effects to service personnel in Iraq over Christmas; and if he will make a statement. [142449]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 10 December 2003]: Family members of United Kingdom Forces personnel serving in Iraq are entitled to send an unlimited number of parcels up to 2kg in weight free of charge through the British Forces Post Office (BFPO).

The Ministry of Defence has made arrangements for the transport of traditional festive fare to British Forces personnel serving in Iraq. Organisations wishing to donate gifts have been encouraged to contact the MOD to discuss the nature of the gifts and to make arrangements for transport. Transport for such gifts has been provided where spare capacity MOD transport is available.

Joint Strike Fighter

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans to follow up the findings of the RAND Europe report on the Joint Strike Fighter. [144462]

Mr. Ingram: The RAND report provided useful advice on the feasibility of establishing a Joint Strike Fighter Final Assembly and Check Out facility in the United Kingdom. Establishment of such a facility is one strand of our approach to the production and support phases of the Joint Strike Fighter Programme. Work is in hand with UK industry to develop initial ideas further.

Legal Expenses

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost to date is of legal expenses incurred by his Department in (a) defending Guardsmen Fisher and Wright against the charge of murder and (b) appealing against conviction. [143687]

Mr. Ingram: The cost to date is approximately £165,000.

Merchant Ships

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 3 December 2003, Official Report, column 66W, on merchant ships, which flags were flown by the merchant ships that did not fly the red ensign; and what percentage of merchant ships chartered by his Department to support allied efforts in the 2003 Iraq war were over (a) 15-years-old, (b) 25-years-old and (c) 30-years-old. [143179]

Mr. Ingram: Ships chartered in support of the Iraq campaign which did not fly the Red Ensign were registered under the following national flags: Antigua, Bahamas, Canada, Cyprus, Denmark, Egypt, Greece, Italy, Liberia, Malta, Marshall Islands, Netherlands, Panama, Portugal, Spain, St.Vincent, Sweden and Turkey.

Of the vessels chartered, some 59 per cent. were over 15-years-old, some 9 per cent. were over 25-years-old, and approximately 1.5 per cent. were over 30- years-old.

The ships chartered by the Ministry of Defence fulfilled all their obligations.

Overseas Deployment

Mr. Paul Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the three services he expects to be (a) serving abroad and (b) deployed on front-line duties between 24 December and 2 January 2004; what percentage of the trained strength of each force this represents; what provisions he has made to ensure family contact over that period; and if he will make a statement. [142578]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 11 December 2003]: The number of Naval Service personnel expected to be stationed abroad between 24 December and 2 January 2004 is 2,209, representing 5.9 per cent. of the trained strength. Of this, 1,223 (3.3 per cent.) personnel will be deployed on front-line duties.

In the Army, 40,842 personnel are expected to be stationed abroad, representing 40 per cent. of the trained strength. Of this, approximately 19,500 (19 per cent.) are expected to be deployed on front-line duties.

The number of RAF personnel stationed abroad at 1 November 2003 was 4,895. This is not expected to change significantly by 24 December 2003. This figure represents 10 per cent. of the trained strength. Of this, the number of personnel expected to be deployed on operations is approximately 1,800 (3.7 per cent.).

Of those stationed overseas on operations, or otherwise, a proportion are likely to be away from their duty station on leave or individual courses.

An Operational Welfare Package (OWP) is available for those personnel on operations, exercises and deployments which are expected to last for two months or more. It includes many welfare enablers for the deployed Service person, including 20 minutes of publicly funded telephone calls per person per week, internet, e-bluey and postal access and was extended in April 2003 to provide public funds to improve communications between families and those deployed.

Over the period 22 December—2 January an additional 20 minutes of telephone calls has been authorised. This means that 40 minutes of publicly funded telephone calls will be available over the Christmas/new year period to families and friends to any destination in the world.

Individuals also have the opportunity to buy further telephone minutes as they require.

Permanent Secretary (Engagements)

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates in July 2002 the Permanent Secretary held meetings with the Assistant Secretary, Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs of the United States State Department. [142410]

Mr. Ingram: Sir Kevin Tebbit, Permanent Under Secretary, met Mr. Anthony Wayne, Assistant Secretary, Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs of the US State Department on 19 July 2002 in Washington DC.

Project Isolus

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what terms of reference he gave to Lancaster University in connection with their contract to conduct public consultations for Project Isolus; what the basis was for giving three working days notice of the recent public meeting in Whitehaven; and if he will make a statement. [143422]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 15 December 2003]: I am placing a copy of the terms of reference applicable to Lancaster University's Project Isolus public consultation work in the Library of the House. Lancaster University placed advertisements for the public meeting at Whitehaven in three local weekly newspapers during the week before the meeting, to reduce the risk of it being poorly attended. The first advertisement appeared in the North West Evening Mail on 24 November 2003, one week before the meeting on 1 December 2003. This strategy was also aimed at ensuring that the advertisements would appear at about the same time as any articles published in advance of the meeting, thereby setting the event in context. Information on public meetings, at Whitehaven and elsewhere in England and Scotland, was also published on the Lancaster University website around two to four weeks in advance of the confirmed date for the meetings.

Saudi Arabia

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the value was of the management fee received by the Ministry of Defence from the Saudi Arabian Government for its management of the Saudi Armed Forces Project in each year since 1997. [141988]

Mr. Ingram: Details of the fees received by the Ministry of Defence are confidential between the United Kingdom and Saudi Arabian Governments. I am therefore withholding that information under the provisions of Exemption 1 of Part II of the Code of Practice on access to Government Information.

Scottish Battalions

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 4 December 2003, Official Report, column 130W, on Northern Ireland, how many soldiers from Scottish Battalions are stationed in Northern Ireland. [143501]

Mr. Ingram: There are no Scottish Battalions currently stationed in Northern Ireland. There may be individual soldiers from Scottish Battalions serving on detachment in Northern Ireland, but this information is not held centrally and could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Ship Construction (Govan)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the time scale for construction of two landing ship dock (auxiliary) ships at Govan has changed; and if he will make a statement. [143446]

Mr. Ingram: The timescale for construction of two Landing Ship Dock (Auxiliary) (LSD(A)) by BAE Systems Marine at Govan will change following the recent announcement by the lead shipyard, Swan Hunter, of delays to its own build programme. We are is currently reviewing the impact this will have on the In-Service Dates of all four LSD(A)s.

Troop Deployment

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the Army is deployed. [143344]

Mr. Ingram: Approximately 20 per cent. of the trained Army are currently deployed on operations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ballybeen Women's Centre

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when and where the Head of the Family Policy Unit of the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety has agreed to meet representatives of Ballybeen Women's Centre. [144618]

Angela Smith: Representatives from Ballybeen Women's Centre have not, as yet, requested a meeting with the Head of the Family Policy Unit of the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

Bills

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what discussions he has had with the Department of Trade and Industry regarding the extension of the Employment Relations Bill to Northern Ireland; [142679]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Department for Transport regarding the extension of the Traffic Management Bill to Northern Ireland; [142680]

(3) what discussions he has had with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister regarding the extension of the Fire and Rescue Services Bill to Northern Ireland; [142681]

(4) what discussions he has had with the Department for Education and Skills regarding the extension of the Children's Bill to Northern Ireland; [142682]

(5) what discussions he has had with the Department of Trade and Industry regarding the extension of the Civil Partnerships Bill to Northern Ireland; [142683]

(6) what discussions he has had with the Home Office regarding the extension of the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Bill to Northern Ireland; [142684]

(7) what discussions he has had with HM Treasury regarding the extension of the Child Trust Fund Bill to Northern Ireland; [142685]

(8) what discussions he has had with the Department for Education and Skills regarding the extension of the Higher Education Bill to Northern Ireland; [142690]

(9) what discussions he has had with the Home Office regarding the extension of the Civil Contingencies Bill to Northern Ireland. [142695]

Mr. Pearson: There has been close consultation with other Departments at both ministerial and official level on the development of the Government's overall legislative programme as set out in the Queen's Speech. Where appropriate, these consultations have included the territorial extent of proposed legislation. I envisage that some of the provisions mentioned may extend to Northern Ireland.

Eating Disorders Group

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Eating Disorders Group was established; what its remit is; and what the (a) names and (b) positions of its members are. [144343]

Angela Smith: The Regional Eating Disorders Working Group was established in June 2003 to take forward the recommendations of the eating disorder services consultation exercise. The group aims to oversee the development of services at all levels (community, primary care, generic mental health services, secondary care services and specialist services). It has the following objectives:

Objective 1:

To commission research which includes issues around user and carer views, hidden need, services at community, primary and secondary care level, and gaps in services with the aim of informing service development.

Objective 2:

For eating disorders identify a range of models of good practice including prevention, early detection and provision of services across all levels and to take account of these models in developing costed proposals for local services.

Objective 3:

To improve communication between the voluntary sector, primary care, community and secondary care services promoting the use of service directories, self help manuals and identifying appropriate referral pathways.

Objective 4:

To identify and plan for the education and training needs, including raising awareness, of all stakeholders.

The group membership is as follows:

A Consultant Psychotherapist, South and East Belfast HSS Trust

A Consultant in Public Health Medicine, SHSSB

A GP, Queens University Student Health

The Assistant Director of Nursing, EHSSB

A GP in Portadown Health Centre

A representative from the Department of Education NI two representatives from the Eating Disorders Association

A representative from Eating Disorders West

A Clinical Nurse Specialist, South and East Belfast HSS Trust a volunteer with ADAPT Eating Distress Association

A Service Planner for Learning Disability and Mental Health, WHSSB

A project Worker, Craigavon and Banbridge HSS Trust

A Consultant in Public Health, NHSSB

A Child and Adolescent Consultant Psychiatrist, Homefirst HSS Trust

A Specialist Registrar, South and East Belfast HSS Trust seven representatives from DHSS and PS including professional advisors.

Elderly Patients

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) residential places were available for the elderly and (b) beds were blocked by elderly patients on the latest date for which figures are available, broken down by parliamentary constituencies. [144262]

Angela Smith: Information is not available according to Parliamentary constituency on the number of residential places available for the elderly or the number of delayed discharges in respect of elderly patients. This information is collected centrally according to Health and Social Services Trust, and is shown in the table in respect of the position at 31 March 2003, the latest date for which both sets of data are available.

Number of Places in Residential Homes for the Elderly and elderly delayed discharges, 31 March 2003:

Health and Social Services Trust	Places in Residential Homes for Elderly	Elderly Delayed Discharges
Down Lisburn	541	19
North and West Belfast	316	45
South and East Belfast	846	43
Ulster	518	28
Causeway	403	42
Homefirst	917	86
Armagh and Dungannon	172	27
Craigavon and Banbridge	173	8
Newry and Mourne	229	16
Foyle	280	10
Sperrin Lakeland	311	5
Northern Ireland Total	4,706	329

Notes:

Places in residential homes for the elderly refer to the total number of available places in such homes, regardless of whether they were occupied or not. The information refers toresidential places in residential or dual registered homes only and excludes nursing places in nursing homes and dual registered homes. Delayed discharges refer to patients occupying acute hospital beds although they were medically fit for discharge. This information is shown according to patients' community Trust of residence, for those aged 65 and over.

Hare Population

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence he has collated on the change in the Irish hare population since 1995 in Northern Ireland. [144619]

Angela Smith: Research carried out at the Queen's University of Belfast (QUB) reported in 1997 that the population of the Irish Hare was at low density in Northern Ireland.

This assessment was followed up by a research study, 'The Northern Ireland Irish Hare Lepus timidus hibernicus Survey 2002', commissioned by the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) of the Department of the Environment and also carried out by QUB. It reported that Irish Hares were widespread but occurred at a low density of about 1 to 2 per square kilometre.

The Irish Hare Species Action Plan, published by EHS in 2000, has among its objectives a target to double the Irish Hare population, over as wide an area as possible, by 2010. There will be regular surveys of the Irish Hare population through to 2010. These will identify population trends and assess progress against the objectives in the Irish Hare Species Action Plan. The first of these surveys will be undertaken in Spring 2004.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library, the scientific evidence he is using as the basis for his proposal for a temporary ban on hare hunting in Northern Ireland from 1 January 2004. [144620]

Angela Smith: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave my hon. Friend, the Member for Vauxhall on 11 December 2003, Official Report, column 577W.

Mobile Telephones (Driving Offences)

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to ban the use of mobile telephones while driving in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the introduction of spot fines for the use of such telephones by drivers. [142660]

Mr. Spellar: Under the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1999 drivers are required by law to exercise proper control of their vehicle at all times. The Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 provides that a person who breaches these regulations commits an offence and is liable to a fine of up to level three on the standard scale (£1000). As such, drivers can already be prosecuted for driving with undue care and attention if they are using a mobile telephone while driving.

With effect from 1 February 2004,1 will be making it a specific offence to use a hand-held mobile phone when driving. The penalty will be a £30 fixed penalty—sometimes referred to as a "spot fine"—or a fine of up to £1,000 on conviction in court. It is also my intention to introduce by September 2005 legislation to increase the penalty by making it an endorsable offence attracting penalty points and a £60 fine.

Operating Theatres

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action has been taken to address the issues raised on the use of operating theatres by the Audit Office in April. [144263]

Angela Smith: A wide range of action has been taken in response to the recommendations made by the Northern Ireland Audit Office report "The Use of Operating Theatres". The Report made 35 recommendations, of which 13 have been fully implemented. A further 11 recommendations have been partially implemented to date and plans are in place to implement all of the remaining recommendations by September 2004.

Public Liability Insurance

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to help small businesses in Northern Ireland cope with rises in public liability insurance. [143849]

Mr. Pearson: I appreciate fully the problems which the current hard market in insurance is creating for many businesses.

Invest NI and the Health and Safety Executive for NI are working with local companies to improve risk management and insurability. In addition I have been pressing the UK insurance market to facilitate more coverage for Northern Ireland businesses.

In relation specifically to Employers Liability Compulsory Insurance (ELCI), I will also be working alongside Ministerial colleagues throughout the UK to ensure the effective implementation of the recently published Second Stage Report of the Department of Works and Pensions led ELCI review.

Public Transport

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to announce the results of the research undertaken into the proportion of disabled passengers carried on the Easibus network in Northern Ireland. [143585]

Mr. Spellar: The results of the survey are expected to be made available early in the new year.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many licensed bus and coach operators there were in each of the last five years. [144223]

Angela Smith: The number of licensed bus and coach operators based in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years was:

	Total
98–99	141
99–00	114
00–01	109
01–02	149
02–03	135

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce a public transport service to serve (a) isolated communities and (b) mobility impaired residents in rural areas. [144232]

Mr. Spellar: The Department for Regional Development continues to support 16 rural community transport partnerships, which offer a range of transport services for their members that complement conventional public transport networks and which in particular provide transport opportunities for people with reduced mobility in rural areas. These partnerships cover most of rural Northern Ireland and the Department is encouraging local interests to establish partnerships in areas currently not covered. The Department also provides revenue support to Translink to maintain a network of 44 rural routes across Northern Ireland, which would otherwise be uneconomic to run. Recently the Department introduced the Bus Challenge Scheme to support new stage carriage bus services in both rural and urban areas. This scheme is open to both Translink and private bus operators and is aimed at addressing gaps in the provision of bus services. So far the Department has agreed to support eight new routes which go through rural areas.

Road Haulage Industry

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) nationally and (b) internationally licensed freight operators were based in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years. [144222]

Angela Smith: The number of nationally and internationally licensed freight operators based in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years was:

	National	International
98–99	453	1,605
99–00	422	1,541
00–01	398	1,671
01–02	343	1,944
02–03	545	1,725

CABINET OFFICE

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) what the total running cost of vehicles used by Ministers in his Department was in 2002–03; and what the cost of (a) servicing vehicles and (b) employing chauffeurs was; [143960]

(2) how much was spent in 2002–03 on the cost of cleaning (a) the interior and (b) the exterior of cars for use by Ministers in his Department; [143961]

(3) what the cost of each new ministerial car purchased in 2002–03 was; and how often on average each car is replaced. [143962]

Mr. Alexander: The responsibility for the provision of ministerial cars and drivers has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car Despatch Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive Mr. Nick Matheson to write to the hon. Member. Copies of his letter will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Fire Services

Mr. Caton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the consultation process required by the Government when a fire service is drawing up a new integrated management document. [144587]

Mr. Raynsford: Guidance was published by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on 28 July 2003 that requires fire and rescue authorities to consult a wide range of stakeholders on their draft Integrated Risk Management Plans (IRMPs). This should take place over a period of not less than 12 weeks to meet Cabinet

Office guidelines for written consultations. Copies of the final guidance and a paper setting out the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's response to the main comments received are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

Barker Report

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how the Government will increase the supply of affordable houses as recommended in the Barker Report. [144196]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister welcomes the interim report by the Barker Review and look forward to seeing what policy recommendations emerge in the Kate Barker's final report.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has already taken significant steps to tackle the shortage of affordable housing. In all around £5 billion is being allocated over the next two years—2004–05 and 2005–06 to support housing investment in the English regions.

In addition we have consulted on a proposed update to Planning Policy Guidance note 3: Housing. The aim of the update is to provide a framework that will secure more affordable housing without affecting the overall supply of housing, deliver a better mix of housing in new developments in terms of size, type and affordability, and ensure that the needs of the whole community are addressed, including for particular groups such as key workers. Affordable housing can be secured through planning obligations and we consulted on 6 November on our proposed new policy to improve negotiated planning obligations and legislation for an optional planning charge.

Building Inspectorate

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what evaluation he has made of the adequacy of the resourcing levels of the Building Inspectorate to allow it to carry out all its statutory monitoring functions in respect of the current building regulations. [142451]

Phil Hope: District and unitary local authorities in England and Wales are responsible for administering and enforcing the Building Regulations. Persons carrying out building projects subject to control by these regulations must use one of two Building Control Services—that provided by the local authority in whose area the work is taking place or by an approved inspector, a private sector alternative. It is the responsibility of local authorities to resource their building control departments, as appropriate, in order to be in a position to carry out their duties under the Building Regulations when they are called upon to provide the Building Control Service.

The Building (Local Authority Charges) Regulations 1998 make local authorities responsible for fixing their own charges for those functions carried out under the Building Control Service, and require them to ensure that the revenue from charges fully recovers the costs of carrying out the functions. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in conjunction with the Welsh Assembly Government conducts an annual monitoring exercise with all local authorities in England and Wales to ascertain the degree to which revenue from their building control functions is fully recovering their costs.

Council Housing

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much the Government has invested in council housing in (a) South Tyneside and (b) England in each year since 1996. [142990]

Keith Hill: Work undertaken by local authorities to renovate and improve council housing is funded partly from their own resources and partly from resources provided by central government. Part of the central Government funding is provided as general support for housing investment and it is up to individual authorities to decide how much to spend on council housing. The following tables set out the total amounts (£ million) of capital investment in council housing and housing capital allocations made by central Government in the years since 1996–97.

South Tyneside

	Capital investment in council housing	Housing capital allocations
		HIP allocation[1]	CRI[2]	MRA[3]	Total
1996–97	4.0	4.4	—	—	4.4
1997–98	5.5	3.2	0.9	—	4.1
1998–99	9.2	3.7	3.1	—	6.8
1999–2000	11.0	3.7	3.1	—	6.8
2000–01	11.7	10.8	—	—	10.8
2001–02	19.1	3.3	—	11.1	14.4
2002–03	18.4	3.7	—	11.0	14.7
2003–04	14.4	3.4	—	10.9	14.3

England

	Capital investment in council housing	Housing capital allocations
		HIP/CRI allocation[1,2]	MRA/ALMO[3]	Total[2]
1996–97	1,510	1,301	—	1,301
1997–98	1,563	1,104	—	1,104
1998–99	1,660	1,369	—	1,369
1999–2000	1,569	1,411	—	1,411
2000–01	1,816	2,090	—	2,090
2001–02	2,142	997	1,587	2,584
2002–03	2,342	1,041	1,585	2,626
2003–04	2,789	899	1,814	2,713

[1] Housing Investment Programme (HIP) allocations cover mainstream support for housing capital expenditure by local authorities (housing annual capital guidelines(ACGs)) and the ring-fenced support for private sector renewal (which was combined with the mainstream funding from 1997–98) and for disabled facilities grants. The figures also include the funding made available through the Capital Receipts Initiative (1997–98 to 1999–2000), the Housing Partnership Fund (1996–97) and to support Cash Incentive Scheme (CIS) grants (1996–97 to 1999–2000)

[2] The housing ACGs up to and including 2002–03 include an element that is assumed to be funded from local authorities capital receipts—this amounts to around £200 million for England as a whole.

[3] Funding for investment in council housing to meet the on-going capital costs of maintaining the stock (Major Repairs Allowance) or to help bring authorities' housing stock up to a decent standard (Arms Length Management Organisation initiative).

Council Tenants

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what arrangements he has put in place to ensure that local authorities identify tenants who lack basic budgeting skills; [144090]

(2) what arrangements he has put in place to ensure that local authorities supply those of their tenants who lack basic budgeting skills with the opportunity to develop those skills. [144091]

Mr. Raynsford: While the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no specific arrangements in place, guidance was issued in 1999, in the National Framework for Tenant Participation Compacts which advises local authorities on how to identify tenant training needs and provision. This is aimed primarily at helping tenants to develop their skills and capacity in relation to participating in and influencing decisions affecting them and their homes.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's main interest here is to ensure that social landlords adopt good practice in their approach to tackling housing rent arrears to avoid unnecessary evictions for tenants. Glasgow university is currently carrying out a research project into policy and practice in relation to use of possession orders and eviction by social landlords and to identify good practice in this area: they are expected to complete the research by summer 2004.

The wider issue of over-indebtedness is being taken forward by a new cross- Government Group announced in the Consumer- Credit White paper published on 8 December by the Department for Trade and Industry. As part of its work, the Group may look at financial literacy. It expects to publish a strategy by spring 2004.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what funds the Government has made available to organisations providing core literacy and numeracy skills schemes for social housing tenants in each of the last five years; and what funds will be made available in 2004–05. [144092]

Keith Hill: There are a number of organisations funded by central Government to provide core literacy and numeracy skills training for those in need. This client group may include social housing tenants but not exclusively.

Over the past two years the Adult Basic Skills Strategy Unit has provided in excess of £1.5 million to fund a financial literacy programme. Embedded into Government's "Skills for Life" programme, a national strategy for improving adult literacy and numeracy, the financial literacy programme is run on behalf of Government by the Basic Skills Agency (BSA). The aim of the programme is to help adults with poor literacy, language and numeracy to develop the skills they need to make effective decisions about the use and management of money.

In developing the programme the BSA have resources and pilots in several areas including Community Development Projects. These projects are testing effective ways of engaging people and delivering financial literacy in community settings.

High Hedges

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when legislation relating to high hedges will come into effect. [144022]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister expects the legislation relating to high hedges to come into effect towards the end of 2004. The next step will be public consultation on regulations covering certain detailed procedural arrangements and on guidance for local authorities.

Housing

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans the Government have to encourage shared or part ownership arrangements to make housing more affordable; and if he will make a statement. [144097]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister recognises the important contribution that shared ownership schemes can play in making home ownership affordable for people on modest incomes. The Home Ownership Task Force, which reported on 13 November, has proposed 45 recommendations to assist in the delivery of affordable housing, including improvements to the operation of the shared ownership scheme. We are considering the recommendations and will respond in the new year.

Government funding for shared ownership is provided by the Housing Corporation through grants to registered social landlords. Around 13 per cent. of the Corporation's Approved Development Programme in 2003–04 (total programme £1.2 billion) will be spent on home ownership initiatives, including shared ownership and the Homebuy equity loan scheme. In 2002–03 over 4,000 affordable homes were provided through the shared ownership and Homebuy schemes.

In addition the £250 million Starter Home Initiative is helping key workers into home ownership primarily through equity loan and shared ownership arrangements. Almost 6,000 key workers have so far benefited from the programme.

From April 2004, the new key worker housing programme will help key workers, both first-time buyers and those wishing to trade-up, in areas of high housing costs. The options available to key workers through the scheme will include equity loan and shared ownership arrangements. Full details of the operation of the scheme will be announced by the beginning of March.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what powers local authorities have to ensure an appropriate social mix in housing development; what guidelines he has issued to local authorities on the exercise of these powers; and if he will take steps to give local authorities additional powers in this regard. [144098]

Keith Hill: Planning Policy Guidance note 3: "Housing" (March 2000) requires local planning authorities to provide wider housing opportunity and choice, and a better mix in the size and type of housing than is currently available.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister recently published for consultation proposed changes to the current policies on planning for housing mix set out in PPG3. The consultation document "Influencing the size, type and affordability of housing" proposes that local planning authorities should ensure their policies for residential development, including for affordable housing, widen housing choice and encourage better social mix. It proposes new policy which would allow local planning authorities, where appropriate local plan policies are in place, to reject developments that conflict with the objective of widening housing choice.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the housing allocation was for each local authority in each of the last five years; and how many houses were built by each authority in each of those years. [144201]

Keith Hill: Details of annual housing capital allocations made to local authorities in England are available in the Library of the House. Information on new housebuilding carried out by local authorities can be found on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's website (under "housing/ housing statistics/publications") and, for years up to 2000–01, in "Local Housing Statistics".

Local Development Plans

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) how the Government will ensure that the number of houses provided in each local development plan is built; [144207]

(2) what proposals he has to accelerate existing planning permissions for residential dwellings. [R] [144265]

Keith Hill: Each local planning authority would be required, under the Planning and Compulsory Purchase Bill, to prepare an Annual Monitoring Report. Regulations would specify that the report has to be prepared by 31 December in each year to cover the period from 1 April to 31 March immediately preceding. The authority would need to report on their performance against the published local development scheme and on the impact of their policies on the ground. The authority and stakeholders would need to know what effect its policies and proposals were having in order to decide whether they are achieving the desired effect or whether changes are needed. Draft Regulation 48 requires authorities to include information on housing policy and performance.

If the annual report on the effect of the authority's policies or proposals demonstrates that they are not performing as desired this should trigger the authority to revise their local development scheme (and subsequently their local development documents) under clause 25 (revision of local development documents). If they fail to do so, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister can direct the authority to do so.

Through the planning delivery grant, we are investing an extra £350 million in planning over the three years 2003–06. This will provide local authorities with the resources to deliver an improved, efficient and responsive planning system that takes good decisions in sensible timeframes and delivers the right development in the right places. Part of the grant is top-sliced for local authorities in areas of high housing demand. In 2004–05 we are giving serious consideration to an element of the grant being related to performance in the delivery of housing in these areas.

Through comprehensive performance assessment we make across the board judgments about the quality of the services delivered and management in authorities. We can use it to assess whether there are corporate reasons for any failure to deliver good housing and planning services. It informs us on the nature and scope of any support that might be needed for failing housing and planning services.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will give the value of the local education authority grant floor and publish his calculations and the assumptions he has made in order to reach that figure; [143864]

(2) if he will publish his calculations and the assumptions he has made in order to reach the new levels he has set for grant floors and ceilings. [143868]

Mr. Raynsford: The following table shows the floor, the ceiling and the scaling factor applied to grant increases above the floor which we are proposing for 2004–05 for each local authority group.

	Floor (Percentage)	Scaling factor applied to grant increase above the floor	Ceiling (Percentage)
Authorities with education and social service responsibilities	4	0.9411240	7.5
Single-service police authorities, police part of GLA	3.25	0.0100295	25
Single-service fire authorities, fire part of GLA	3.5	0.9181902	5
Shire districts in two-tier shire areas (i.e. shire districts that do not have education and social service responsibilities)	3	0.2287428	50

For 2004–05 these floors will ensure that all authorities receive an increase in formula grant, when measured against 2003–04 on a like-for-like basis, which is above inflation. (Formula grant comprises Revenue Support Grant, redistributed non-domestic rates, and any Principal Formula Police Grant.) The scaling factor and the ceiling have been set so that, for each local authority group, the cost of supporting authorities below the floor is shared equitably between those authorities with grant increases above the floor.

The grant floor, the grant ceiling and the scaling factor applied to increases above the floor are inter-related. So for any group of authorities decisions on the floor, the scaling factor and the ceiling have to be taken together. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has published on the departmental website models which allow interested parties to explore the effect of other floor and ceiling values (http://www.local.odpm.gov.uk/finance/0405/fandc/index.htm).

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the amount of specific grant per head from the Local Government Finance Settlement of 2003–04 was for (a) West Sussex and (b) Hartlepool; and if he will give the amount of extra total grant that would be payable if West Sussex were to be funded at the same level of specific grant per head as Hartlepool. [143869]

Mr. Raynsford: The specific grant per head in West Sussex and Hartlepool is tabled as follows. The variations in funding per head reflect a number of factors including the level of relative deprivation in each local authority and the take up of grants, for example the number of local authority funded nursery education places. Distributing simply on the basis of population would not reflect the different needs of different areas.

	Specific grants[1] (£)	Population[2]	Specific grants per head (£/head)
West Sussex	68,200,000	754,253	90.42
Hartlepool	22,777,000	88,711	256.76

[1] This information is taken from local authority budget RA returns.

[2] The population is taken from the Office for National Statistics 2001 mid year population estimates.

Note:

If West Sussex received specific grant support at the same level per head as Hartlepool then they would receive £125,458,290 extra.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will give the amount of formula grant per head from the Local Government Finance Settlement of 2003–04 for (a) West Sussex, (b) inner London boroughs, (c) outer London boroughs and (d) the English average; and if he will give the amount of extra total grant that would be payable if West Sussex were to be funded at the same level of formula grant per head as (i) inner London boroughs, (ii) outer London boroughs and (iii) the English average. [143870]

Mr. Raynsford: Formula grant per head in 2003–04 is given in the following table:

Area	Formula grant per head (£)
West Sussex county council	503.33
Inner London boroughs (including City of London)	1,166.30
Outer London boroughs	809.90
England	892.49

The formula grant per head figures in the table are not directly comparable since the services provided by West Sussex county council are not the same as those provided by London boroughs. London boroughs also provide those services provided by the district council within the West Sussex area; while West Sussex county council received an allocation of grant to cover fire services in 2003–04, that are provided by the Greater London Authority in the London area. In addition the City of London also provides police services. The total England figure includes both district level and police services; neither of these services are provided by West Sussex county council.

The calculation of formula grant takes account of a range of factors other than the numbers of recipients. It includes top-ups for deprivation, pay costs, and other factors such as population sparsity that drive the costs of service delivery in different areas, as well as the relative ability of councils to raise council tax in their areas. Simple per capita comparisons will not therefore be meaningful comparisons of all the factors that drive grant distribution.

If West Sussex county council received £1,166.30 per head of formula grant then it would have received £879,685,274, an additional £500,043,641; at £809.90 per head of formula grant then it would have received £610,869,505, an additional £231,227,872; and at £892.49 then it would have received £673,163,260, an additional £293,521,627.

Peterborough Housing Corporation

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what he estimates will be the delay to the transfer of housing stock to the Peterborough Housing Corporation whilst the Inland Revenue's ruling of 24 October is considered. [144205]

Keith Hill: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friends the Members for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Crausby) and for Heywood and Middleton (Jim Dobbin) on 15 December 2003.

Planning Grants

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which (a) local authorities and (b) regional assemblies (i) have received and (ii) will receive planning grants in 2003–04; what (A) methodology and (B) consultation is being used by his Department concerning its distribution; what funds will be allocated for planning in 2004–05; and for what reason this grant is not ring fenced. [144203]

Keith Hill: The recipients of planning delivery grant in 2003–04 were all district, unitary, metropolitan district and London borough councils, all national park authorities, all regional planning bodies, together with the common council of the City of London, the council of the Isles of Scilly, the Broads authority and the Greater London Authority. Their grant for 2003–04 has been paid in full.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister set out the methodology for the distribution of the grant in a letter sent on 10 February 2003 to hon. Members. I have sent a further copy of that letter to the hon. Member. Before the announcement of the allocations was made, we consulted key stakeholders about the method of distribution.

The amount of planning delivery grant to be allocated in 2004–05 is £130 million.

The planning delivery grant is not ring fenced in line with our general policy on grants to local government whereby local authorities are free to consider how best to deliver outcomes. In the case of the planning delivery grant, there is an incentive to spend the grant on planning services because further allocations will only be made if planning performance continues to improve.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he expects implementation of the alcohol harm reduction strategy for England to begin. [143462]

Ms Blears: The Government made a commitment in the NHS Plan to begin implementing an alcohol harm reduction strategy for England in 2004, and we are on course to achieve that target.

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Antisocial Behaviour Orders were served in the Wycombe constituency in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002. [143537]

Ms Blears: From 1 April 1999 up to 31 May 2000 information on the numbers of Antisocial Behaviour Orders (ASBOs) was collected by police force area (pfa) on the numbers issued only. From 1 June 2000 up to 30 June 2003, latest available, data was collected by magistrates courts committee (MCC) area on the number granted and refused and from copies of the orders we have been able to identify local government authority (lga) areas involved.

The number of notifications received by the Home Office of ASBOs issued within the Wycombe lga, in which the Wycombe constituency is situated, from 1 June 2000 up to 30 June 2003 is two. One order was issued in 2000 and one order was issued in 2001.

Asylum

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the initial salary payable to initial decision makers in asylum applications is; and how long the period of training is; [142156]

(2) what plans he has to increase and improve the salaries and training of initial decision makers in asylum cases. [142157]

Beverley Hughes: The vast majority of initial decisions in asylum applications are made by Executive Officers. The initial salary of an executive officer is not less than £15,557 nationally. In London rates are higher and staff also receive a locational allowance. Pay levels are reviewed each year, and in addition, all fully effective and exceptionally effective staff receive a performance related progression increase. The Department has proposed increasing the initial salary to a minimum of £16,606 nationally with effect from 1 January 2004 and is also considering increases to locational allowances. All new initial decision makers in asylum applications receive intensive training, comprising an initial 11 day course on all aspects of asylum work, 13 days in a special mentoring unit, and a three day intensive interviewing course (which is followed up by a consolidation workshop after three months in post). All asylum decision makers receive continual support and mentoring from more experienced colleagues in a team working environment where the sharing and pooling of acquired expertise is actively encouraged. They also receive any additional training or mentoring necessitated by changes in legislation and procedures, and attend developmental presentations or seminars provided by organisations such as UNHCR and the Medical Foundation. The effectiveness of training is regularly evaluated to ensure it continues to match their induction and development needs.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with Scottish ministers concerning the impact on the Scottish Legal Aid Board of his asylum policies. [142733]

Beverley Hughes: Legal aid is a devolved function and it is for Scottish Ministers to decide how to address Scotland's needs in line with the overall UK policy on asylum. There have been no formal discussions with Scottish Ministers on this matter, although officials keep in touch with developments on both sides of the border.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from established churches in Scotland concerning his policy in relation to the detention of families with children in removal centres. [142762]

Beverley Hughes: Over the last few months we have received representations from both the Catholic Church and the Church of Scotland about the detention of families with children in removal centres.

The Bishop of Paisley made written representations in March and April, and I met with representatives of the Church and Nation Committee of the Church of Scotland at the end of October.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals from immigrants based on their being either a victim of crime or fear of being a victim of crime in their own country where the effective rule of law is uncertain are outstanding; and how many there were in the last 12 months. [142185]

Beverley Hughes: I regret that the information requested is unavailable and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost by examination of individual case files.

Information on the number of such appeals awaiting determination, relating to cases based on the appellant being either a victim of crime or their having fear of being a victim of crime in their own country where the effective rule of law is uncertain, is not compiled.

Statistics on the number of asylum appeals awaiting determination are published quarterly. The most recent publication covering the third quarter of 2003 is now available from the Library of the House or on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applicants in each of the last five years for which figures are available were accompanied by dependants under the age of 18. [142580]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The requested information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by examination of individual case records. The latest published figures (Asylum Statistics 2001) show estimates of between 13 per cent. in 1998 and 14 per cent. in 2001 of principal applicants had one or more dependants.

Information on asylum applications is published quarterly. The next publication will be available at the end of February 2004 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether children of failed asylum seekers are entitled to free education in the state system. [143214]

Beverley Hughes: It is a fundamental legal duty of local education authorities to ensure that education is available for all children of compulsory school age in their area appropriate to age, abilities and aptitudes and any special education needs they may have. This duty applies irrespective of a child's immigration status or rights of residence in a particular location. Children of failed asylum seekers are therefore entitled to attend school for as long as the family remain in the UK.

Community Safety Accreditation

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what use has been made by chief officers of police of accreditations under community safety accreditation schemes under section 41 of the Police Reform Act 2002. [143569]

Ms Blears: In total, six forces have used powers under section 41 of the Police Reform Act. Five forces have accredited 16 Vehicle Inspectors employed by the Vehicle Operator Services Agency (VOSA). The inspectors have been issued with the power to stop vehicles for the purpose of testing. This allows them to test vehicles without police assistance and so frees police officers to focus on other tasks. The five forces are Cambridgeshire, Greater Manchester, Northumbria, North Wales and Staffordshire.

In addition, Hampshire Police have accredited five employees of Southampton City Council, to enable them to be more effective in dealing with anti-social behaviour. Hampshire police received £20,000 central funding from the Home Office to help with the project costs of setting the scheme up.

The Home Office has allocated a total of £450,000 funding to 21 pathfinder forces (including Hampshire) in this financial year to assist them with setting up community safety accreditation schemes. The funded schemes will accredit those already conducting patrols in communities to enhance the reassurance that these staff provide and make them more effective in dealing with anti-social behaviour. Forces involved in the first tranche of schemes in this first phase of accreditation are mainly intending to accredit wardens employed in or by local authorities.

Community Support Officers

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he gives to police forces about the insignia on policy community support officers' uniforms which describes their role; and if he will make a statement. [143891]

Ms Blears: The uniform and insignia worn by Community Support Officers is a matter for the Chief Officers of individual police forces. The Home Office's guidance document, available on the police reform web site, states that CSOs' uniforms should make them 'recognisable as such' so as not to confuse the public.

However, many police forces have employees who are designated as both CSOs and appointed as Traffic Wardens. In line with the Home Office circular 065/2002, forces have labelled these CSOs' uniforms with the word 'Traffic'.

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase funding to the West Midlands Police for the expansion of the police community support officers for (a) 2004–05, (b) 2005–06 and (c) 2006–07; and if he will make a statement. [143913]

Ms Blears: By the end of the 2003–04 financial year, the Home Office will be funding 2457 CSOs across 38 police forces. 40 of these are in the West Midlands Police area. These were provided for in the second CSO bidding round (2003–04). West Midlands Police did not put forward a bid in the first round (2002–03).

Across England and Wales, a further 454 CSOs have been funded from other sources, including 21 in the West Midlands.

In 2004–05 the West Midlands Police, along with other forces in England and Wales, will be invited to bid in a third CSO funding round. This round will provide 50 per cent of funding for salary and direct on costs.

Final decisions about funding for future years, beyond 2004–05, have yet to be taken.

Crimestoppers

Mr. Boris Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will guarantee the grant for Crimestoppers for the next four years. [142531]

Ms Blears: The Government believes that Crimestoppers is a highly effective organisation that gathers vital intelligence for the Police and other law enforcement agencies. As laid out in the 1998 Compact on relations with the Voluntary and Community Sector, the Government recognises that continuity of funding is important to voluntary organisations and takes this into account where possible.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what additional payments have been made to Capita in respect of amendments and modifications to the Criminal Records Bureau computer system in each financial year since the project began; [142059]

(2) what the unit cost of a Criminal Records Bureau (a) standard and (b) enhanced disclosure is for each application route. [142060]

Ms Blears: Additional payments in respect of amendments to computer systems in each financial year are as follows:

	Amount
2001–02	10,590,581
2002–03	541,789
2003[1]	594,200

[1] To date.

Based on the projections in the Criminal Records Bureaus (CRB) Corporate and Business Plans 2003–04 the individual unit costs are estimated as follows:

	Amount
Standard paper	25
Standard telephone	20
Enhanced paper	31
Enhanced telephone	26

Standard and Enhanced Disclosures are issued free of charge to volunteers.

There have been no subsequent developments, which would suggest these costs are now materially different.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for what reasons the Criminal Records Bureau has further increased its fees; [142261]

(2) what discussions he has had with the National Council for Voluntary Organisations on the implications of fee increases by the Criminal Records Bureau on voluntary, community and charitable organisations. [142262]

Ms Blears: We announced on 1 December that the fee charged by the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) for a Standard Disclosure will rise from £24 to £28 and that for an Enhanced Disclosure from £29 to £33. These increases will take effect from 1 April 2004.

We have always made it clear that the CRB would be self-financed through the fees charged for providing the Disclosure service, and that the fee levels would be regularly reviewed. When the last fee increase was announced in June 2003, we re-affirmed the requirement that the CRB should be self-financing in the medium term—that is, from 2005–06 onwards. The CRB continues to make efficiency savings. However, as the CRB moves towards full cost recovery, it is necessary to reduce the substantial subsidy that the CRB currently receives from the general taxpayer and to make a compensating increase in the Disclosure fee.

Disclosures continue to be issued free to volunteers, saving the voluntary sector some £12 million in 2004–05. We have had no discussions with the National Council for Voluntary Organisations (NCVO) specifically on the latest fee increase. But we agreed earlier to meet representatives of the NCVO to discuss its concerns about the previous fee increase, amongst other issues. In addition, the NCVO is represented on the CRB Voluntary and Community Sector Working Group which provides a forum to raise any CRB-related issues affecting the sector.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the costs of Criminal Records Bureau checks for (a) care homes and (b) voluntary organisations. [143062]

Ms Blears: Criminal Records Bureau checks are free for volunteers, saving the voluntary sector some £10 million in 2003–04. In other cases, responsibility for paying the fee rests primarily with individual applicants, although it is open to the employer to reimburse the cost. Since 1 July 2003, the fees for an Enhanced and Standard Disclosure have been £29 and £24 respectively; I announced on 1 December 2003, Official Report, column 51–52WS the fees to apply from 1 April 2004. The total revenue from fees in 2003–04 is estimated to be £47 million. No detailed breakdown is available of the proportion of Disclosure applications, which come from each sector.

Emergency Services (Hoax Calls)

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hoax calls to (a) the emergency services and (b) the fire service there were in each of the last three years in (i) Bolton, (ii) the North West and (iii) the UK. [143247]

Mr. Raynsford: I have been asked to reply.

The following information is available in relation to the fire service:

	2000	[1]2001	[1]2002
Bolton	815	1,005	700
North West[2]	11,672	11,489	10,639
United Kingdom[2]	74,086	74,134	67,060

[1] Provisional

[2] Includes estimates for incidents not recorded in November 2002 during industrial action

Information about the number of hoax calls received by the police and ambulance services is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Immigration and Nationality Directorate expects to reach a decision in the case of Mr. S. S. of Aylesbury (ref.S108 1532/8). [140970]

Beverley Hughes: A decision was made on 25 November to grant him leave to remain here.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of (a) lorries and (b) other vehicles passing through Calais and Coquelles en route to the UK were not checked for purposes of seeking to discover illegal immigrants over the last 12 months. [142168]

Beverley Hughes: The Calais port operator (Calais Chamber of Commerce) check 100 per cent of freight vehicles passing through Calais (approximately 2,500 per day) either by Passive Millimetric Wave Imagers (PMMWs), carbon dioxide or heartbeat detectors. Additional checks are also carried out by ferry operators and French customs. All other vehicles such as private cars and vans are systematically checked by the ferry operator before boarding.

We are unable to say what proportion of vehicles (approximately 2,000 per day) are checked by Eurotunnel at Coquelles prior to boarding. Immigration Service search teams exercising their powers under the Immigration Act currently carry out targeted and intelligence-led searches of UK bound freight and other vehicles within the British Control Zone at Coquelles.

Migrant Workers

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Government will ratify the UN Convention on the Rights of Migrant Workers and their Families. [142294]

Beverley Hughes: The Government has no plans to sign and ratify the UN Convention on the protection of rights of migrant workers and their families.

We believe that the United Kingdom has struck the right balance between the need for immigration control and the protection of the interests and rights of migrant workers and their families. The rights of migrant workers and their families are protected in UK legislation, including the Human Rights Act 1998, and the UK's existing commitments under international law.

National Policing Targets

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the ways in which the National Intelligence Model is used to inform the setting of national policing targets. [143272]

Ms Blears: The National Policing Plan sets out the Government's key priorities for the police service describes the National Intelligence Model as the principal operational tool available to deliver those priorities. The National Policing Plan requires all forces to implement the National Intelligence Model to commonly accepted minimum standards by April 2004. Forces are currently at different stages of implementation.

The National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) UK Threat Assessment and the National Policing Plan establish national priorities for the Police Service. The National Intelligence Model is applied by police forces to operationalise those priorities at national, regional and local levels. As the Model becomes established in forces, strategic assessments at Basic Command Unit and force level can be expected to inform the assessments made at regional, and ultimately at national, level.

Police

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many uniformed officers were employed by the Leicestershire Police Service at 5 April in each year from 1997 to 2003. [143947]

Ms Blears: Police strength information does not differentiate between uniformed and plain clothed officers. The information requested (to the nearest available date) is set out in the table. On 31 August Leicestershire Constabulary had record strength of 2,159 officers, which is 210 more than in March 1997.

Leicestershire Constabulary

	Police officers[1]	Police staff[1]
31 March 1997	1,949	755
31 March 1998	1,983	774
31 March 1999	1,993	802
31 March 2000	1,993	805
31 March 2001	2,033	806
31 March 2002	2,100	816
31 March 2003	2,114	934
31 August 2003	2,159	n/a

[1] Data are for full-time equivalent strength

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions Merseyside Police have (a) closed premises that are being used for drug dealing or use causing disorder or serious nuisance, (b) issued penalty notices for truancy, (c) designated an area with a history of anti-social behaviour, allowing them to disperse groups causing intimidation and take home children who are out on streets late at night, (d) used the new controls to tackle the misuse of air weapons and replica guns, (e) used their new powers for dealing with public assemblies and trespassers, (f) used their new power to move on trespassing encampments where a relevant site is available, (g) used their new powers to intervene in neighbourly disputes regarding high hedges, (h) issued penalty notices to 16 and 17 year olds for disorder and (i) used their extended stop and search powers where reasonable suspicion is held that articles made, adapted or intended for use in offences of criminal damage are being carried. [143463]

Ms Blears: These powers are contained within the Anti-social Behaviour Act 2003 and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 which both received Royal Assent on 20 November 2003. The powers are not yet available to the police—they will be commenced during 2004.

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average cost is of recruiting and training a police officer. [144515]

Ms Blears: The recruitment of police officers is the responsibility of the Chief Officer of each force. No central records are kept of the average cost across the police service of recruiting and training a police officer in England and Wales.

When rates of payment to be made under the Crime Fighting Fund in 2000–01 were agreed with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Association of Police Authorities, £1,000 was included for recruitment and £7,000 for the initial residential training for each new recruit. These payments have been uprated annually to £1,082 and £10,000 respectively per recruit in 2003–04.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those police forces in which authorisations under section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000 are in place; and which of these areas have been subject to rolling monthly authorisations during 2003. [143383]

Mr. Blunkett: There are currently 14 section 44 authorisations in place. However, the publicising of the use of the powers in any particular area is an operational decision for the force concerned. Any decision to publicise the fact that the powers are being used would be made in light of the operational objective, and mindful of the need to ensure that the information released cannot be exploited by those intent on committing acts of terrorism.

Each authorisation is given full consideration and confirmed only if I am satisfied that their use is expedient to prevent acts of terrorism as set against the background of the current threat level.

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the United Kingdom police officers that will be deployed in Iraq are from the West Midlands police force; and if he will make a statement. [143892]

Ms Blears: I understand that no officers from West Midlands Police are deployed in Iraq at present. West Midlands Police are contributing generously to international peacekeeping efforts elsewhere.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the 2002 police pay settlement in reducing rates of police overtime. [143409]

Ms Blears: The 2002 settlement included a provision to reduce expenditure on police overtime by 15 per cent. by March 2006. The provision came into effect on 1 April 2003. Forces will be providing information to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of (HMIC) Constabulary on expenditure on overtime as part of the arrangements for monitoring progress against the target and HMIC will report on an annual basis.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have retired from (a) Suffolk Constabulary, (b) Norfolk Constabulary, (c) Essex Police Force and (d) Cambridgeshire Constabulary in each of the last five years; and what the national average age of retirement was in each year. [143533]

Ms Blears: The number of police officers who have retired in each of the last five years from each force is given in the table.

Police retirements: ordinary and medical

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03
Cambridgeshire	46	38	43	44	44
Essex	101	124	99	104	90
Norfolk	47	45	49	51	65
Suffolk	44	37	52	36	46

Information on the national average retirement age of police officers is not held centrally and not readily available locally. However the information for Suffolk is as follows.

Suffolk: average retirement age of police officers

	Average age
1998–99	47.06
1999–2000	49.85
2000–01	49.36
2001–02	48.51
2002–03	51.71

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what resources have been made available to Gwent Police since 1997; how many police officers there were in the Gwent Force in each year since 1997; and what the expected number of police officers in the Gwent Force is in each of the next two years. [142820]

Ms Blears: The information requested is set out in the table. Gwent Police had record police strength at the end of August 2003. The balance between police officers and police staff and other resources, such as IT systems, in the Gwent Police is a matter for the Chief Constable. It is not therefore possible to estimate the number of police officers that Gwent Police will have Over the next two years. I understand that Gwent Police has forecast strength for 31 March 2004 at 1,357.

The provisional police funding settlement for 2004–05 will give Gwent Police Authority a Government funding allocation of £71.8 million, an increase of 3.25 per cent over 2003–04. It is for the Police Authority to set the budget.

Gwent Police: Funding, Police strength and police staff strength 1997 to 2003

Year (as at 31 March)	Force budget £ million	Police officer strength	Police (support) staff strength
1996–97	62.6	1,243	452
1997–98	64.6	1,233	477
1998–99	66.9	1,247	487
1999–2000	71.4	1,264	498
2000–01	76.1	1,274	537
2001–02	80.7	1,333	570
2002–03	84.4	1,341	607
2003–04	92.0	1,342[1]	Not available

[1] Police strength as at 31 August 2003

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pupils (a) applied to join and (b) were enlisted as members of Thames Valley Police Force in (i) 2000, (ii) 2001 and (iii) 2002. [143538]

Ms Blears [holding answer 11 December 2003]: Neither the Home Office nor Thames Valley Police Force record the number of applications received from pupils to join Thames Valley Police Force record the number of applications received form pupils to join Thames Valley Police Force.

Police recruits need to be of a minimum age of 18½ when they join a police force in England and Wales.

Security Industry Authority Pilot Scheme

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many licensed door supervisors he expects to participate in the Security Industry Authority Pilot Scheme in Hampshire commencing in March 2004; and what target complement he has set. [143965]

Ms Blears: The Security Industry Authority (SIA) anticipates that some 2,500 door supervisors will apply to be licensed during the course of the pilot in Hampshire and the Isle of Wight, commencing in March 2004. This figure is necessarily a best estimate as not all local authorities in the pilot area have existing local registration schemes, and those that do, do not always include all door supervisors working in the local authority's area.

There are no overall complement levels set, as the demand for door supervisors is to a large extent market led. However, it is anticipated that some local authorities may set minimum complement levels for individual premises as a condition of their licence to operate under the Licensing Act 2003, and this will have an impact on the number of SIA licence applications.

Weapons

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) handguns, (b) rifles, (c) shotguns and (d) air weapons which have been used in crime have been recovered in each of the last five years; and how many of each had been previously or were at the time legally owned. [143921]

Caroline Flint [holding answer 15 December 2003]: This information is not currently available in the form requested. The National Firearms Forensic Intelligence Database launched last month will provide a central database of seized weapons and help trace guns used in crimes and improve detection.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many gas cartridge air weapons have been handed in under the Anti-Social Behaviour Act 2003; and how many applications have been made for firearm certificates by owners of such weapons under the provisions of the Act. [143922]

Ms Blears [holding answer 15 December 2003]: None. The legislation is not yet in force. We are aiming to commence the relevant provisions on 20 January when it will become an offence to manufacture, sell, purchase, acquire or transfer any air weapon using a self-contained gas cartridge system. Existing owners will have a further period of three months in which to apply for a firearms certificate or to dispose of the weapon.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefit Payment Books

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the number of benefit payment order books in use in each category of benefit at (a) 1 April 2002, (b) 1 April 2003 and (c) the most recent available date. [142420]

Mr. Pond: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

Child Support Payments (North-west)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average sum paid (a) in child support payments and (b) in child benefit to families in (i) St. Helens, (ii) Merseyside and (c) the north west region was in each year since 1992. [141298]

Mr. Pond: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Average sum paid in child support payments in St. Helens, Merseyside, and north west region as at end of February quarter

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many cold weather payments have been made in each of the last six years, (a) in total and (b) broken down by region; and what the real terms expenditure on those payments was in each case. [144654]

Mr. Pond: The information is in the table. A breakdown by region would be available only at disproportionate cost.

	Number awarded	Amount awarded Cash terms (£ million)	Amount awarded Real terms (£ million)
1997–98	55,000	0.47	0.53
1998–99	26,000	0.22	0.24

Correspondence

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the hon. Member for Christchurch will receive a reply to his inquiries on behalf of Mrs. Pitson about the Child Support Agency. [144543]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Christopher Chope, dated 16 December 2003:

In replying to your recent Parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked when you will receive a reply to your inquiry on behalf of Mrs Pitson about the Child Support Agency.

Our records show that the last time you wrote to the Agency in respect of Mrs Pitson was the 10 October 2003, I subsequently replied on the 19 November 2003.

Industrial Injuries

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he expects the further research recommended by the Industrial Injuries Council into risk of upper limb disorders in specific occupations to be completed. [142599]

Mr. Browne: The Industrial Injuries Advisory Council (MAC) has monitored the scientific literature in relation to Work Related Upper Limb Disorders since its last report in 1992, and has decided that there is now sufficient new evidence that it should conduct a further review of the subject.

The review is still in its early stages. 11 AC plans to continue its research and consultation with experts during the spring and summer of 2004 and to complete its review in the first half of 2005.

Occupational Deafness

Mr. Mahmood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many cases lodged before the Medical Appeals Tribunal in 2002–03 concerned occupational deafness; and how many were successful. [143458]

Maria Eagle: This is a matter for Christina Townsend Chief Executive of the Appeals Service. She will reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from Christina Townsend to Mr. Mahmood, dated 16 December 2003:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question regarding the number of cases lodged before Medical Appeal Tribunals in 2002–03 concerning occupational deafness.

Appeals tribunals succeeded Medical Appeal Tribunals in 1999. The attached table shows the number of appeals lodged, those cleared at hearing and the number found in favour of the appellant. I hope this reply is helpful.

Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit (IIDB) appeals due to Occupational Deafness in the period 1 April 2002 to 31 March 2003

	Lodged	Cleared at hearing	Found in favour of the appellant
All Appeals	242,510	178,350	80,815
All IIDB appeals	18,355	15,860	6,140
IIDB occupational deafness appeals	395	355	70

Parents with Care

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the (a) monetary value and (b) percentage of maintenance that was paid to Child Support Agency parents with care in receipt of (i) income based jobseeker's allowance and income support and (ii) working families tax credit in each of the last six years. [141529]

Mr. Pond: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Child Maintenance paid to parents with care who are in receipt of Income Support/Jobseeker's Allowance (IB) and Working Families Tax Credit: 1 March 2000 to 28 February 2003

	Total maintenance paid	Maintenance paid to IS/JSA(IB) PWCs		Maintenance paid to WFTC PWCs

1. Figures are for full maintenance assessments only.
2. Figures produced using 5 per cent. scan of Child Support Computer System (CSCS).
3. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample and therefore may be subject to sampling variation.
4. Maintenance paid is in millions and is rounded to the nearest hundred thousand.

Pension Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners receiving housing and council tax benefit became entitled to pension credit in October; and of that number how many received an increase in their housing and council tax benefit entitlement to reflect the increased thresholds for these benefits. [144652]

Mr. Pond: The information is not available. However, we estimate that some 1.9 million pensioner households stand to get more help, or help for the first time, through housing benefit and council tax benefit as a result of the introduction of pension credit.

Steve Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether pension credit counts as income when assessing housing and council tax benefit. [144653]

Mr. Pond: Whether pension credit is taken into account when assessing housing benefit and council tax benefit depends on which elements of pension credit are in payment.

A person in receipt of the guarantee element of pension credit, or both the guarantee and the savings credit elements of pension credit, has all of their income and capital disregarded for the purposes of housing benefit and council tax benefit. If a person is in receipt of the savings credit element only, then the amount of the savings credit is taken into account as income in the housing benefit or council tax benefit assessment.

However, in October 2003, the applicable amounts in housing benefit and council tax benefit, for people aged 65 and over (or who have partners aged 65 and over) were increased to reflect the maximum savings credit people could get. This ensures that, although the savings credit is taken into account as income, the resulting reduction in their housing benefit or council tax is less than their gains due to receipt of the savings credit.

Pension Payments

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners have decided not to change over to payment of their pensions into bank accounts or Post Office card accounts. [144288]

Mr. Pond: As at 14 November 2003, over 1.3 million Pension Service customers have been invited to convert to direct payment. Of these, only 2.98 per cent. (39,016) have actively indicated that, at this stage, payment into a bank, building society or Post Office card account is not their preferred option.

Key figures on the progress of conversion to direct payment are available in the Library updated every four weeks.

State Pension

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how his Department intends to help lower earners build up their entitlement to the state pension. [143927]

Malcolm Wicks: There are already a number of measures in place to help lower earners build up their entitlement to state pension.

Employees who earn above the lower earnings limit (LEL) but less than the lower earnings threshold (LET) are treated as having earnings at the LET. Certain carers and people who are disabled or long-term ill who earn less than the LET, including those with no earnings at all, are also treated as having earnings at the LET. Because the LET is set at a higher amount than the LEL, some employees do not have to pay national insurance contributions (NICs) but are treated as if they have paid them. This means that they continue to build up entitlement to contributory benefits such as state pension and incapacity benefit even though they are not paying NICs.

In addition, people with earnings below the level at which they are treated as paying NICs or no earnings can have their state pension entitlement protected by home responsibilities protection (HRP). HRP helps to protect the basic state pension position of people whose opportunities to work are limited because of caring responsibilities at home. It is available to eligible people for complete tax years and reduces the number of qualifying years they would otherwise need for a basic state pension.

Also, recipients of working tax credit whose earnings are below the level at which they are treated as paying NICs can be credited with contributions for state pension purposes.

Further, the state second pension focuses help on those with low to moderate earnings and on qualifying carers and long term-disabled people who have broken work records. 20 million people have started to benefit from the reform of state earnings-related pension scheme (SERPS) through the state second pension, introduced in April 2002. Low earners will get at least double what they would have got from SERPS, while carers and disabled people with broken work records will be entitled to an additional state pension for the first time.

HEALTH

Smoking

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths were related to smoking in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002. [143842]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information is not available in the form requested. The Health Education Authority 1998 report, "The UK Smoking Epidemic: Deaths in 1995", estimated that in the United Kingdom in 1995, smoking caused more than 120,000 deaths of people aged 35 years or more. A copy of this report is available in the Library.

"Valuing People"

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will fund the service improvements for adults with learning disabilities set out in the White Paper, Valuing People. [143503]

Dr. Ladyman: "Valuing People: A New Strategy for Learning Disability for the 21st Century" (Cm 5086), announced the creation of two new funds to support its priorities, the Implementation Support Fund from April 2001 and the Learning Disability Development Fund from April 2002. Our annual report on learning disability, Making Change Happen (HC 514), published in April 2003, announced that the Support Fund would continue until March 2006; the Development Fund will also continue until March 2006.

In addition, over £3 billion a year is spent on health and social care provision for people with learning disabilities. People with learning disabilities also use mainstream health and social care services and benefit from increased expenditure on those services.

Agenda for Change

Linda Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent meetings he has had with the Business Services Association to discuss Agenda for Change; and if he will make a statement. [143523]

Mr. Hutton: Officials have met the Business Services Association to discuss issues arising from the new national health service pay system. Pay, terms and conditions for staff in contracted-out services will depend on the nature of transfer agreements and any subsequent agreements reached between the organisations concerned and their employees, but the Department welcomes the opportunity to share views on workforce issues with the independent sector.

Assisted Conception Units

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have been conceived in licensed assisted conception units using donated gametes; how many children have been unable to receive information on their genetic origins since July when donor anonymity was to have been lifted; how many children were made the subject of an adoption order and a Section 30 parental order since July; and when the Government will announce its conclusions on donor anonymity. [143358]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Nearly 25,000 children have been conceived in licensed assisted conception units as a result of treatment using donated gametes and embryos since August 1991, when the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's register of such births began. After a public consultation exercise in 2002, we announced in January 2003 that we would carry out a further programme of work on the possibility of providing of identifying information about future sperm, egg and embryo donors, and make a further announcement after that. We expect to make a decision on this shortly.

In the region of 800 children have been born as a result of licensed infertility treatment using donated gametes or embryos since 1 July 2003. Over that period, the Registrar General has received 2,336 adoption orders and 27 parental orders under section 30 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990.

Brachytherapy Treatment

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy that every patient recommended by an NHS consultant for brachytherapy treatment has the treatment funded by a primary care trust; [144545]

(2) what the Government's policy on the funding of brachytherapy treatment by the national health service is. [144546]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The National Institute of Clinical Excellence (NICE) published guidance on the organisation and delivery of services for people with urological cancers, including prostate cancer, in September 2002. The guidance states that the option of brachytherapy should be discussed with men with early prostate cancer.

However, the NICE guidance also acknowledges that, the place of brachytherapy in the treatment of prostate cancer is uncertain and notes the importance of research to evaluate the effectiveness of brachytherapy for prostate cancer. The guidance refers to a randomised intergroup trial comparing brachytherapy with radical surgery that is being organised by the National Cancer Institute of Canada and the American College of Surgeons Oncology Group, and strongly encourages UK participation in this study. As a result, the Department of Health has made available £900,000 through the National Cancer Research Network (NCRN) to enable national health service patients to enter this trial. The National Cancer Research Institute (NCRI) prostate cancer clinical studies group and the NCRN are working closely together to take this trial forward in the NHS.

As more evidence on the effectiveness and cost effectiveness of brachytherapy becomes available, the Department will consider whether this treatment is a suitable topic for referral to NICE as a technology appraisal. The Government are devolving power from the centre to enable primary care trusts to use the extra resources for the NHS to deliver on both national and local priorities for their communities, accounting publicly for how they have used them.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the reasons why the UK has lower survival rates for breast cancer than other EU countries. [141878]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 4 December 2003]: Comparable statistics on cancer survival in the United Kingdom and most other European Union countries have been produced in three studies funded by the European Commission (the EUROCARE studies). Cancer registries in the UK, including staff from the National Registry at the Office for National Statistics, have been involved in these studies since they began in 1989.

The recently published findings of the EUROCARE 3 study, covering patients diagnosed in 1990–94, showed that cancer survival rates in England, in general, lag behind those in Europe. However, the study also shows that the gap in survival rates between England and other comparable countries is now beginning to diminish. For patients diagnosed with breast cancer in the early 1990s, differences in the stage at diagnosis were a key explanation for the differences in survival between Western European countries.

It is important to note that these studies predate the introduction of the NHS Cancer Plan by more than five years. The improvements in waiting times, treatment and the introduction of specialist teams for breast cancer patients now being delivered by the NHS Cancer Plan will help to ensure survival rates for breast cancer patients continue to improve. Indeed, Cancer Research UK have noted that in the past decade British women have had the worlds biggest decrease in deaths from breast cancer thanks to better diagnosis and treatment. Indeed, deaths from breast cancer among the under 70s have decreased more sharply in Britain than anywhere in the world, by 30 per cent., in the last 10 years.

Cancer Care

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he proposes to tackle the shortfall in trained (a) oncologists, (b) radiographers and (c) physicists. [140544]

Mr. Hutton: Since 1997, there has been a 28 per cent. increase in the number of consultants in clinical oncology and a 98 per cent. increase in the number of consultants in medical oncology.

In 2003–04, central funding has been provided to support the implementation of six centrally funded training places in clinical oncology and six in medical oncology. Trusts have also been given the opportunity to create up to 14 additional locally funded training places in clinical oncology and 11 in medical oncology.

The table shows the number of clinical and medical oncologists working in the national health service between September 1997-June 2003.

The Department is committed to increasing the number of training places for radiographers and medical physicists; between 1996–97 and 2002–03, the number of training commissions for radiography have increased by 107 per cent. to 1,223. Separate information on the number of training places for medical physicists has only been collected sine 2002–03; latest plans show that work force development confederations (WDCs) expect to increase the number of training places by around 16 per cent. There is a range of recruitment, retention and returner initiatives in place to further increase the national health service work force, including radiographers and medical physicists.

The cancer care group work force team, which is a multi-disciplinary body, supports the delivery of improvements in patient services through innovative, integrated, care-centred work force development. It is an expert advisory body with representation from WDCs, the Modernisation Agency, health and social care professionals, education and training organisations, and patients and service users.

Its task is to recommend practical ways of providing the workforce needed to deliver improved services, in the right numbers, with the right skills and in the right place, taking into particular account recent and future policy initiatives.

Department of Health medical and dental workforce census.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to ensure the replacement of radiotherapy equipment over 10 years old; [140549]

(2) if he will make a statement on investment in (a) staff and (b) machines for radiotherapy delivery. [140550]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The NHS Cancer Plan committed the national health service to maintaining a modern stock of linear accelerators for radiotherapy treatment of no older than 11 years. The NHS Plan and NHS Cancer Plan made a commitment for 20 replacement and 25 additional new linear accelerators as well as for 50 additional computed tomography (CT) scanners and 50 additional magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scanners to be installed in the NHS by 2004. Funding for the linear accelerators was announced in July 2002. On 22 May 2003, my right hon. Friend the Member for Darlington, (Mr. Milburn) announced the location of the majority of the CT and MRI scanners, and a further programme of replacement CT, MRI and linear accelerators over the next three years. This will mean that by the end of 2006, no CT or MRI scanner will be older than 10 years and no linear accelerator will be older than 11 years.

Alongside the investment in equipment we are also increasing the numbers of staff working in radiotherapy departments and making better use of existing staff through role re-design and improved skill mix.

Cancer Services

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the two-month wait target from GP referral to first definitive treatment for (a) lung, (b) gynaecological, (c) colorectal and (d) urological cancers for each month over the last three years that were previously published on his Department's website. [141401]

Miss Melanie Johnson: A two month waiting time target from urgent general practitioner referral to first treatment for lung, gynaecological, colorectal and urological cancers will be in place from 2005 and data will be published after the target is implemented. The cancer waiting times data referred to was published by the cancer service collaborative (CSC) on its own website as part of its monitoring of local cancer projects achievements and focused on 30 per cent. of cancer patients in services identified locally as those most in need of improvement. The CSC is currently developing a new more meaningful reporting system which will enable local teams to monitor their progress on delivering improvements to cancer patients using validated cancer waiting times data.

Care Homes

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many council-owned care home places have been transferred out of council ownership in (a) Suffolk, (b) Norfolk, (c) Essex, (d) Cambridgeshire and (e) England in each year since 2000. [143531]

Dr. Ladyman: This information is not held by the Department. Information provided by the relevant councils on the numbers of council-owned care home places that have transferred out of council ownership in each year since 2000 is shown in the table.

Council	2000-01	2001-02	2002-03	2003-04 (number of transfers in progress)

Christmas Celebrations

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were in hospital over the Christmas period in each year since 1997; and what guidance is issued to the NHS on celebrating Christmas in hospitals. [143704]

Dr. Ladyman: The number of children in hospital at Christmas in each year since 1997 is shown in the table. Only children discharged within the same year have been counted. Those who are still in hospital on 1 April after Christmas are not included.

Children in hospital at Christmas, age on admission 0–17 years. Date of admission on or before 25 December, date of discharge on or after 25 December

Count of in year discharges NHS hospitals, England 1997–98 to 2002–03	Discharges
1997–98	10,069
1998–99	10,991
1999–2000	10,491
2000–01	10,026
2001–02	10,202
2002–03	10,439

Notes:

1. Discharges: A discharge episode is the last episode during a spell, where the patient is discharged from the hospital (this includes transfer to another hospital).

2. Grossing: Figures are grossed for both coverage and missing/invalid clinical data, except for 2001–02 and 2002–03 which are not yet adjusted for shortfalls.

Hospital Episode Statistics (HES), Department of Health.

Guidance on the treatment of children in hospital was issued in April in the form of the national service framework (NSF) for children on hospital standards. This is available at: http://www.doh.gov.uk/nsf/children/hospitalstandard.pdf. The NSF follows on from earlier guidance issued in 1991 on 'The Welfare of Children and Young People in Hospital'.

In general, the cardinal principles underlying this guidance provide that:

> children are admitted to hospital only where the health care they require cannot be provided in their own home and community;
> when it is necessary to admit children to hospital, they are admitted for the shortest time possible, commensurate with the time necessary for treatment and recovery prior to discharge;
> the hospital environment is child friendly and hospital services take full account of childrens' needs for emotional support and recreation. These needs are of great importance in childhood, particularly at times like Christmas.

Coronary Care

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of external counter pulsation and enhanced external counter pulsation treatments for heart disease, with particular reference to angina pectoris; [143812]

(2) what research work he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on external counter pulsation; and what conclusions about its efficacy were drawn. [143813]

Miss Melanie Johnson: External counter pulsation (ECP) is not routinely offered to patients with angina pectoris by the national health service. There is insufficient evidence currently available about its benefits to warrant its widespread use.

The available literature on this procedure has been reviewed and it has been decided not to commission any research from the Department of Health.

Although there is currently insufficient evidence to draw conclusions about the benefits of ECP, the evidence base is being monitored. Should improvements in the effectiveness of ECP be demonstrated, the position will be reviewed.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice is given to health professionals about signs and symptoms consistent with underlying cardiac conditions that could cause unexpected death. [143974]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Relatives of people who have died of sudden cardiac death, or who are diagnosed with one of the underlying conditions, should be screened because there is a genetic component in many of these cases.

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence is currently reviewing guidance, issued in September 2000 to the National Health Service in England and Wales, on the use of implantable cardioverter defribrillators (ICDs). Current guidance already suggests that ICDs should be used, where clinically indicated, for patients with a familial cardiac condition with a high risk of sudden death, such as Long-QT syndrome and hypertrophic cardiomyopathy.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) emotional and (b) practical support is provided to (i) patients who are diagnosed with a potentially fatal cardiac condition and (ii) their carers. [143975]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Following a diagnosis of potentially fatal conditions, people can access a range of psychological therapies, which are available in every strategic health authority catchment area. The responsibility of referring patients to such services lies with the clinicians involved in their care.

All trusts provide support for patients, relatives and staff through the chaplaincy service and associated community faith representatives. In November 2003, the Department published guidance material for managers and those involved in the provision of chaplaincy-spiritual care, "Meeting the Religious and Spiritual Needs of Patients and Staff".

The new guidance sets out the contribution chaplaincy-spiritual care providers can make in directly supporting patients within the modern national health service. Meeting the varied emotional needs of such patients and of their carers is fundamental to the care provided by the NHS.

Practical support available for those diagnosed with cardiac-related illness is also widely available. Where appropriate, patients are offered surgery, and no one currently waits more than nine months for heart surgery. Those diagnosed with heart failure are offered treatments to control their symptoms, improve their quality of life and slow disease progression. Patients may also be offered advice on how to make lifestyle changes, for example, smoking cessation or dietary advice, which will improve their quality of life and reduce the risks of their condition deteriorating.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice is given to primary health care trusts to prevent those at risk from (a) sudden adult death syndrome and (b) arrhythmia death from being prescribed medications that may prove lethal to people whose hearts are sensitive to those substances and could cause them to die unexpectedly. [143976]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The British National Formulary (BNF) provides United Kingdom healthcare professionals with authoritative and practical information on the selection and clinical use of medicines in a clear, concise and accessible manner.

The BNF makes specific mention of drugs which have associated risk with arrhythmia death.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the British Heart Foundation study published 27 March, Urgent Call for Greater Research into So-Called Adult 'Cot Death'. [143977]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The British Heart Foundation (BHF) study suggested that sudden cardiac death should be classed as a separate condition.

We do not believe that sudden cardiac death should be classified as a syndrome in its own right. This is because it has many possible causes—neurological, metabolic or cardiac problems, or an underlying infection.

The UK National Screening Committee has advised there is insufficient evidence to warrant a national screening programme for sudden cardiac death. This recommendation is based on a report produced in 1999 by Dr. Stuart Logan of the Institute for Child Health. Dr. Logan has now updated his report in the light of recent research and, after consideration of the report by the Child Health sub-committee, the position remains the same.

The evidence base is due to be reviewed in March 2004.

Correspondence

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Barrow-in-Furness (Mr. Hutton), will reply to the letter of the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West of 3 September 2003; and what the reasons are for the delay in replying. [143721]

Mr. Hutton: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 14 October 2003.

Delayed Discharges

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on delayed discharges in the Vale of York. [144482]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information available in the Library shows that, in quarter two of 2003–04, there were 47 patients in the Selby and York Primary Care Trust (PCT) area whose transfer of care had been delayed.

Joint working has been put in place at every level in the Selby and York PCT area to address the issue of delayed transfers of care. A number of joint schemes have been put in place to prevent inappropriate admission, support early discharge and to prevent unacceptable delays.

The local authority in York has developed eight transitional care beds in the last year and Selby and York PCT is about to start a 24-hour district nursing service. By July 2004, there will be a new intermediate care facility in York providing a further 28 more appropriate placements for patients.

Diabetes

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent on healthcare professional education with regard to diabetes over the past three years; and if he will make a statement. [143738]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect data at a level that allows the identification of the money that has been spent on healthcare professional education with regard to diabetes.

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions are being put in place to improve the overall competency of diabetes education of primary care and generalist staff; and if he will make a statement. [143739]

Mr. Hutton: The long-term conditions care group workforce team (LTCCGWT) was established two years ago. Part of its remit is to identify the workforce requirements for diabetes services. To help support this activity, the LTCCGWT in the summer of 2002, commissioned Skills for Health to develop competence frameworks for diabetes. The frameworks are intended to describe the quality of service a person with diabetes needs, whether that service is provided by a diabetes specialist nurse, a practice nurse, a general practitioner, a dietician, or any of the other professionals who provide diabetes care. They cover the key activities of:

reviewing and investigating the health of adults with diabetes agreeing, implementing and supporting care plans

In addition, Skills for Health is also developing national occupational standards for diabetes retinopathy screening. Work to develop the competence frameworks will be concluded in spring 2004 with the development of draft national occupational standards for diabetes retinopathy screening being achieved during summer 2004.

Disease Screening

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy that no doctor or nurse will be employed in the NHS without first being screened for (a) hepatitis B, (b) hepatitis C, (c) tuberculosis and (d) HIV/AIDS; and if he will ensure that checks are made on existing medical and nursing staff in the NHS. [144005]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 15 December 2003]: Earlier this year, the Department published draft guidance to the national health service for consultation on health clearance for serious communicable diseases for new healthcare workers. This guidance proposes strengthening existing checks for tuberculosis and hepatitis B and introducing new checks for HIV and hepatitis C for new healthcare workers who will perform exposure prone procedures—where injury to the healthcare worker could expose a patient to the risk of infection from the healthcare worker's blood. Such procedures occur mainly in surgery, obstetrics and gynaecology, dentistry and midwifery.

"Health Clearance for Serious Communicable Diseases: New Health Care Workers—Draft guidance for consultation" is available on the Department's website at http://www.doh.gov.uk/healthclear/guidance.htm

Healthcare workers have a professional responsibility (as set out in guidance from their regulatory bodies and the Department) to promptly seek and follow confidential advice on whether they should be tested if they have any reason to believe they may have been exposed to infection with a serious communicable disease.

Domiciliary Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates (a) the Department and (b) the National Care Standards Commission has made of the number of domiciliary care providers operating in England that would be required to register with the Commission. [140641]

Dr. Ladyman: Before the introduction of regulation for domiciliary care agencies, the Department estimated that over 3,600 agencies operating in England would be required to register with the National Care Standards Commission. In fact, 4,322 registration applications have been received.

Fertility Experiments

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to prevent the sale of female eggs for fertility experiments; [143174]

(2) what his policy is on pharmaceutical companies offering financial inducements to women to donate eggs for use in fertility experiments; and if he will make a statement. [143445]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Infertility research involving the use of human eggs requires a licence from the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA) if those eggs are mature and are placed in storage at the research centre and/or are to be fertilised with human sperm to create a zygote or embryo. Women donating eggs to such projects can be paid a maximum of £15.00 per donation plus expenses.

The sale of human material that is not regulated by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990, including immature eggs, will be made a criminal offence by the Human Tissue Bill, which was introduced on 3 December 2003.

All research projects involving the use of human gametes, including those that do not require a licence from the HFEA, must have the approval of the research centre's local research ethics committee before the project can go ahead.

Flu Vaccination

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the currently available influenza vaccination in offering protection against Fujian flu. [142966]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 9 December 2003]: The Chief Medical Officer asked the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI) to review current flu policy and effectiveness of the vaccine. At its meeting on 10 November 2003, the JCVI agreed that the current vaccine is expected to offer some cross protection against the Fujian-like strain and should give good protection against the virus strains in the vaccine.

Foundation Hospitals

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from (a) foundation trust applicants and (b) other hospital staff concerning the impact of the new financial flows system on their stability. [143702]

Mr. Hutton: The Department published a Payments By Results consultation on 7 August 2003. The consultation closed on 31 October 2003. Responses to the consultation, including those from foundation trust applicants and other hospital staff, are currently being analysed and a response will be made available when this analysis is completed.

Genetic Information

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the time scale is for (a) developing policy options involving stakeholders and (b) consulting the public before the moratorium on the use of genetic information by insurance companies comes to an end in 2006. [142218]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government have made clear its position on the use of genetic test results for underwriting life and health insurance in the October 2001 Government response to the report from the House of Commons Science and Technology Committee: Genetics and Insurance.

The Genetics and Insurance Committee (GAIC) is responsible for the evaluation of specific genetic tests and their relevance to particular types of insurance. GAIC also provides independent scrutiny of compliance with the terms of the moratorium on the use of genetic test results by insurance companies, which runs until November 2006. If there is evidence of non-compliance with the moratorium by the insurance industry, then the Government is prepared to enforce it through legislation, if necessary.

The Human Genetics Commission (HGC) has been asked to work closely with GAIC to provide Government with further advice in developing a longer-term policy on the use of genetic information by insurance companies. GAIC and HGC will also monitor the effectiveness of the Association of British Insurers (ABI) Code of practice on Genetics which is mandatory for all ABI members.

HGC and GAIC held a well-received joint public meeting in September 2003. A number of interested groups, members of the public, attended this meeting, including representatives from organisations concerned with genetic disorders, as well as from insurance and re-insurance companies, and non-Governmental organisations with an interest in this area. HGC and GAIC are planning a further such meeting in 2004.

Research is also under way to consider the use of genetic information in insurance underwriting. This research will be completed by 2005.

Health Care (Stoke-on-Trent)

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated at the North Staffordshire Hospital in each year since 1997. [143873]

Dr. Ladyman: The table shows the number of finished in-year admissions at University Hospital of North Staffordshire National Health Service Trust (formerly North Staffordshire Hospital NHS Trust) each year from 1997–98 to 2002–03.

	Admissions
1997–98	101,642
1998–99	106,355
1999–2000	122,241
2000–01	121,978
2001–02	113,621
2002–03	135,665

Notes:

Admissions

Admissions are defined as the first period of in-patient care under one consultant within one healthcare provider. Please note that admissions do not represent the number of in-patients, as a person may have more than one admission within the year.

Grossing

Figures have not (yet) been adjusted for shortfalls in data (i.e. the data are ungrossed).

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time for a first consultant appointment was in Stoke-on-Trent for each year since 1997. [143874]

Dr. Ladyman: The table shows the average (median) waiting times for first consultant out-patient appointment following general practitioner/general dental practitioner referral for University Hospital of North Staffordshire National Health Service Trust (formerly North Staffordshire Hospital NHS Trust) and North Staffordshire Combined Healthcare NHS Trust.

	Median waiting time (weeks)
1995–96	9.22
1996–97	8.60
1997–98	9.05
1998–99	9.16
1999–2000	9.20

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the clinical areas where the NHS in Stoke-on-Trent has longer (a) waiting lists and (b) waiting times than the English average. [143875]

Dr. Ladyman: The table shows the number of patients, per 10,000 head of population, waiting for elective in-patient admission.

Specialty	England	North Stoke PCT and South Stoke PCT
Trauma and orthopaedics	51.25	63.58
Anaesthetics	0.96	1.37
Medical oncology	0.04	0.04
Mental illness	0.02	0.93

Health Start Programme

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the projected budget for the Healthy Start Programme is for each of the next three years; [144560]

(2) how much he has spent on the Welfare Foods scheme in each of the past three years. [144566]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Total expenditure on the Welfare Food Scheme in England in the last three financial years is shown in the table.

	£ million
2000–01	120
2001–02	118
2002–03	114

The budget is demand-led, but expenditure should continue at a similar level when the current scheme is replaced by Healthy Start at around the end of 2004.

Herbal Medicines

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of products currently on the market that will require a full marketing authorisation under the Traditional Herbal Medicinal Products Directive. [143660]

Miss Melanie Johnson: One of the main reasons why we have supported the development of the proposed Directive on Traditional Herbal Medicinal Products is the difficulty companies sometimes experience at present in providing evidence that their products fully satisfy all the criteria for a marketing authorisation, and in particular the requirements relating to efficacy.

The current text of the proposed Directive provides that, where the competent authorities judge that a traditional herbal medicinal product fulfils the criteria for a marketing authorisation, the product will not be eligible for a traditional use registration. Our view is that it is likely that only a very small proportion of unlicensed herbal remedies currently on the United Kingdom market would be affected by this provision in a situation where an applicant was seeking a traditional use registration. However, it is not practicable for the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency to give a more specific estimate in advance of the launch of the proposed traditional use registration scheme or to conduct a detailed survey that would be burdensome to the industry.

Human Genetics Commission

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether the Human Genetics Commission has been charged with (a) involving stakeholders, (b) conducting a public consultation and (c) developing a national policy on the use of genetic information by insurance companies; [142217]

(2) what plans his Department has for a public consultation to address the issue of genetics and insurance in preparation for the end of the current moratorium. [142206]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Human Genetics Commission (HGC) has been asked to work closely with the Genetics and Insurance Committee (GAIC), and with stakeholders, to provide Government with further advice in developing a longer-term policy on the use of genetic information by insurance companies.

HGC is committed to involving the public in all of its activities. It holds its main meetings in public and has held a public fact-finding meeting on genetics and insurance following its survey of public attitudes to the uses of genetic information.

HGC and GAIC held a well-received joint public meeting in September 2003. A number of interested groups, and members of the public, attended this meeting, including representatives from organisations concerned with genetic disorders, as well as from insurance and re-insurance companies, and non-Governmental organisations with an interest in this area. HGC and GAIC are planning a further such meeting in 2004.

There are no plans for the Department of Health to carry out a public consultation on this issue.

Influenza

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been taken to ensure that at-risk groups of people aged under 65 are receiving influenza vaccinations this winter, with particular reference to children over six months in at-risk groups. [142957]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We launched a campaign on 1 October incorporating a number of strategies aimed at encouraging younger people in at-risk groups to receive their flu immunisation. The campaign incorporated:

National television advertising.

Advertising in national and regional newspapers and magazines, including ethnic media.

Advertising in buses, on pharmacy bags and on-line.

Work with commercial partners such as Gala Bingo and voluntary organisations, such as Heart UK and the National Asthma Campaign.

The Chief Medical Officer wrote to all general practitioners with details of this year's influenza programme in his letter of 6 August 2003.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children are in the at-risk group for influenza; and how many of these have received an influenza vaccination this year. [142958]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The number of children registered as at-risk is not held centrally. This year, for the first time, general practitioners have been asked to set up disease registers for all at-risk patients in order to maximise uptake in these most vulnerable patients.

Vaccine uptake for at-risk patients is not available.

Mental Health Care

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) organisations and (b) expert professionals who have been consulted during his Department's review of specialised mental health care. [143852]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The national director is leading a group of senior clinicians and managers who are considering the advice needed to support future commissioning and provision of specialised mental health services. In each instance they will consult acknowledged expert professionals and leading voluntary organisations. The review has considered three topics so far—eating disorders, perinatal psychiatry and Aspergers syndrome. The Eating Disorders Association gave evidence to the first topic and AsCUSE gave evidence to the session on Aspergers. There was no voluntary sector organisation available for the session on perinatal psychiatry.

Midwifery Units

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many midwifery-led units have been closed since 1997; how many were transferred to hospitals to become consultant-led units; how many consultant-led units were closed; and how many have become midwifery-led units since 1997. [144662]

Dr. Ladyman: This information is not collected centrally.

MMR

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the two-year-old cohort received the MMR vaccine in (a) the last 12 months, (b) 1997 and (c) 1990. [143601]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information about the uptake of MMR immunisations and other childhood immunisations is published annually. The latest information is in DH Statistical Bulletin, NHS Immunisation Statistics, England: 2002–03, available on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0316.htm.

The uptake levels for MMR by the second birthday by financial year (April to March) from 1989–90 to date are shown below in the table.

Completed primary courses: percentage of children immunised by their second birthday, 1989–90 to 2002–03

	Percentage uptake
1989–90	84.0
1990–91	87.1
1991–92	89.9
1992–93	91.6
1993–94	90.8
1994–95	91.0
1995–96	91.9
1996–97	91.5
1997–98	90.8
1998–99	88.3
1999–2000	87.6
2000–01	87.4
2001–02	84.1
2002–03	81.8

Nappies

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions have taken place between his Department and the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs regarding the Government's target to reduce disposable nappy waste; and if he will make a statement. [143226]

Miss Melanie Johnson: In July 2003, I met my hon. Friend, the Minister of State at the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Elliott Morley), along with representatives from the Women's Environmental Network to discuss disposable nappy waste.

The Department of Health supports the target on waste prevention and reduction. We believe women and their families should be given information on the use of both re-useable and disposable nappies to make an informed choice. "The Pregnancy Book" and "Birth to Five" are two comprehensive information booklets produced by the Department of Health and given free to all first time mothers. Both these publications give detailed information on both reusable and disposable nappies.

Neonatal Intensive Care

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish his response to the Report of the Neonatal Intensive Care Services Review Group; and if he will make a statement. [143678]

Dr. Ladyman: I expect to do so shortly.

NHS Dentistry

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the provision of NHS dentistry in Bolton. [143248]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Bolton Primary Care Trust is in discussion with the recently launched Bolton Oral Health Advisory Group to address the provision of national health service dentists within the area.

Organ Transplants

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) adults and (b) children are currently registered for an organ transplant in (i) St. Helens and (ii) Merseyside. [142904]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested in shown in the following tables.

Patients over 18 resident in St. Helen's and Merseyside registered (active and suspended) on the national organ transplant list, as at 10 December 2003

Organ	St. Helen's	Merseyside

Palliative Treatment

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent on palliative care in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [141946]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information about how much has been spent on palliative care in each of the last 10 years is not held centrally.

The Government recognised in the NHS Cancer Plan (2000) that national health service support for specialist palliative care services needed to increase. We pledged to increase NHS investment in specialist palliative care by £50 million per annum by 2004. Ministers also made available an additional £10 million from central budgets in 2002–03.

We have now set up a £50 million per annum central budget for specialist palliative care to ensure that our pledge in the NHS Cancer Plan is met. This extra £50 million over and above what is already being invested, is to help tackle inequalities in access to specialist palliative care and to enable the NHS to increase their contribution to the cost hospices incur in providing agreed levels of services. All 34 cancer networks have submitted investment plans for the use of their allocation to the National Partnership Group (NPG) for palliative care (a joint NHS/voluntary sector group). The NPG has assessed the investment plans. Plans have been approved and allocations have been made to local cancer networks which will result in an additional 71 whole time equivalent consultants, an additional 162 whole time equivalent cancer nurse specialists and an extra 86 specialist palliative care in-patient beds. The £50 million represents a significant increase of nearly 40 per cent. in NHS funding for specialist palliative care over 2000 levels.

Pedometers

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much he has spent distributing pedometers to primary care trusts in areas of high deprivation. [144569]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department of Health is contributing £27,000 out of a total budget of £85,000 for this initiative which will distribute 10,000 Step-O-Meters to general practitioner practices in areas of high deprivation and where there is a high rate of coronary heart disease. Other funding partners are The Countryside Agency and The British Heart Foundation.

Pregnancy Care

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of pregnant women have had as their first point of contact (a) a general practitioner and (b) a midwife in each of the last six years. [144659]

Dr. Ladyman: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the reasons for the varying rates of caesarean section in England. [144660]

Dr. Ladyman: In order to establish the reasons for the varying rates of caesarean section rates, the Department commissioned the Royal College of Obstetrics and Gynaecologists (RCOG) to carry out the first ever and biggest National Sentinel Audit. The findings of the audit were published by the RCOG in October 2001 and these have been referred to National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) to issue clinical guidelines. The guidelines are expected in January 2004.

Prevenar

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many studies he has commissioned into the vaccine Prevenar. [142931]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department has three studies on pneumococcal conjugate vaccine in the United Kingdom that are addressing a number of issues.

the optimal schedule of this vaccine in the infants;

the need for booster doses;

the optimal schedule for catch-up for older children; and to assess the impact that introducing the pneumococcal vaccine to the routine immunisation schedule has on the level of protection given by the other childhood vaccines.

These studies are part of an ongoing programme of research.

Respiratory Syncytial Virus

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what preventive measures are being taken by NHS trusts to prevent respiratory syncytial virus; [143683]

(2) how many paediatric wards have been closed due to respiratory syncytial virus infection in the last 12 months, broken down by NHS trust; [143684]

(3) how many babies contracted respiratory syncytial virus while in each NHS hospital trust in the last 12 months; [143685]

(4) how many cases of respiratory syncytial virus have been admitted to each NHS trust in 2003. [143686]

Dr. Ladyman: Palivizumab, a monoclonal antibody, is indicated for the prevention of serious lower respiratory tract infection caused by respiratory syncytial virus (RSV) requiring hospitalisation in children born at 35 weeks gestation or less, and who are less than six months old at the onset of the RSV season, or in children less than two years old who have received treatment for bronchopulmonary dysplasia within the last six months. The use of Palivizumab is a matter for clinical judgment.

Information on the number of wards closed to new admissions owing to RSV, and RSV infections contracted while in each national health service (NHS) hospital trust, is not collected centrally. Information on the number of cases of RSV admitted to each national health service trust in 2003 has been placed in the Library.

School Fruit Scheme

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was (a) in total, (b) per school and (c) per pupil of implementing the Government's National School Fruit Scheme for each year of its operation. [143613]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The National School Fruit Scheme has been progressively scaled up over the last four years, with schools joining during the course of each year. It is impossible to state the exact cost per school as this will vary, but the table shows the total cost of the National School Fruit Scheme in each year, with the number of schools and pupils taking part at the end of each year.

The full-year cost per pupil has fallen as schools in each region have joined the scheme. The total annual cost per pupil in schools joining in spring 2002 was £26; for schools due to join in spring 2004 it is £19.

	Cost (£ million)	Schools	Pupils
2000–01	0.5	33	6,000
2001–02	1.0	500	80,000
2002–03	42 (over 3 years[1])	6,400	616,200
2003–04		8,680	1,097,000

[1] met by the lottery-funded New Opportunities Fund.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what proportion of eligible (a) schools and (b) local education authorities have taken part in the Government's National School Fruit scheme since it began. [143614]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Eligibility for joining the National School Fruit Scheme pilots has been extended region-by-region. At present, 7,586 schools in 87 local education authorities (LEAs) are taking part out of 7,938 invited to join, which is over 95 per cent. of schools and 100 per cent. of LEAs.

Sexual Health

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) 20 to 29-year-olds and (b) 30 to 39-year-olds were diagnosed with (i) HIV, (ii) chlamydia, (iii) gonorrhoea and (iv) syphilis per 100,000 population in each year since 1986. [141997]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information on the number of new diagnoses per 100,000 population for chlamydia, gonorrhoea and syphilis in England, in each year since 1991 (the first year for which data is available), have been placed in the Library. Data are not collected for the specific age ranges requested, but are shown for the age ranges 20 to 24 years and 25 to 34 years. The number of new HIV diagnoses in England, per 100,000 population, for the age ranges requested, since 1986 have been placed in the Library. Total numbers of new HIV diagnoses are also included.

Sexually transmitted infection (STI) data is collected from genito-urinary medicine clinics. STIs diagnosed and treated by general practitioners or by health professionals in other settings do not form part of this data set.

St. Helens Hospitals

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) doctors and (b) nurses there were in (i) St. Helens and Knowsley Health Authority, (ii) Merseyside and (iii) the North West Region in each year since 1992. [141482]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Stroke Units

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the definition of a stroke unit is under the National Service Framework for Older People's target for every hospital to have a stroke unit by April 2004; [143929]

(2) what specialist (a) equipment and (b) staff are needed in a stroke ward to change its designation to a specialist stroke unit. [143930]

Dr. Ladyman: The formal definition of a stroke unit is still being developed. We would expect, however, that there would be a consultant physician with specialist knowledge of stroke formally recognised as having principal responsibility for stroke services. This consultant would be supported by a multidisciplinary team who are specialists in stroke care. The key elements of a good stroke service are:

vision, drive and leadership;

interagency and interdisciplinary strategic view;

the right workforce;

establishing care pathways;

the right contribution from primary care;

involving users and carers;

having the right long-term social and psychological support;

good use of information technology;

the right clinical governance; and effective management of change.

Tees, East and North Yorkshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on consultancy fees by Tees, East and North Yorkshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust in each of the past three years; if he will list each consultant employed by the Trust; and on what matters they were requested to advise. [143236]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is not held centrally.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been claimed in expenses by the chief executive of Tees, East and North Yorkshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust since her appointment; and what her salary was in the past six months, including bonuses, where payable. [143237]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The chief executive of Tees, East and North Yorkshire Ambulance Service National Health Service Trust took up appointment on 1 June 2003. She receives an annual salary of £85,000 and has received £471 in expenses.

Tees, East and North Yorkshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on wages for (a) management and (b) paramedics by Tees, East and North Yorkshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust in each of the past three years. [143238]

	Expenditure on total senior managers and managers	Expenditure on ambulance staff
2000–01	1,797	13,283
2001–02	1,807	15,399
2002–03	1,827	17,121

Figures for expenditure on paramedics are not available separately from expenditure on all ambulance staff.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to improve the performance of the Tees, East and North Yorkshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust. [143240]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This is a matter for the North and East Yorkshire and North Lincolnshire Strategic Health Authority. I understand that Tees, East and North Yorkshire Ambulance Service (TENYAS) National Health Service Trust has agreed an improvement plan with the North and East Yorkshire and Northern Lincolnshire Strategic Health Authority. This recognises the issues which TENYAS faces and identifies appropriate actions to move the trust forward in 2003–04.

Whooping Cough (Vaccination)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the arrangements for offering adults vaccination against whooping cough; how many adults have been vaccinated in each of the last five years; how many cases of whooping cough in adults have been reported in the last five years; and how many deaths have been recorded. [141845]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Pertussis disease (whooping cough) has been at the lowest levels ever observed in the past five years. Since the introduction of a pre-school booster dose in October 2001 pertussis levels have fallen further. We are continuing to monitor levels of pertussis to fully evaluate the impact of the booster dose. However, because pertussis has periodic cycles over several years, it may be several more years before the impact can be assessed accurately.

The need for a booster dose for young people and adults will be assessed when the evidence becomes available. There is therefore no information on the number of adults immunised with the pertussis vaccine at present as it is not recommended.

Information on notifications of pertussis disease are collected through the NOIDS system (Notification of Infectious Diseases). Information on deaths is collected by the Office of National Statistics (ONS). Information on the number of notifications of pertussis in adults in the last five years is shown in the table. There have been no deaths attributed to pertussis in adults in the last five years.

Workplace Issues Group

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the group looking at workplace issues will report; what the membership of the group is; what its terms of reference are; and if he will make a statement. [142173]

Dr. Ladyman: The long term conditions care group work force team (LTCCGWT) is responsible for increasing the capacity of the work force supporting the delivery of neurology, diabetes, renal and dermatology services. The LTCCGWT is a multi-disciplinary advisory body working in support of the National Workforce Development Board and the Workforce Numbers Advisory Board in drawing up national workforce strategies. It takes a national view of the health and social care workforce pressures and priorities for the long-term conditions client group. Each year the LTCCGWT produces a report setting out its recommendations on work force issues, such as the need for increased numbers of staff and also new ways of working, including skill mix, role extensions and multi-disciplinary working, based around patient needs. This report, along with those from the other six CGWTs forms the overall report to the June meeting of the Workforce Numbers Advisory Board. The 2003 reports from the CGWTs will be published shortly for distribution to strategic health authorities and workforce development confederations. The reports will also be available on the CGWT website, together with details of the group's membership and terms of reference. The website address is: http://www.doh.gov.uk/cgwt/.

Written Answers to Questions

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will provide figures for 2002 for civil service numbers, in the format of box 2.6 of the White Paper, "Your Region Your Choice", column 5511. [143766]

Mr. Alexander: The following table shows the number of permanent civil servants at 1 April 2002 in the format of box 2.6 of the White Paper, "Your Region Your Choice".

Location of permanent civil service staff in the English regions—2002

	Number
London	86,790
South East	57,330
South West	48,240
East of England	28,770
East Midlands	20,600
West Midlands	31,910
Yorkshire and the Humber	35,050
North West	57,440
North East	29,940
England total	396,070

Note:
Figures given include non-industrial and industrial staff and are full-time equivalents.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Nuclear Fuel and Radioactive Waste

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what evaluation she has made of the European Commission proposal for a Council Directive (Euratom) on the management of spent nuclear fuel and radioactive waste (COM(2003)32). [142371]

Mr. Morley: The Government's views on the European Commission's proposed Directive were set out in Explanatory Memorandum 8990/03, a copy of which is in the Library. We remain opposed to the draft Directive and, jointly with Sweden and Finland, we have tabled an alternative text for a non-legally binding measure on spent nuclear fuel and radioactive waste management.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what visits (a) she and (b) Ministers in her Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if she will make a statement. [143164]

Margaret Beckett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House on 9 December 2003, Official Report, column 355W.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many tonnes of chlorofluorocarbons had been converted into inert substances as of 1 October. [142596]

Mr. Morley: Since the implementation of EC Regulation 2037/2000, the total quantity of CFCs converted into inert substances are:

	Tonnes
2000 (from October)	38
2001	197
2002	386
2003 (to October)	352

Total amount converted into inert substances since the implementation of the Regulation is 973 tonnes.

Committee on Industry, External Trade, Research and Energy

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what evaluation she has made of the report 0022/2003(CNS) for the European Parliament's Committee on Industry, External Trade, Research and Energy, dated 24 September, by Alejo Vidal-Quadras Roca MEP; and if she will make a statement on the recent recommendations of that committee on the proposals in so far as they affect United Kingdom policy. [142452]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 December 2003]: The report referred to by my hon. Friend is an early draft of the European Parliament's Opinion on a proposed Directive on the management of spent nuclear fuel and radioactive waste. The final version was issued on 1 December 2003, reference A5–0442/2003.

The Government shares the European Parliament's opposition to the draft Directive. Our views are set out in Explanatory Memorandum 8990/03, a copy of which is in the Library. Proposals for developing a policy for the long-term management of solid radioactive waste in the UK were consulted on in 2001. The Committee on Radioactive Waste Management has now been established to assess all of the options and to make recommendations to Government.

Emissions Trading

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on schemes for emissions trading which are compliant with EU legislation on emissions trading, with particular reference to the (a) energy and (b) aviation sectors. [143060]

Mr. Morley: The EU Emissions Trading Scheme is due to start in 2005 and will cover carbon dioxide emissions from certain industrial activities throughout the EU, including from the power generation sector. The UK is on course to meet the deadline of the end of the year to introduce the Regulations that will implement this scheme in the UK.

The first phase of the scheme runs from 2005 to 2007. The scheme can be expanded in future phases to include other gases and industrial sectors. The European Commission is required to report to the European Parliament and Council by June 2006 on, inter alia, how and whether the scheme should be expanded to other sectors, including transport.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what studies the Government has made of (a) nitrogen oxides and (b) sulphur oxides trading schemes in those countries where such a scheme is operating. [143280]

Mr. Morley: The Government are aware of a number of emissions trading schemes around the world, including those covering nitrogen oxides and sulphur oxides such as the US Acid Rain Programme and the RECLAIM programme for nitrogen oxides and sulphur dioxide emissions in the Los Angeles basin. The consultants that worked on the UK's National Allocation Plan for the EU Emissions Trading Scheme had previously studied these programmes in the US.

Defra is currently drafting the implementing regulations for the EU ETS and while doing so officials have assessed emissions trading schemes in other countries, including those mentioned above, to find examples of best practice in other schemes.

Fisheries

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many speeches have been made by each Minister in her Department since 1 January on fisheries, excluding fresh water fishing, and what percentage this represents of the total number of ministerial speeches made by her Department's ministers in that time. [142727]

Margaret Beckett: Since 1 January, three formal speeches on fisheries issues have been given by Defra Ministers, and represent just under 3 per cent. of the total number of Ministerial speeches made on the Departments areas of responsibility, which also include: sustainable development; the environment (i.e. all water issues, air quality, local environment including noise, waste, climate change, biodiversity, energy efficiency and fuel poverty); all agriculture, including GM; food and rural affairs.

Flood Defences

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much money was invested in flood defence schemes in the Yorkshire and Humber region in each of the past five years. [143306]

Mr. Morley: Defra provides grant aid to the flood and coastal defence operating authorities to support their capital schemes to reduce flood risk. These projects must meet specified criteria and an appropriate priority score to attract Defra funding but decisions regarding which projects to promote and their timing rest with these authorities. The principal operating authority for flood risk is the Environment Agency (EA) but local authorities (LAs) and, in areas with special drainage needs, internal drainage boards (IDBs) also carry out works on a much smaller scale overall.

Investment in flood defence schemes in Yorkshire and Humber was as set out in the table. For the Agency, this represents their total capital expenditure; for LAs and IDBs the figures represent grant payments from Defra which form a proportion of the total grant eligible cost (25 per cent. (45 per cent. for tidal or sea defence schemes) up to April 2001 and 45 per cent. thereafter). Local authorities are eligible for further support for their balance of grant costs from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister through its local authority funding mechanism.

Year	EA	LAs and IDBs
1998–99	8,368	125
1999–2000	8,320	196
2000–01	9,108	74
2001–02	15,482	733
2002–03	23,733	577

Note:

Maintenance and running costs for existing defences are incurred in addition to the above sums

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what guidance has been given to local authorities in receipt of DEFRA funding for coastal and inland flood protection projects on the use of timber from legal and sustainable sources; and if she will make a statement. [142229]

Mr. Morley: On 28 July 2000 the then Environment Minister, the right hon. Michael Meacher, announced the Government's policy that central departments and their agencies will actively seek to procure timber and timber products from sources independently validated as legal and sustainably managed. Mr. Meacher also wrote to all English Local Authorities in 2002 exhorting them to adopt responsible timber procurement policies.

Concern over the use of tropical hardwoods was identified in the mid 1990s. In 1994 the Chief Engineer of the former Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, a predecessor of this Department, wrote to Maritime District Councils to encourage them to consider the use of alternative materials and to procure timber from well-managed and sustainable sources.

The Department's Flood Management Division also organises an annual conference that is well attended by local government representatives. One of the papers in this year's conference was 'Responsible Use of Timber in Coastal and Fluvial Engineering' which covered the selection and procurement of timber and made the government position clear.

Food Smuggling

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to introduce spot fines at all ports of entry against people who smuggle illegal food products into the country. [144585]

John Healey: I have been asked to reply.

The Government has no current plans to introduce spot fines for people caught bringing illegal food products into the UK.

GM Crops

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much genetically-modified maize has been imported to the United Kingdom to be used for (a) livestock feed, (b) poultry feed and (c) other purposes in each of the past five years for which records are available. [143211]

Mr. Morley: The Department does not keep records of this information.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what advice her Department has (a) given and (b) received from the Food Standards Agency on a decision regarding the application for use of Bt 11 GM maize in food considered at the EC Standing Committee on Food Chain and Animal Health meeting on 8 December; [143476]

(2) what discussions her Department has had with the Food Standards Agency regarding the application for use of Bt 11 GM maize in food considered by the EC Standing Committee for Food Chain and Animal Health meeting on 8 December. [143477]

Mr. Morley: The application for approval to market Bt11 GM maize as food is subject to collective EU decision-making under EU Regulation 258/97 on novel foods and novel foods ingredients. The Food Standards Agency is the UK competent authority for this legislation and carried out an independent assessment. A UK position with respect to the authorisation of Bt11 maize in foods was agreed by relevant Government Departments, and the Agency represented the UK in the EC Standing Committee on 8 December.

Mill Lodges

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what guidance she has issued to local authorities in respect of (a) the circumstances in which permission may be given to and (b) the procedures to be followed by landowners wishing to drain mill lodges; and if she will make a statement. [141212]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 December 2003]: In the absence of specific details about the area(s) of concern, it is not possible to say what if any guidance has been given to local authorities.

In terms of drainage, under the Water Resources Act 1991 and the Land Drainage Act 1991, the consent of the relevant operating authority—the Environment Agency in relation to a "main River" or otherwise the local authority or Internal Drainage Board—must be obtained before any work is undertaken which is likely to affect the flow of a watercourse or impede any drainage work.

Under the Water Resources Act it is an offence to remove deposits in watercourses which have accumulated behind a weir, dam or sluice and allow that deposit to be carried away in suspension without consent from the Agency. An example would be lifting a sluice and letting all the silt flow downstream, which might adversely affect the fauna.

Other consents or licences that landowners might need include:

A waste regulation licence, if they intend to backfill the pond;

A need for a fish rescue consent to transfer fish from the pond;

An abstraction licence;

Under some circumstances an Environmental Impact Assessment may also be required.

All these would depend on the circumstances. Landowners should therefore consult the relevant operating authority.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much it had cost to comply with the Ozone Depleting Substances Regulation as of 1 October. [142595]

Mr. Morley: When the Regulatory Impact Assessment was carried out in 1998 it was estimated that the total cost of compliance would be in the region of £370 million. However the actual costs are not known as most of the compliance is being achieved through industry self-regulation.

The Government have provided around £46 million to local authorities to assist them to comply with the waste part of the EC Regulation on ozone depleting substances.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what environmental benefits have been achieved through complying with the Ozone Depleting Substances Regulation. [142597]

Mr. Morley: Through the continued efforts of the member states under EC Regulation 2037/2000 and other Parties to the Montreal Protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer, there has been a decline in the amount of chlorine in the upper and lower atmosphere. This is a good indicator of when the stratospheric ozone layer will recover. At the present rate the ozone layer is expected to start recovering by the middle of the century.

If action had not been taken under EC Regulation 2037/2000 and the Montreal Protocol the ozone layer would have continued to be destroyed, resulting in more ultra violet radiation reaching the ground, which would have had a detrimental affect on plant and animal life.

In the UK, the increase in ultra violet radiation could result in increases in skin cancer and eye cataracts as well a damage to marine life, which also form part of the food chain.

Primates (Imports from Israel)

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many primates, broken down by species, were imported from Israel into the UK in (a) 2002 and (b) 2003 to date; and if she will make a statement. [143915]

Mr. Morley [holding answer given 15 December 2003]: 130 primates were imported from Israel in 2002 and 115 in 2003 to date. All the specimens in question were Crab-eating macaques (Macaca fascicularis).

Primates may be imported only by a zoological or scientific institution under strict conditions. These are that the specimens are kept or bred exclusively for the purposes of educational display, conservation of the species or scientific research.

The specimens referred to have been imported solely for the purpose of scientific research.

Radioactive waste

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research has been (a) commissioned and (b) assessed by her Department into the role of the synthesis of the biologically active genome of bacteriophage phi X174 in the reduction in the toxic impact of radioactive waste. [142922]

Mr. Morley: No research has been commissioned or assessed by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs into the role of the synthesis of the biologically active genome bacteriophage phi X174 in the reduction of the toxic impact of radioactive waste.

Rights of Way

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will set out the timetable for the implementation of regulations under Part I of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000. [142945]

Alun Michael: The following table records the progress we have already made towards bringing the regulations into force as well as our timetable for completing the process. Since my Answer of 15 September, regulations relating to the exclusions or restriction of access have come into force, on 17 November. We have given priority of time and effort to completing these regulations, and now to working on associated guidance which needs to be in place in order for the exclusions and restrictions system to open for business. As a result of this, the timetable for the remaining regulations has been delayed, but we are firmly committed to ensuring the necessary regulations are made in time to allow the new right of public access under the Act to be rolled out as planned.

River Nene

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the pollutant which caused the pollution incident on the River Nene earlier this year has been identified; what levels of the pollutant are still present; how much of the pollutant was discharged; whether the polluter has been identified; and what action is being taken. [143260]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency (the Agency) has not identified the pollutant that caused this incident. Unusually in this case no immediate impact, such as fish mortality, was observed and the effects of the pollutant were identified following routine monitoring of the River Nene by the Agency in May of this year. This makes it likely that considerable time elapsed between the pollutant being discharged to the river and the environmental impact being observed. Under these circumstances, it is difficult to determine how much pollutant was discharged and to establish a link between a pollutant source and the incident.

The Agency await a report from its Special Enforcement team on whether it is possible to link evidence obtained from a possible source with the incident. However this may not be possible due to the probable time lapse between the incident and detection.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what mechanism there is to pass on to the polluter the cost of work to establish the (a) extent of pollution and (b) effect on biodiversity of the recent pollution incident on the River Nene. [143262]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency vigorously follows the polluter pays principle. However, in this case the polluter has not yet been identified. It has not therefore been possible to initiate action to recover costs.

Sheep Identification

Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, what her policy is on the European Commission's proposals on sheep identification. [139848]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government support the Commission's objective to improve sheep and goat identification but are very concerned that they have failed to take full account of the particular needs and requirements of the UK's stratified and extensive sheep industry.

We are currently undertaking negotiations in the Council of Ministers and are pressing hard for a satisfactory outcome for the UK industry.

Tidal and Fluvial Flooding Plan

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will publish the plan for Tidal and Fluvial Flooding in England. [141451]

Mr. Morley: It is intended that the Lead Department Plan for Tidal and Fluvial Flooding in England will be made publicly available in the near future on the Department's website.

Tropical Plywood

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action her Department is taking to reduce the amount of tropical plywood used in the United Kingdom. [143221]

Mr. Morley: The Government are committed to sustainable forest management and is playing a leading role in international negotiations on forests in a number of fora, including the Convention on Biological Diversity, and the United Nations Forum on Forests (UNFF). The Government are also playing a major role internationally to combat illegal logging and its associated trade, in addition to seeking to ensure that the import of endangered timber species is in compliance with CITES, the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species.

Under EU law, a ban on the import of illegally logged timber can only be imposed at EU level. We are therefore playing an active role within the European Forest Law Enforcement, Governance and Trade (FLEGT) process. On 13 October the EU Council of Ministers adopted Council Conclusions providing a broad endorsement of the FLEGT Action Plan, which addresses development co-operation, trade in timber, public procurement, private sector initiatives, financing and investment safeguards, money laundering and conflict timber

The Government are also keen to discourage consumers from purchasing illegally logged timber. For over three years UK central departments and their executive agencies have been required to actively seek to purchase their timber and timber related products from legal and sustainable sources. We believe the UK to be the first country to implement such a policy. The challenge is considerable and implementation has not been without difficulty, but already the effect is being felt in the UK and abroad. The UK Devolved Administrations and many local authorities in England have indicated that they have adopted similar policies or are considering doing so. Additionally, the UK Timber Trade Federation is developing a sustainable timber procurement policy for its members to consider adopting.

Waste Management

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list breaches of conditions of waste management licences relating to the Hartlepool Seaton Meadows Landfill (Licences CLE 223 and CLE 403) recorded by the Environment Agency since 1997; what the nature of each breach was; and if she will place copies of the relevant site inspection reports in the Library. [142437]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The relevant Regional Office of the Environment Agency is compiling the information, and I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Water Leakage

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the leakage rates of each of the water sewerage companies were in each of the last 10 years. [142301]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 December 2003]: Water company leakage data are published annually by the Director General of Water Services in the annual "Security of supply, leakage and the efficient use of water" reports, which are available from the Library of the House. The reported leakage figures for the period 1993–94 to 2002–03 in Megalitres per day were as follows:

TREASURY

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Census)

Nick Harvey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the UK Government treats the 1991 Census of Federal Republic of Yugoslavia as a reliable source of statistical information; and if he will make a statement. [144477]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Nick Harvey dated 17 December 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the 1991 Census of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

ONS has not used the 1991 Yugoslavia Census of Population, and therefore does not have a view on its reliability. For any information you might wish to contact the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe at: www.unece.org.

GDP

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what percentage of GDP was comprised of (a) manufacturing sector and (b) service sector gross capital formation in each of the last six years; [143434]

(2) what percentage of GDP was comprised of gross capital formation in each of the last six years; [143435]

(3) what percentage of GDP was comprised of (a) public sector and (b) private sector gross capital formation in each of the last six years. [143436]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 11 December 2003]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Stephen O'Brien, dated 15 December 2003:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about economic statistics. I am replying in his absence. (143429,143431,143432,143434, 143435,143436)

The information to derive the estimates that you have requested for the six years 1997 to 2002 is available from published sources accessed by the House of Commons Library. I have assumed that as the first three questions relate to net investment that the following three questions are concerned with gross fixed capital formation, excluding changes in inventories and acquisitions less disposals of valuables. This is consistent with the definition of investment used for the ONS Business Investment publication.

GDP estimates are available in table 1.1 (both current prices and chained volume measures) of the ONS publication "Blue Book 2003". Estimates for capital consumption are also available for the whole economy in table 1.1, with information on gross fixed capital formation in table 1.2 (at current prices) and 1.3 (at chained volume measures).

Estimates for gross fixed capital formation by sector are available in table 9.2 (at current prices) and 9.4 (at chained volume measures). Estimates for capital consumption by sector and industry, at current prices and at chained volume measures, are available in tables 3.1.1 to 3.2.2 of the ONS publication "Capital Stocks, Capital Consumption and Non-Financial Balance Sheets", available on the National Statistics website.

Estimates for gross fixed capital formation for the manufacturing and service sectors are available for the period 1999 to 2002 in tables 1.11 (at chained volume measures) and 1.12 (at current prices) of the most recent ONS publication "Monthly Digest of Statistics". Earlier data for these series can be accessed using the 4 letter identifier (CDID) on PUBL, the ONS published electronic series also accessed by the House of Commons Library. The relevant CDID for each series is shown in the Monthly Digest publication.

Barnett Formula

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the contribution of Barnett formula consequences as explained in Appendix C to the Statement of Funding Policy to the allocations for (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) the Northern Ireland Assembly were in each year from 2001–02 to 2003–04 reconciling the provided figures to the entries in Table 2.6 of PESA 2003–04 (Cm 5901) for each of the Devolved Administrations. [144377]

Mr. Boateng: Increases in the Departmental Expenditure Limits for 2001–02 to 2003–04 for the Devolved Administrations were announced in the 2000 Spending Review (CM 4807). The basis for the allocation was explained in the Statement of Funding Policy, published in July 2000.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the levels of expenditure in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales that is both within the assigned budget and within the scope of the Barnett formula for each year from 1998–99 to 2005–06, in the form provided in the analysis of 2002–03 provision in Annex C of the Third edition of "Funding the Scottish Parliament, National Assembly for Wales and the Northern Ireland Assembly: A Statement of Funding Policy". [144378]

Mr. Boateng: The Departmental Expenditure Limits for Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales for 2002–03 to 2005–06 were published in Table B15 of the 2003 Pre-Budget Report (CM 6042). Figures for earlier years were published in the 2003 Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses (CM 5901). Changes in the DELs are determined in accordance with the Statement of Funding Policy.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the Government's estimates were for aggregate revenues in each year from 1996–97 to 2001–02 expressed as (a) totals and (b) percentages of gross domestic product, attributable to (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) Northern Ireland, (iv) England and (v) the Government Office Regions of England. [144380]

Mr. Boateng: Government estimates for aggregate revenues by country and region of the UK are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the Scottish Executive publishes its own estimates in Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the Government's estimates were for net fiscal balance in each year from 1996–97 to 2001–02 expressed as (a) amounts and (b) percentages of gross domestic product, in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) Northern Ireland and (iv) each of the Government Office Regions of England. [144381]

Mr. Boateng: Government estimates of the net fiscal balance of regions and countries of the UK are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the Scottish Executive publishes its own estimates in Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland.

International Financing Facility

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress being made in the establishment of an international financing facility. [144696]

John Healey: The proposal to double global aid levels by providing an additional US$50 billion a year through an International Finance Facility is being taken forward in partnership with the international community. The Government continue to push for further international agreement to the initiative. The International Finance Facility will be most effective if all major donor countries are involved.

The Facility received wide support from other countries at the Annual Meetings of the World Bank and IMF in September 2003. The Bank and Fund have been mandated to do further work on financing for development options, including the International Finance Facility, reporting back at the Spring and Annual Meetings in 2004.

The Annual Meetings also agreed that developing and emerging market countries should be consulted. This process will include a ministerial conference on Financing for Development in spring 2004, chaired by the French Government.

The UK Government continue to build the support in civil society necessary to make the initiative a reality. In February, the Treasury will be hosting a conference bringing together the President of the World Bank with representatives from faith groups, media, business, Government and non-governmental organisations from across the UK.

Productivity Growth

Richard Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the productivity growth in the United Kingdom economy for each of the last 10 years. [144590]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Richard Ottaway, dated 17 December 2003:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question on productivity growth in the United Kingdom economy for each of the last 10 years. I have been asked to reply in his absence. (144590)

The table below shows growth of output per job and output per hour for the UK whole economy from 1993 to 2002.

Annual growth rate (per cent.)

Year	Output per job	Output per hour
1993	3.5	—
1994	3.9	2.9
1995	1.8	1.5
1996	1.6	1.9
1997	1.5	1.4
1998	2.1	2.8
1999	1.1	1.7
2000	2.4	3.7
2001	1.1	0.9
2002	1.4	1.6

Public Expenditure

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the Government's estimates were for (a) identifiable public expenditure and (b) aggregate public expenditure in each year from 1996–97 to 2001–02 expressed as (i) totals and (ii) percentages of gross domestic product, in (A) Scotland, (B) Wales, (C) Northern Ireland, (D) England and (E) the Government Office Regions of England. [144379]

Mr. Boateng: Estimates of identifiable public spending on services by country and region were published in the Corrigendum to Chapter 8 of Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses (CM 5901). Estimates of aggregate public expenditure including non-identifiable spending by region and country are not readily available. Estimates of Gross Value Added by country and region were published by the Office for National Statistics in August 2003.

Public Services (Ethnicity)

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of a person's ethnicity on their access to public services. [143570]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by hon. Friend the Minister for Race Equality, Community Policy and Civil Renewal gave to her on 15 December 2003, Official Report, column 633W.

Savings Ratio

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the savings ratio was in each year since 1979. [144032]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr Clappison dated 17 December 2003:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question on the saving ratio. I am replying in his absence.

The information requested is shown in the table below. The data are presented as annual values for 1979 to 2002.

Household saving ratio

Year	Percentage
1979	10.9
1980	12.4
1981	12.1
1982	10.9
1983	9.0
1984	10.3
1985	9.8
1986	8.2
1987	6.4
1988	4.9
1989	6.7
1990	8.0
1991	10.2
1992	11.6
1993	10.8
1994	9.3
1995	10.0
1996	9.3
1997	9.6
1998	6.4
1999	5.3
2000	5.5
2001	6.7
2002	5.3

The households' series used for these data are for the combined household and non-profit institutions serving households (NPISH) sectors. The accounts for the household and NPISH sectors are currently combined: separate estimates are not available. The above ratio represents households saving as a percentage of total resources.

Textile Jobs

Keith Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many textile jobs there were in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002. [144234]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Keith Vaz dated 17 December 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about jobs in the textile industry.

The latest available data from the Annual Business Inquiry is for December 2002. At that time, there were 148,000 jobs in industries whose primary activity was the manufacture, wholesale or retail of textiles. The figure for December 2001 was 158,000. I have delayed the answer to your question to allow the inclusion of the above estimate for December 2002, which was released on 17 December 2003.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Asbestos

7. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development, what plans he has to ban the use of (a) asbestos and (b) materials containing it in projects supported by his Department. [144412]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Information as follows.

1. My Department have had in place a policy for non-use of asbestos in the UK for over four years.

2. We have undertaken major refurbishment of both our UK offices during this period and the contracts have explicitly banned the use of any asbestos materials. During the refurbishment works we were able to remove (under controlled conditions) all materials containing asbestos and we are now confident that our UK offices are asbestos free.

3. Where DFID directly engages in building activities overseas, strict measures are taken in dealing with existing materials containing asbestos; and no new construction contains asbestos products.

HIV/AIDS

8. Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what assistance his Department are giving to programmes to combat HIV/AIDS in the developing world. [144413]

Hilary Benn: The UK is the second largest bilateral donor of HIV/AIDS assistance to developing countries. Our bilateral funding has increased seven-fold, from £38 million in 1997–98 to more than £270 million in 2002–03. The UK was instrumental in setting up the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, TB and Malaria and has committed US$ 280 million over seven years to ensure it has long term stability of funding. The Government published its Call for Action on HIV/AIDS on World AIDS Day, which emphasises the UK's commitment to AIDS and highlights the need for stronger political direction; better funding; better donor coordination and better HIV/AIDS programmes.

15. James Purnell: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what action his Department are taking to prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS in Asia. [144420]

Hilary Benn: HIV/AIDS in Asia is a critical development issue. With 7.4 million Asians already infected, we are now seeing the epidemic spreading into previously unaffected areas and countries. If current rates of growth continue, there may be as many as 25 million people infected in India and 15 million in China, by 2010. Infections on this scale are of grave concern. If they continue at current rates and meaningful action is not taken, it is likely that by 2020 Asia will overtake Africa as the centre of the epidemic.

DFID's strategy in Asia is to focus efforts on preventing the further spread of the epidemic. In most countries the epidemic is still concentrated in vulnerable groups, principally sex workers and their clients, injecting drug users, and men who have sex with men. The challenge is to prevent spread into the general population. We have seen some success in Thailand and Cambodia from which it will be important to learn.

In addition to support through mechanisms such as the Global Fund for AIDS, TB and Malaria, and to e.g. vaccine research, DFID supports major HIV/AIDS control initiatives in eight countries in Asia. Current commitments are in excess of £260 million. Our focus at country level is on support to the development and implementation of effective national AIDS strategies and plans, in partnership with governments, civil society, the private sector, and other donors DFID also funds regional cross-border initiatives with vulnerable populations in SE Asia, and advocacy work by the Asia Pacific Leadership Forum on HIV/AIDS.

Land Ownership Rights

9. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what discussions he has had with British companies about the support they could offer his Department in assisting developing countries to reduce the impediments to formalising land ownership rights for poor people in these countries. [144414]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID has had contact with a range of British companies and other sources of expertise such as government-owned agencies, research organisations, universities and non-government organisations in the context of its work in Ghana, Guyana, Kenya, Malawi, Mozambique, Rwanda and Southern Africa (South Africa and Lesotho). Our contacts range from simple exchange of information to more detailed discussions about implementation of projects. We fully appreciate the skills and expertise that British companies bring to these programmes. We also endeavour to bring in developing country and international experience where appropriate.

Palestinian Human Rights

10. Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what recent assessment he has made of the impact of the security fence on the humanitarian situation of Palestinians. [144415]

Hilary Benn: The livelihoods of thousands of Palestinians have been drastically affected by the separation of villages from their agricultural land and water resources. The fence fragments communities and isolates people from vital social support networks. Residents are being cut off from schools, universities and medical care. According to the latest Israeli Government projections approximately 210,000 acres, or 14.5 per cent. of West Bank land, excluding East Jerusalem, will lie between the fence and the Green Line. This land is some of the most fertile in the West Bank and is home to 274,000 people. Of those, some 70,000 do not have Israeli residency permits and, as a consequence, may feel it necessary to move east of the fence in order to retain access to basic services.

International Finance Facility

11. Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what discussions he has had with developing country Ministers about the International Finance Facility. [144416]

Hilary Benn: Discussions with Developing country Ministers on the IFF began in January this year when my predecessor Clare Short and the Chancellor wrote jointly to Developing Country Finance Ministers about the IFF proposals. Discussions have continued throughout the year with groups such as NEPAD, African Finance Ministers, and HIPC Finance Ministers.

Iraq

12. Syd Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what role his Department have in establishing a civilian government in Iraq by the Iraqi people. [144417]

Hilary Benn: The Department are playing an important role, in support of the Coalition Provisional Authority, in preparing for the planned transfer of sovereignty to Iraq's Transitional Authority in July 2004.

DFID has seconded over 40 advisers to the Coalition Provisional Authority in Basra and Baghdad to support civilian government during the occupation of Iraq. We intend to commit substantial further resources from early 2004 towards strengthening the capacity of Iraqi central government Ministries to manage the country effectively Work to train members of the judiciary will also begin in 2004.

We will also be prepared to consider support for the conduct of democratic elections in Iraq, and have agreed in principle to support civic education, and other initiatives to ensure that as many Iraqis as possible are equipped to participate in the process of political transition to a democratically elected civilian government.

Mozambique

13. Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what estimate he has made of the monetary value of the support given by British engineers working on behalf of the Department in Mozambique since the 2001 floods; and if he will make a statement. [144418]

Hilary Benn: Several British engineering companies are active in Mozambique including for example Roughtons, Scott Wilson, and WSP.

DFID has assisted the Mozambique Government both through support to the general budget and to specific flood-recovery projects. An example of the latter is a £7.4 million project to repair the main national road crossing the Limpopo valley which was washed away in the floods. Engineering consultants are contracted for post-flood recovery work by the Government of Mozambique under international tenders, and British companies have taken up many of these contracts.

British companies have also been involved in post-flood recovery projects funded by the EC, to which the UK Government makes a significant financial contribution.

India

14. Dr. Francis: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development if he will make a statement on his Department's work towards poverty reduction in India. [144419]

Hilary Benn: DFID provided £161 million of bilateral development assistance to India in 2002–3. In the New Delhi Declaration of January 2002 the Prime Minister looked forward to expenditure of over £300 million.

Our programme helps Government deliver pro-poor policies and services. We are working closely with four focus states committed to poverty reduction, including on their programmes of fiscal and public sector reform, increasing access to basic health, education, and urban services for the poor and empowerment of the marginalised We also support the efforts of the Union Government and civil society in these areas nationwide.

Gender Advisers

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development to which countries other than Iraq his Department has assigned gender advisers since 1997. [141825]

Hilary Benn: Gender equality and the empowerment of women are very important for the elimination of poverty. A large percentage of the poor in developing countries are women.

All DFID staff have a responsibility to ensure that gender issues are addressed in development programmes. However, social development advisers work as part of teams in all DFID country offices and have special expertise in gender issues. They do this as part of their overall role which covers social issues as they relate to all poor people.

Rainforest

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, what changes the Government have made since 1997 to its programme aimed at preserving the rainforests in terms of (a) funding and (b) number of projects; and what the reasons are for such changes. [143220]

Hilary Benn: DFID accounts for expenditure on forestry but does not distinguish between different types of forests. The following figures apply to forests in general and not specifically to rainforests. They relate to bilateral expenditure and are exclusive of spending on research under the Forestry Research Programme, which has averaged about £2.5 million per annum since 1997.

In financial year 1997–98 expenditure was £22.1 million, on 199 projects. In financial year 2002–03 expenditure was £20.6 million, on 99 projects. Expenditure was fairly constant during this six-year period but there was a steady decline in the number of projects. This is a consequence of a focus on a smaller number of larger projects, more directly in support of poverty reduction. In addition, the last six years has seen the closure of a number of smaller programmes, particularly in Latin America.

£ millions

	Total gross public (bilateral) expenditure (exclusive of research)	Number of projects
1997–98	22.1	199
1998–99	19.7	173
1999–2000	23.1	129
2000–01	20.4	112
2001–02	17.9	99
2002–03	20.6	99

Research Strategy

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what research is being undertaken on policies to help prevent failing states. [142646]

Hilary Benn: DFID's Policy Division has established a team on 'Poverty Reduction in Difficult Environments'. This team is developing innovative policy options for working more effectively in places where the state is unable or unwilling to take an active role in delivering poverty reduction. This includes states seen as 'weak and failing' as well as most conflict-affected states.

Through a series of seminars, studies and workshops we are seeking to improve our understanding of the internal and external causes of states that do not focus their policies on poverty reduction. This includes whether it is possible to identify in advance potential problem states, and then use preventative measures.

This issue is a high priority for the Department for International Development. We are also working closely with the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit to develop cross- Government policy on 'weak and failing' states. The Strategy Unit project seeks to work towards better coordination between different Whitehall Departments, and achieve improved policy coherence across Whitehall when dealing with weak and failing states.

World Bank (Fast Track Initiative)

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development for what reasons the UK has made no contribution to the World bank's Fast Track Initiative for countries with serious education needs and strong education plans. [144697]

Hilary Benn: The UK Government are committed to playing their full part in helping countries to achieve the Education for All goals. DFID is the fourth largest bilateral donor supporting basic education and the Department's investment is set to increase further over the next five years—to more than £1 billion—including substantial additional funding for FTI countries such as Ethiopia and India.

At the Fast Track Initiative meeting held in Oslo on 20–21 November 2003 it was agreed that FTI funding will now be extended to all low-income countries that are working towards the EFA goals, and that most additional funding will be secured at country level rather than through a global funding mechanism.

Accordingly, DFID will continue to channel our growing support to education through our bilateral country programmes in the form of long term, flexible and predictable funding in support of the Government's own development plans. We believe this is the best way to provide flexible financing, improve harmonisation and reduce transaction costs. We will continue to press for closer donor collaboration to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of all external education assistance. The FTI has an important role to play in this. DFID will continue to play an active role in the development of the FTI, and will take over chair of the initiative in 2004.

TRANSPORT

Gatwick Airport

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons passengers disembarking flights at Gatwick airport are having their photograph taken; what flights are involved; and how long he expects this measure to last. [140808]

Beverley Hughes: I have been asked to reply.

Following the attack on the World Trade Centre on 11 September 2001 and consequential heightened security measures the Department for Transport instructed the British Airports Authority (BAA) to bring forward arrangements for the full segregation of arriving and departing passengers at the south terminal, Gatwick airport and other airports where this was not already in place.

In order to prevent the circumvention of the immigration control under the new arrangements (by passengers arriving on international flights and leaving the airport via the domestic channel without passing through immigration control) the BAA agreed to adopt an IT system whereby barcoded photo-images of all arriving domestic passengers captured on leaving the aircraft were reconciled at the domestic arrivals channel.

This system has been in operation by Gatwick Airport Limited (GAL) since 1 November 2001. There are no plans to change this system while arriving and departing passengers have access to the same secure areas within the airport.

Hindhead Tunnel

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when work will begin on the Hindhead Tunnel; and what the time scale for the project is. [143602]

Dr. Howells: Subject to the satisfactory completion of the Statutory Procedures and the availability of funds the A3 Hindhead scheme should be in a position to start construction in 2005 and the new road open to traffic in 2009.

Pay-as-you-drive

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effects of encouraging pay-as-you-drive car insurance. [144612]

Mr. Jamieson: Some companies in the insurance industry are currently studying options for pay-as-you-drive car insurance schemes. At least one insurer plans to launch a trial scheme by spring 2004 and we look forward to hearing about any lessons learnt from their trial.

Speed Cameras

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the Treasury expects to receive from each English police authority from safety camera fines in the next financial year. [142533]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The safety camera partnerships are in the process of compiling their operational cases for inclusion in the 2004–05 programme. The deadline for submitting their operational cases is 31 December 2003. The national safety camera programme board will consider the cases early in 2004. The information requested is therefore not yet available.

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the Treasury has received from each English police authority from fines from speed safety cameras in the last 12 months. [142534]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 December 2003]: Six partnerships trialed the netting off scheme in England between April 2000 and March 2002. A further six areas joined the scheme in October 2001. The surplus amounts passed from these 12 areas to the Treasury are given in the following table.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fixed speed cameras there are on the (a) A537 between Macclesfield and Buxton, (b) A534 between Farndon and Nantwich, (c) the A682 between Barrowford and Long Preston, (d) the A54 between Congleton and Buxton and (e) A631 between Gainsborough and Glentham. [142918]

Mr. Jamieson: The information is as follows:

(a) None

(b) One

(c) None

(d) One

(e) None

These roads are some of those listed in the Euro RAP 2003 British Roads Results Survey as being "Britain's persistently high risk roads". They are single carriageway roads; some are remote Peak District areas. Where accidents and casualties are spread along lengths of rural roads, fixed location cameras will be of less value than mobile cameras or other traffic engineering and enforcement measures appropriate to the problem.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fixed speed cameras there are on the (a) A134 between Thetford and the A10, (b) M73 between junctions 1 and 3, (c) A682 between the A56 and the A646 Burnley, (d) A45 between Ryton on Dunsmore and Stonebridge and (e) A6 between Leicester and Derby. [142919]

Mr. Jamieson: This information is as follows:

(a) None

(b) None

(c) One

(d) Five

(e) Two

These roads are some of those listed in the Euro RAP 2003 British Roads Results Survey as being "Britain's most improved roads". They are a mixture of urban and rural roads, single and dual carriageway and one short motorway. Cameras will have been an appropriate casualty reduction technique in some of the cases, combined with other traffic engineering and enforcement measures appropriate to the problem.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what revenue has been received from all safety camera partnerships in each year since the first partnership was set up, net of the funds awarded to those partnerships in each of those years; [142207]

(2) what funds were awarded to each local Safety Camera Partnership in each year since they were set up. [142264]

Mr. Jamieson: Seven partnerships trialed the netting off scheme in England and Wales between April 2000 and March 2002. A further seven areas joined the scheme in October 2001. The amounts passed to these 14 areas and the surplus passed to the Treasury are given in the tables.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fixed speed cameras are operating outside Safety Camera Partnerships; and where they are located. [142237]

Mr. Jamieson: There are currently five police force areas out of a maximum 51 in Great Britain who are not yet participating in the safety camera netting off scheme. These areas do not recover their camera-related costs from fine income and therefore there is no obligation on them to inform central Government about camera activity or number of cameras in operation in their areas. We expect all but Durham to be part of the netting off programme by July 2004.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were (a) killed, (b) seriously injured and (c) slightly injured in the location of each fixed speed camera within a Safety Camera Partnership in (i) the year prior to its installation and (ii) each subsequent year. [142265]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government published information on 11 February 2003 about the performance of the eight areas that trialed the netting off scheme in the report "A cost recovery system for speed and red-light cameras—two year evaluation report." This showed that there had been a 35 per cent. reduction in those killed or seriously injured at camera sites. Partnership performance for 2003 will be detailed in the next report on the netting off programme which is expected to be published in March 2004.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the average speed of vehicles was at each fixed speed camera within each Safety Camera Partnership in the year (a) prior to installation and (b) subsequent to installation. [142267]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government published information on 11 February 2003 about the performance of the eight areas that trialed the netting off scheme in the report "A cost recovery system for speed and red-light cameras—two year evaluation report." This showed speeds were affected in the seven areas where fixed site cameras were used in the following way:

	Change in average speed		Change in 85th percentile speed
	Mph	Percentage	Mph	Percentage	Percentage change in vehicles exceeding the speed limit	Percentage change in vehicles exceeding the spend limit by more than 15 mph

Partnership performance for 2003 will be detailed in the next report on the netting off programme to be published in March 2004.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each safety camera partnership the number of those (a) killed and (b) seriously injured in the partnership area (i) in the year to July 2003 and (ii) in the year to July 2002. [142498]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The data is not available in the periods requested. The data shown in the table is for the numbers of killed and seriously injured road accident casualties (KSIs) for the latest available calendar year in the eight safety camera partnership areas that were fully operational. For comparison the KSI averages are provided for the three years prior to the start of the netting off trial in March 2000.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the policy of the Government is in relation to the reinvestment by safety camera partnerships of revenue from fines in (a) road safety education and (b) highway engineering improvements to improve road safety. [142499]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 December 2003]: The rules for netting off allow fine revenue to be used only to fund safety camera activity which includes education about how effective speed management can improve road safety. Other aspects of road safety education and highway engineering improvement are funded separately in the usual way. The rules for netting off were designed to ensure there would be no benefit to the partnership for installing cameras at places where there were no casualty savings.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will (a) publish and (b) place in the Library the business plans of each camera safety partnership; and if he will make a statement. [142917]

Mr. Jamieson: Each safety camera partnership makes available locally for public scrutiny information about its operational case having taken regard to sensitive operational matters such as the speeds at which cameras are triggered to enforce the limit. Operational cases for 2004–05 are to be produced in common format to allow publication without compromising operational sensitivities.

Teenage Cycling Safety

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has spent on the teenage cycling safety campaign in 2003; how much was spent on preparing a television advertisement campaign on cycle helmets; and what plans he has to promote the wearing of cycle helmets by teenagers in 2004. [144544]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 16 December 2003]: Expenditure on the teenage cycle safety campaign in 2003 was £123,000. Expenditure in financial year 2003–04 will be £173,000 in total once a TV public information film promoting cycle safety is completed.

The Department has no plans to make a TV advertisement on cycle helmets separate to the public information film. We are however running advertisements in 40 secondary school homework diaries to promote cycle safety, which will appear until June 2004.

In 2004, provisional plans include liaison with TV stations to show the public information film when they have a suitable gap between programmes; distribution of posters that promote cycle helmet wearing and the website cyclesense.net to road safety officers in local councils and maintaining the website cyclesense.net.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Analogue Broadcasting

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many households are unable to receive analogue television reception in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland. [144897]

Estelle Morris: According to figures given by the ITC, the percentage of households unable to receive BBC1, BBC2, ITV and Channel 4 or S4C via analogue reception are (a) England, 0.4 per cent., (b) Wales, 2.4 per cent., (c) Scotland, 1.9 per cent. and (d) Northern Ireland, 1.5 per cent. Analogue coverage for Five is not available on a per country basis, however, 20 per cent. of UK households do not currently have access to Five.

Children's Broadcasting

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action she is taking to encourage growth of children's broadcasting on radio. [144479]

Estelle Morris: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) on 4 December 2003, Official Report, column 163W.

Give As You Earn Scheme

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many and what percentage of staff in her Department contribute to a charity through the Give as You Earn scheme; how much money is donated to charity per month by staff in her Department through the scheme; and what steps she is taking to encourage greater participation in the scheme by staff in her Department. [143907]

Mr. Caborn: The number of staff contributing to charities through the Give as You Earn scheme is 20 which represents 4 per cent. of staff in DCMS. The current contribution is £181.99 per month.

We are promoting the Give as You Earn scheme through our intranet and will be featuring the scheme in our staff newsletter in order to encourage greater participation.

National Lottery

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what sustainable development objectives are taken into account when lottery distributors consider applications for grants for lottery-funded projects in relation to pleasure piers; and if she will make a statement. [144248]

Estelle Morris: The Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) is the main distributor for lottery-funded projects relating to pleasure piers. HLF does not have separate criteria for assessing pier applications, but has a policy which states that:

"in order to maximise its contribution to sustainable development, the environmental, social and economic sustainability of a project will be as central a criterion in the assessment procedure as value for money. To fulfil this, applicants will be encouraged to give full and proper consideration to the contribution of their projects to sustainable development". (November 1998).

SCOTLAND

Civil Service

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what dates he has had discussions with the Chancellor of the Exchequer on civil service job dispersal to Scotland since he became Secretary of State for Scotland. [142723]

Mrs. McGuire: My right hon. Friend is in regular contact with the Chancellor of the Exchequer on a wide range of issues, including civil service job dispersal.

Foundation Hospitals

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what written representations he has received from the British Medical Association (Scotland) on the subject of foundation hospitals. [142732]

Mrs. McGuire: In common with all Members from Scottish constituencies, my right hon. Friend and I received representations from the BMA (Scotland) addressed to us as constituency MPs.

Job Losses

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking in response to the loss of jobs in Scotland as a result of out-sourcing to other countries. [142710]

Mrs. McGuire: The Government consider that the best response to low cost overseas competition is to encourage the development of higher quality, added value services. Our economic policies are creating an environment where this transition can occur.

The labour market in Scotland is healthier than it has been for decades. Employment is close to a record high and unemployment is around its lowest level since the 1970s. The prospects for the Scottish economy are good.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Supermarkets

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made on the Supermarket Code of Practice. [143653]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Office of Fair Trading (OFT) is currently reviewing the Code of Practice governing supermarkets' relations with their suppliers. They have taken views from supermarkets, individual suppliers and trades associations representing suppliers. Once the OFT have delivered the results of the review to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, she will take whatever action is appropriate.

Accountancy (Tax Avoidance Schemes)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information her Department has supplied to the US authorities in connection with investigations into accountancy firms' tax avoidance schemes in the past 12 months. [144184]

Jacqui Smith: The Government have not had any requests from the US authorities to supply them with information in connection with investigations into accountancy firms' tax avoidance schemes in the past 12 months.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how her Department is working with the (a) EU and (b) Foreign and Commonwealth Office to ensure that all EU member states implement the law against discrimination in employment on the grounds of age. [143928]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 16 December 2003]: The European Employment Directive provides a general framework for combating discrimination in employment and vocational training, and lays down minimum requirements for outlawing discrimination on grounds of age, among other matters. It is for individual member states to decide how to implement the requirements in their own state.

The Government are committed to introducing legislation to outlaw age discrimination that is clear and workable in the UK. In order to achieve this, we are working with all appropriate stakeholders across Whitehall and wider.

Fibrecycle Waste Processing Method

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what her Department's policy is on the Fibrecycle waste processing method; [144368]

(2) what discussions her Department has had with Estech Europe Limited on the Fibrecycle waste processing method. [144369]

Mr. Timms: I am not aware of any discussions between the Department and Estech Europe Limited. The Department does not have specific policies relating to the Fibrecycle waste processing method.

Free-fall Height Regulations

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what the purpose is of the free-fall height regulations proposed by the EU; whether they are being considered by majority vote; and what assessment she has made of their impact on manufacturers of (a) rocking horses, (b) trampolines and (c) climbing frames; [143846]

(2) whether the free-fall height regulations to reduce the falling length for indoor activity toys will apply to (a) items located in domestic premises and (b) new sales of products. [143853]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 15 December 2003]: The safety of toys is covered by the Toys (Safety) Regulations 1995 which are supported by European harmonised standards. A new part eight to the BSEN 71 series of toy standards, which introduced a maximum saddle height of 600mm for carousels and rocking activity toys, was recently agreed by the European technical committee which develops the standards. The primary intention of this measurement is to identify which toys need to undergo stability testing and it was not intended as a restriction on the maximum height of rocking horses. It has been accepted that an unintentional oversight has occurred and steps are being taken to rectify the matter. In the meantime, the DTI and LACORS (the Local Authorities Co-ordinators of Regulatory Services) have issued advice to local authority enforcement departments and testing laboratories on the current legal situation, emphasising that rocking horses with a saddle height greater than 600mm have not 'become' unsafe as a result of the new standard nor are any already on the market now unsafe for use.

Although trampolines are not covered by the standard, it does specify safety requirements for toys incorporating crossbars eg climbing frames and swings.

The BSEN 71 series of standards are a means of meeting the essential safety requirements of the toys safety Regulations. Those Regulations apply to all toys supplied on the UK market for use in play by children under 14 years of age.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what percentage of GDP was comprised of net (a) private and (b) public investment in each of the last six years; [143429]

(2) what percentage of GDP was comprised of (a) manufacturing sector and (b) service sector net investment in each of the last six years; [143431]

(3) what percentage of GDP was comprised of net investment in each of the last six years. [143432]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 11 December 2003]: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Stephen O'Brien, dated 15 December 2003:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about economic statistics. I am replying in his absence. (143429,143431,143432,143434, 143435,143436)

The information to derive the estimates that you have requested for the six years 1997 to 2002 is available from published sources accessed by the House of Commons Library. I have assumed that as the first three questions relate to net investment that the following three questions are concerned with gross fixed capital formation, excluding changes in inventories and acquisitions less disposals of valuables. This is consistent with the definition of investment used for the ONS Business Investment publication.

GDP estimates are available in table 1.1 (both current prices and chained volume measures) of the ONS publication "Blue Book 2003". Estimates for capital consumption are also available for the whole economy in table 1.1, with information on gross fixed capital formation in table 1.2 (at current prices) and 1.3 (at chained volume measures).

Estimates for gross fixed capital formation by sector are available in table 9.2 (at current prices) and 9.4 (at chained volume measures). Estimates for capital consumption by sector and industry, at current prices and at chained volume measures, are available in tables 3.1.1 to 3.2.2 of the ONS publication "Capital Stocks, Capital Consumption and Non-Financial Balance Sheets", available on the National Statistics website.

Estimates for gross fixed capital formation for the manufacturing and service sectors are available for the period 1999 to 2002 in tables 1.11 (at chained volume measures) and 1.12 (at current prices) of the most recent ONS publication "Monthly Digest of Statistics". Earlier data for these series can be accessed using the 4 letter identifier (CDID) on PUBL, the ONS published electronic series also accessed by the House of Commons Library. The relevant CDID for each series is shown in the Monthly Digest publication.

Industrial Tribunals

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases concerned with (a) disability, (b) sex and (c) race discrimination have been heard by an industrial tribunal in each of the last five years. [143830]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The following table shows the number of cases concerning disability, sex and race discrimination which were disposed of at hearing by employment tribunals in each of the last five financial years.

	Disability	Sex	Race
1998–99	415	1,320	1,140
1999–2000	456	1,110	771
2000–01	772	1,258	1,112
2001–02	618	1,136	829

Norwich Union

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the redundancies declared by the Norwich Union Aviva Group. [142504]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Although the Government very much share the concerns of those immediately affected by plans to offshore services work, the question of redundancies is a commercial matter for the Norwich Union Aviva Group. Earlier this month, Aviva said that it hopes that the bulk of job cuts will come through natural staff turnover or voluntary redundancies. However, we do nevertheless need to understand better what is happening, and to this end we have launched a consultation document and will hold a round-table seminar in the New Year, to help inform the debate on the impacts of offshoring.

Photovoltaic Panels

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what targets were set for the installation of photovoltaic panels in (a) domestic and (b) commercial properties in 2002–03; and how many installations occurred. [143755]

Mr. Timms: Under the DTI's £20 million First Phase of the Major Photovoltaic Demonstration Programme, the target for Stream 1 (small-scale individual systems 0.5–5kWp) in 2002–03 was 300 approvals. This was later revised downwards to 200 approvals to reflect expected demand. This was confirmed by the fact that only 210 applications were actually received, of which 190 were approved. There is no annual target for Stream 2 (group housing and medium/large-scale non-residential buildings 5–100kWp), but the target for the three-year first phase is 140 projects, of which 45 were approved in the first year. 71 of the 190 approvals under Stream 1 were installed during 2002–03, but installation tends to lag three to six months behind approval. For Stream 2, no installations were completed in the first year as the time lag here tends to be six to twelve months from approval.

Post Office Closures

Richard Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assurances have been received from Post Office Ltd. that there will be consultation with local communities on the strategic issues associated with area plans produced under the Network Reinvention programme as well as on individual closure proposals. [140723]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 3 December 2003]: Proposals for closures of sub-post offices under the urban network reinvention programme are put out to public consultation in accordance with the code of practice agreed between Post Office Ltd. and Postwatch. In preparing closure proposals, Post Office Ltd. collect a range of information relevant to the provision of post office services in an area. This includes local authority plans, environmental and transport information, local shopping habits and other local developments and features. Post Office Ltd. is committed to taking full account of this information in preparing an area plan. With the move to area plans, the public consultation period has been extended from four to six weeks during which comments and representations, including new or additional information, can be submitted for consideration by Post Office Ltd. before they reach a final decision.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment her Department has made of the impact of closing local post offices on the Government's programme to reduce social exclusion and poverty. [143507]

Mr. Timms: The Department have made no such study. But the Government regards it as most important that people have good access to postal and Government services and is committed to doing all we can to ensure a viable Post Office network for the future. For the rural network the Post Office has made a firm commitment to maintain the network and prevent avoidable closures. The Government have underpinned that with £450 million of funding. We have also made available an additional £2 million fund to support community post office initiatives.

The urban reinvention programme is necessary to ensure the long-term viability of that part of the network. In return for Government investment in this programme, the Post Office has guaranteed that at the end of the programme 95 per cent. of people living in urban areas will be within a mile of a post office, and the majority within half a mile. Offices in deprived urban areas can only be closed in exceptional circumstances. In addition special arrangements have been put in place to help post offices in the most deprived wards and where there is no other post office within half a mile. The scheme in England provides grant for capital improvements of up to £50,000. Similar schemes have been set up in Scotland and Wales.

Royal Mail

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many items of mail (a) missed their delivery targets and (b) missed their delivery targets as a result of industrial action in each of the last five years. [142137]

Mr. Timms: The number of mail items that missed their delivery targets is an operational matter than falls within the day-to-day responsibility of the Royal Mail Board. I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Research and Development

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the total expenditure and share of GDP on (a) civil and (b) defence research and development was in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02 and (iii) 2002–03; and what the Government share of expenditure was in each year. [144004]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 15 December 2003]: The latest data available for Gross Domestic Expenditure on R&D (GERD) are 2001. Data for 2002 will be available in March 2004.

	Expenditure (£ million cash terms)	Proportion of GDP	Percentage performed in the Government sector[1]	Percentage funded by the Government sector[1]
Civil R&D
2000	15,018	1.56	9	24
2001[2]	16,125	1.61	9	24
Defence R&D
2000	2,526	0.26	31	58
2001[2]	2,690	0.27	16	64

Transtec

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Transtec inspectors were appointed; when they submitted their report; when the report was published; what it cost; and what the remuneration was of each inspector. [144186]

Jacqui Smith: Hugh Aldous FCA and Roger Kaye QC were appointed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 20 January 2000 under the provisions of section 432(2) of the Companies Act 1985. They submitted an interim report to the Secretary of State on 22 January 2001, which was published on 22 February 2001 and submitted their final report on 15 January 2003, which was published on 24 October 2003.

Costs of the inspection (net of VAT) have been as follows:

Hugh Aldous FCA including support at RSM Robson Rhodes and disbursements	2,555,873
Roger Kaye QC including support in Chambers and disbursements	1,025,183
Total cost	3,581,056

Windscale (Decommissioning)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on (a) difficulties encountered and (b) strategies adopted in the decommissioning of the Windscale pile number one at Sellafield; and what the cost of this exercise has been so far. [144506]

Mr. Timms: The Pile One reactor is considered by international experts to be one of the most challenging decommissioning tasks in the nuclear industry. The key challenges include:

Limited knowledge of the extent of damage to the fire-affected core;

Difficult access to some areas of the core;

Ensuring a fire-free environment throughout the work; and Employing suitable remote-controlled machinery to remove hazardous material.

Strategies have been adopted for two phases of the decommissioning. Phase One of the project, that of clearing up and sealing the air and water ducts, was successfully completed in 1999. This work ensured that the reactor continues to be maintained in a condition acceptable to the nuclear regulator.

Phase Two, the current phase, involves removal of the hazardous materials and the treatment and packaging of the resulting waste. Problems with the initial design concept led to a rigorous technical review of the options for dismantling. This review is ongoing.

Safety is UKAEA's highest priority and any decommissioning strategy must be shown to have addressed all known hazards.

Phase One decommissioning costs were £14 million. Phase Two costs to date are approximately £30 million.

Working Time Directive

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service on the working time directive's opt-out clause; and if she will make a statement. [143829]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS) is the first point of contact for all public enquiries relating to employment law. The Department and ACAS are, therefore, in constant contact on all aspects of employment law.

The European Commission are reviewing the opt out arrangements and intend to issue a preliminary Communication, without formal legislative proposals, shortly. We hope that the Communication will present a range of options on the opt out which can be discussed with UK social partners.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Anti-social Behaviour (Vale of York)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on anti-social behaviour in the Vale of York. [144483]

Ms Blears: Neither myself, nor officials in the Anti-Social Behaviour Unit, have received any recent representations about anti-social behaviour in the Vale of York.

Following the launch of "together. Tackling Anti-Social Behaviour" the Government's Action Plan on the 14 October, the together Academy and together ActionLine will both be available in early 2004, to offer advice and information on all anti-social behaviour related matters. In addition, every CDRP will receive additional funding to tackle anti-social behaviour in 2004–05 and 2005–06. Taken together, existing powers and new powers introduced in the Anti-Social Behaviour Act and the Action Plan aim to make a real and lasting difference to the lives of people who are victims of anti-social behaviour.

Asylum

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Palestinian people were specifically excluded from his Department's recent one-off exercise to grant indefinite leave to remain to up to 15,000 families who sought asylum, and had children in the United Kingdom, before 2 October 2000; and whether a decision on all Palestinian asylum cases is due to be made. [140512]

Beverley Hughes: There are no nationalities excluded from the recently announced one-off exercise for families.

Decisions on Palestinian cases were put on hold pending a Court of Appeal judgment received in August 2002. Most of those cases have now been decided and all but a handful should be decided by the end of January 2004.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional budgetary resources have been redirected and allocated to cover operating costs relating to section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 since 8 January. [141791]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate's (IND) resources cover a wide range of activities including the cost of administering work related to section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002. This cost is not separately identifiable within the total IND budget.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what penalty payments Capita have made since 31 January under the terms of their Criminal Records Bureau contract. [142043]

Ms Blears: The Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) contract contains provisions for Capita to pay service credits or liquidated damages for delay or poor performance, with service credits of £1,992,700 calculated as payable by Capita under the terms of the CRB contract from 1 February 2003 onwards.

Departmental Website

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the computer games on (a) his Department's website and (b) websites of bodies sponsored by his Department; on what date each was placed on the relevant website; how many times each has been played; and what the cost of producing each game was. [143400]

Fiona Mactaggart: The Home Office has used games to promote three of its websites.

Backchat and Chatroom Chaos were both used as part of the Child Protection on the Internet campaign to encourage young people to visit www.thinkuknow.co.uk to learn about using the internet safely.

Backchat was launched February 2002 at a cost of £15,000 and has been played 128,853 times. Chatroom Chaos was launched in April 2002 at a cost of £12,000 and has been played 77,905 times.

Kebabathon and Bargain Boost were both used to promote the website www.good2bsecure to students to encourage them to think about home and personal security. The kebabathon was launched in January 2003 in a mailout to 700,000 NUS members and has been played 40,000 times. The cost was £12,000. Bargain Boost was launched on 7 November 2003. It has been mailed to 5,000 students and played 8,000 times to date. A further mailout to 40,000 students is under way.

A game was also used on the vehicle crime reduction website, www.secureyourmotor.gov.uk. Car Secured was launched in February 2002 at cost £5,000. It has been played 12,000 times since October 2002 (Statistics for February to September 2002 are not available because problems with the web analytics software used mean the data are not reliable).

Online games are a cost-effective means to promote websites to hard to reach audiences who would not naturally think of seeking information from Government websites.

Experience Corps

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which organisations were involved in the consultations on (a) licensing street collections and (b) the setting up of the Experience Corps; what criteria were used to select the consultees; and if he will make a statement; [143369]

(2) if he will invite Volunteers in Action to take part in consultations on (a) licensing charity street collections and (b) in setting up of the Experience Corps; and if he will make a statement. [143449]

Fiona Mactaggart: The consultation on public charitable collections was a public one which ended on 2 December 2003. To publicise it a series of events was held around the country to which representatives of charities, professional fundraisers, licensing authorities, police and chambers of commerce were invited. The consultation in hard copy was distributed to all those who requested it. It was posted on the Home Office website and sign posted on other relevant websites.

The National Experience Corps Experts Group reported in February 2001. Although the organisations which make up Volunteers in Action were not members of the Experts Group, the list of people and organisations consulted by the Experts Group included Norman Proctor of Rotary International Great Britain and Ireland, who are members of Volunteers in Action.

Haslar Removal Centre

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when indicative plans for the extension of Haslar Removal Centre were first prepared; on whose authority; and at what cost. [141247]

Beverley Hughes: The indicative plans for Haslar Removal Centre were first prepared in July 2003 at the request of the senior responsible officer within the Department. The cost of drawing up these plans was £20,000.

This was part of an exercise to examine the feasibility of increasing the capacity of existing removal centres. As a result of this exercise, there are no plans to increase the capacity at Haslar.

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the outcome of the Justice and Home Affairs Council held on 27 to 28 November was; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [142007]

Caroline Flint: My noble Friends (Baroness Scotland) and (Lord Filkin) represented the United Kingdom at the Justice and Home Affairs Council in Brussels on 27–28 November.

A list of 'A' points approved (with the exception of item 34) at the Council has been placed in the Library (Documents PTS A 63 15256/03 and ADD 1).

The Presidency concluded a general approach on the draft Framework Decision on drug trafficking but noted four Parliamentary Reserves and that the European Parliament will be re-consulted.

The Presidency also concluded a general approach on the draft Mutual Legal Assistance agreement between the EU and Norway and Iceland and noted two outstanding Parliamentary Reserves. It hoped that the Council Decision authorising the Presidency to sign the Agreement would be adopted on 8 December.

Similarly the proposal for a regulation creating a European Enforcement Order for uncontested civil claims was the subject of a general approach. Lord Filkin noted the UK's Parliamentary Reservation on Article 2. Two other member states had other reservations and the Presidency therefore suggested the remaining difficulties should be discussed at a technical meeting. They hoped to be able to adopt a common position by the end of the year to allow consideration by the European Parliament and adoption of the Regulation in this legislature.

The Presidency noted the conclusions of the last meeting of the Police Chiefs' Task Force and the willingness to make more effective use of liaison officers.

Draft Council conclusions on strengthening community co-operation in the field of civil protection assistance were adopted and the Commission indicated that in early 2004 it planned to present a Communication building on these.

Under Any Other Business four member states, including the UK, confirmed they had passed their domestic legislation implementing the European Arrest Warrant. Six member states indicated that they planned to do so by 31 December 2003 deadline but five member states envisaged some slippage.

Separately, the Presidency proposed the adoption of a charter on the importance of inter-faith dialogue. Following a meeting in the margins of the council the text of a non-binding statement was agreed but will only be adopted when two member states have lifted their reservations.

The Presidency noted the progress made on the Asylum Procedures Directive: they had inherited a measure with 239 reservations on the text but only 37 now remained. Nonetheless given that these related to contentious issues (safe third countries, safe countries of origin, and appeals), the Presidency concluded that discussion should continue under the Irish Presidency, with a view to concluding by the deadline in the Amsterdam Treaty (1 May 2004).

The Commission (Vitorino) reported its work on the proposed minimum common list of safe country of origin to be adopted with the Directive. Work would be taken forward to identify which of the 22 countries that member states had proposed could be included in the list.

One member state was not yet in a position to agree the draft Directive on Minimum Standards for the Qualification and Status of Third-Country Nationals and Stateless Persons as Refugees and so the Presidency noted that discussion would continue under the Irish Presidency, which would aim to agree the Directive before 1 May 2004.

The Presidency reported on the outcome of the seminar, "Towards more orderly and managed entry in the EU of persons in need of international protection" which had focused on the merits of an EU resettlement programme and EU-level protected entry procedures. The Presidency's document aimed to guide the work of the Commission in preparing its report to the June 2004 European Council on legal means of entry for refugees to the EU and improvements to the protection capacity of refugees' regions of origin.

Given member states differing views on the Council Directive on the conditions of entry and residence of third-country nationals for the purpose of paid and self-employment the Presidency would consider future handling. (The UK has not opted in to this proposal).

The Mixed Committee reached a general approach on draft Council Conclusions on the European External Borders Agency, and these were subsequently adopted in the Council itself.

Baroness Scotland stressed our desire to participate as fully as possible in the work of the Agency and the benefits this would bring to all. Two other member states supported. Commissioner Vitorino stressed his desire for the UK and Ireland to participate within the framework of the agency. He stressed that, although there might be institutional consequences, these should not be allowed to undermine the work of the Agency. He also urged member states to reach political agreement on what they wanted from the Agency, stating that only then could the participants' legal positions be addressed.

A general approach was reached on the Sea Borders Agency Work Programme (which was subsequently adopted by the Council) after one member state withdrew its reservations.

The Mixed Committee and the Council agreed a general approach on the Regulations laying down a uniform format for visas and residence permits, and adopted the associated Council Conclusions, which dealt with the need for an additional legal instrument to deal with the storage of biometric visa data.

In the margins of the Council on 28 November Baroness Scotland represented the UK at a meeting with Ministers from the countries of the Western Balkans: Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Serbia and Montenegro.

The UK welcomed the action they are taking or planning to meet their commitments, made at the London Conference and Thessaloniki summit, to fight organised crime and improve border management. Baroness Scotland underlined the need for implementation of these plans and continued co-operation with the EU, with the International Criminal Tribunal for Yugoslavia (ICTY) in the Hague and within the region.

The directors of Europol and Eurojust briefly outlined the work they are doing in the region, although in the latter's case this was at an early stage.

In relation to borders the Commission welcomed some of the specific action plans that countries in the region had developed but stressed that these were just a beginning that they would need to be improved.

The joint conclusions were adopted and the Netherlands noted they would organise a follow-up ministerial conference during their Presidency to assess progress against commitments made today.

Legislation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pages of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation his Department put through Parliament in 2002–03. [141120]

Mr. Blunkett: The Home Office sponsored five Bills during the 2002–03 Session, which made a total of approximately 868 once enacted (printed versions of some of the Bills are not yet available).

These Bills included measures to give the police new powers to deal with anti-social behaviour, deliver end to end reform of the criminal justice system in the most significant overhaul in a generation, modernise and streamline extradition to and from the UK, enable faster and more effective co-operation against terrorism and other serious crime and deliver the most radical overhaul of sex offences legislation in 50 years.

In the case of secondary legislation, the Home Office was responsible for 131 Statutory Instruments which equates to 438 pages of legislation which give effect to measures introduced in previous sessions.

Full copies of all the legislation, together with page numbers are available in the Library.

Non-emergency Telephone Line

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress on setting up a dedicated non-emergency telephone line; and if he will assess 888 as a possibility for the numerical sequence. [142982]

Ms Blears: In our consultation paper, "Policing: Building Safer Communities Together", which was published on 4 November, the Home Office sought views on the introduction of a single, three-digit, non-emergency number for accessing local services. This built upon a previous proposal to introduce a single non-emergency number for the police. The closing date for contributions to the consultation is 27 January 2004. Work has begun to look at the possible scope of such a system. There are a number of models worldwide, including the American 311 system. We shall develop the proposal following the consultation feedback and the scoping work.

Ofcom (Oftel until 29 December 2003), which administers the UK's National Numbering Scheme, has advised us that it may be possible to allocate a three digit number for this service. That will be subject to a public consultation, run by Ofcom, to establish whether the service, which it is intended should be available through all networks and service providers, is objectively justifiable and whether the change required is proportionate to the benefit. That consultation will commence once we are clearer about the scope of the service.

Due to the availability of local dialling within a code area, Ofcom has also advised that the allocation of "888" is not possible without re-numbering all subscribers whose telephone number, minus area code, begins with "8" or "88". It is likely that the three digit number allocated for use in non-emergency cases will begin with the digit "1". We have yet to make a decision about the three digit number.

Regulations (Consultation)

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of regulations introduced by the Department have been subject to a consultation period of less than 12 weeks since the introduction of the Code of Practice on Consultations. [142488]

Fiona Mactaggart: There is no direct correlation between Government consultations and individual regulations. For example, there has not been nor would there be written consultation prior to a statutory instrument being made designating territories under Part 1 of the Extradition Act 2003.

The Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultation came into effect on 1 January 2001. In the period 1 January 2001 to 31 December 2002 the Home Office has published 49 consultations covered by the Code, of which 27 were less than 12 weeks.

Stowaways (Ferries)

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have to introduce penalties for ferry companies who transport stowaways. [140671]

Beverley Hughes: The Government have no plans to introduce further legislation since ferry companies are already liable to charges in respect of stowaways.

Under section 40 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (as amended), where a person arrives in the United Kingdom and fails to produce a valid immigration document satisfactorily establishing his identity and his nationality or citizenship and where, required, a valid visa, the owner of the ship (or aircraft), in which he arrives is liable to a charge of (currently) £2,000 per person. Existing published guidance on carriers' liability charging procedures says that charges in respect of stowaways will be waived where the carrier had done everything possible to ensure that no unauthorised person used the service.

On 6 October 2003 the Government published a consultation document entitled "Carriers' Liability: Charging Procedures: A Guide for Carriers" setting out proposed amendments to that published guidance. In particular, the document proposes changes to the circumstances in which charges will be waived in respect of stowaways and explains in greater detail what is expected of carriers. Copies of the consultation document can be found in the Library and on the Home Office website www.ind.homeoffice.gov.uk/default.asp?pageid=4156.

Unregistered Ships

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of the number of people trying to gain illegal entry into the United Kingdom on unregistered ships; and what steps are being taken to tackle this. [140673]

Beverley Hughes: There is no official estimate of the number of people trying to enter the United Kingdom illegally but the threat from people trying to gain entry illegally on unregistered shipping is currently regarded as low. However the situation is continually monitored and reviewed.

The Immigration Service works in close co-operation with the coastguard, HM Customs and Excise and the police to monitor the movements of small boats. This has included two joint operations this year involving the interception of suspect vessels.

DEFENCE

Army Attitude Survey

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the average satisfaction levels of respondents to the last assessed Army Continuous Attitude Survey were with regard to (a) question 26b, (b) question 28, (c) question 29e, (d) question 37a, (e) question 37c, (f) question 37f, (g) question 18aa, (h) question 18ab and (i) question 18ac; what this number represents as a percentage of total responses received; and how many respondents were in the (A) top and (B) bottom categories of satisfaction. [143616]

Mr. Caplin: From the latest Army Serving Personnel Continuous Attitude Survey, undertaken in December 2002, only the response options to question 28 were expressed in terms of category of satisfaction. The responses are set out in the following table:

Question 28. How do you feel your pay compares to that of your civilian counterparts?	Officers		Soldiers
	Numbers	Percentage	Numbers	Percentage
1. Mine is much better	13	4.0	82	6.0
2. Mine is better	45	13.5	254	20.0
3. About the same	92	28.0	362	28.5
4. Mine is worse	151	45.5	392	31.0
5. Mine is much worse	30	9.0	184	14.5

Army Personnel

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the total cost was of Army personnel removals between garrison towns in the UK in each year since 1990; and how many such removals took place in each year since 1990. [143837]

Mr. Caplin: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the percentage of (a) female and (b) male soldiers is in (i) the regular army, (ii) the Territorial Army, (iii) the full-time Royal Irish Regiment and (iv) the part-time Royal Irish Regiment. [144019]

Mr. Caplin: The percentages of female and male soldiers in the Regular Army, TA, Full Time Royal Irish Regiment and Part-time Royal Irish Regiments are as follows.

	Percentage
	Male	Female
Regular Army	93.0	7.0
Territorial Army	83.0	17.0
Full-time Royal Irish Regiment	91.0	9.0
Part-time Royal Irish Regiment	91.1	8.9

Notes:

Data for the Regular Army and the Territorial Army are as at 1 October 2003 Data for the Royal Irish Regiments are as at 18 October 2003 Data for Royal Irish Regiment are for trained personnel only.

Defence Fire Service

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF Trade Group 8 firefighters (a) are based in Scotland and (b) there are in total; what the annual personnel costs were for (i) firefighters based in Scotland and (ii) all RAF fire-fighters in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [143565]

Mr. Caplin: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Spending

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of how proposed defence spending changes will affect the ability of the United Kingdom to act unilaterally in any future military action. [144691]

Mr. Hoon: The Defence White Paper, Delivering Security in a Changing World, set out our requirement for flexible Armed Forces that are structured and equipped to deliver precise and rapid military effect. The changes the White Paper demands will enhance the UK's ability to conduct limited national operations and to pursue our security objectives when acting alongside allies and coalition partners. As I said in my statement of 11 December (Official Report, 11 December 2003, column 1211), work is currently underway to develop the details of the individual systems and structures appropriate for the policy context set out in the White Paper, and I shall make further announcements on the results of that work next year.

Depleted Uranium

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what recent assessment he has made of the possible effects of depleted uranium exposure on service men and women; and if he will make a statement; [144107]

(2) what his policy is on testing of (a) current and (b) former service men and women for side effects associated with depleted uranium; and if he will make a statement. [144106]

Mr. Caplin: The scientific literature suggests there are no side effects uniquely associated with exposure to Depleted Uranium.

The Ministry of Defence's Biological Monitoring Policy (www.mod.uk/issues/depleted_uranium/du_biomonitoring.htm) is to offer a urine test for uranium to all UK service and civilian personnel on current and future operations where DU has been used. This includes an isotope test (which tests for the presence of DU) for those who may have had high exposures. Other tests will be carried out if clinically indicated.

Former service personnel are being offered a voluntary DU test under the auspices of the independent Depleted Uranium Oversight Board (DUOB). The first tests should begin in early 2004. If DUOB tests reveal detectable DU in the urine, follow-on epidemiological studies will be carried out. Depending on the outcome of these studies, further research may be commissioned.

Iraq

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British personnel (a) serving and (b) having served in Iraq in 2003 have contracted Leishmaniasis. [144129]

Mr. Caplin: At present, there has been one confirmed case, and twelve suspected cases, of Leishmaniasis among Service personnel who have served in Iraq in 2003.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the menu is for soldiers serving in Iraq on Christmas Day; and if he will make a statement. [144469]

Mr. Ingram: United Kingdom Armed Forces personnel serving in Iraq will, wherever possible, be offered a turkey dinner or a vegetarian option.

Military Personnel (Psychiatric Treatment)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military personnel have been treated for mental health problems at the Duchess of Kent Hospital at Catterick in each of the last six years. [144153]

Mr. Caplin: The following table represents the total number of Service personnel, both in-patients and out-patients, treated for mental health problems at the Duchess of Kent Psychiatric Hospital (DKPH) January 1997-March 2003.

Year (January-December except where noted)	Number of military personnel treated at DKPH
1997 (January-February)	91
1997-98 (April to March)	581
1998 (April-December)	351
1999	458
2000	439
2001	451
2002	450
2003 (January to March figures only available)	101

Figures are not available for March 1997.

Network-centric Capabilities

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect he estimates the proposed change of emphasis from frontline platform strength to network-centric capabilities will have on the number of employees within the United Kingdom armed forces. [144689]

Mr. Hoon: As I said in my statement of 11 December (Official Report, 11 December 2003, column 1211), the Ministry of Defence is currently undertaking work to develop the details of the individual systems and structures appropriate for the policy context as set out in the Defence White Paper, Delivering Security in a Changing World. I shall make further announcements on the results of that work next year.

Nuclear Weapons

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States Administration has provided the United Kingdom with information, with particular reference to information on experiments, on the development of low-yield earth-penetrating nuclear weapons under the provisions of the 1959 Amendment to the 1958 United States-United Kingdom Mutual Defence Agreement on atomic energy matters. [143508]

Mr. Hoon: No.

Priory Group

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether service personnel will be working at the Priory Group's facilities for the treatment of service personnel; and what special provision will be made for military casualties. [144133]

Mr. Caplin: The majority of psychiatric referrals will be dealt with by the 16 Defence Community Mental Health (DCMH) teams that are located across the UK. The small number of patients requiring in-patient care will be dealt with by The Priory Group's staff. Each DCMH will make special provisions for Service personnel at the Priory by supplying a trained psychiatric nurse to act as a Service Liaison Officer who will work with The Priory Group on a daily basis and will be on hand to deal with any problems military personnel may encounter. It is anticipated that military casualties will be treated within this system.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which companies bid for the contract to run in-patient psychiatric services for his Department; and for what reasons the contract was awarded to the Priory Group. [144134]

Mr. Caplin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 11 December 2003, Official Report, column 571W, to the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson).

Reserve (Scotland)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the reserve units based in Scotland, (b) their headquarters' location and (c) current strength; what the (i) date and (ii) location of their last deployment was; and if he will make a statement. [144000]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 15 December 2003]: Since the reorganisation of the Reserve Forces under the Strategic Defence Review no Scottish based reserve units have been deployed on operations. However, sub-units, composite units and individual reservists from units based in Scotland have been deployed to support operations in the Balkans, Afghanistan and Iraq. The location and strength of Scottish reserve units is set out in the following table:

School Places

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his Answer of 3 December 2003, Official Report, column 68W, on school places, in what format his Department holds information on the proportion of funding spent by his Department on school places for service personnel which was spent on the independent sector in each year since 1996; and if he will publish that information. [143871]

Mr. Caplin: Expenditure data on Service Education Allowances is only accessible for named individuals. While it is possible to identify what has been spent on any named individual it is not possible to capture cumulative data totals electronically. Manual capture of this data could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Even if this total data were produced it would not identify the proportion spent in the independent sector schools as the same allowance rates are paid irrespective of the type of school and hence independent sector spend could not be isolated.

Service Medals

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with the award of a medal for service in Iraq. [144009]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 15 December 2003]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 6 November 2003, Official Report, columns 768–69W, to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Flook). The case for the award of a campaign medal to recognise service in Iraq is currently with the Committee on the Grant of Honours, Decorations and Medals for their deliberation. I expect to make a further announcement in the new year.

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the eligibility criteria are for the award of a medal for service in Afghanistan; and what medal that is. [144011]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 15 December 2003]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 6 November 2003, (Official Report, columns 768–9W) to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr Flook). I expect to make a further announcement in the New Year.

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to introduce a medal for service during the Cold War. [144013]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 15 December 2003]: There are no plans to institute any additional medals for service between the end of the Second World War and the break up of the Soviet Empire in the early 1990s, a period generally referred to as the Cold War.

Territorial Army

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the monthly recruitment numbers for each of the Territorial Army's recruitment posts in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [143999]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 15 December 2003]: There are no dedicated Territorial Army (TA) recruitment posts. Recruitment into the TA is conducted by individual units, locally for independent units and nationally in the case of specialist units.

The Army does not differentiate the recruitment of British nationals. The Recruitment figures for the TA as a whole, by month, since 1997 are as follows:

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Barker Report

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how he intends to tackle the rise in planning refusals for residential dwellings identified by the Barker Report.[R] [144200]

Keith Hill: The Barker Report suggests that the recent increase in refusals may have resulted from a failure on the part of some housebuilders to respond to the changed policy environment, following recent policy changes, including those set out in Planning Policy Guidance Note 3 (Housing) 2000. It is expected that the rate of refusals will decrease over time, as the policy changes are more widely understood and adopted.

The Barker Report does not identify members' actions to overturn officer recommendations as a key reason for the rise in refusals of housing applications. However, where planning permission for housing is refused by a local planning authority, applicants have a right of appeal to my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister.

Council House Sales

Jon Trickett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much was generated in capital receipts by council house sales for Wakefield Metropolitan District Council in each financial year since 1997; how much of this finance was available to the council to spend in each year; how much was spent on (a) council housing and (b) items unrelated to council housing by the council in each year; and how much remains unspent. [144128]

Keith Hill: The amount of capital receipts received by Wakefield MDC for sales of its council houses since 1997 is tabled as follows:

Capital receipts (council house sales)

	£000
1997–98	7,437
1998–99	7,033
1999–2000	10,923
2000–01	[1]—
2001–02	15,525
2002–03	23,948

[1] This information was not collected on the Housing Investment Programme return for 2000–01. However, the ODPMs' PIA return collects similar information on housing capital expenditure and receipts. In this return, Wakefield reported that £11,248 (thousand) was the amount of capital receipts received from council house sales in 2000–01.

Sources:

ODPM's Housing Investment Programme returns.

Under capital finance regulations, 25 per cent. of net capital receipts arising from council house sales (excluding the value of any related local authority mortgages) are classified as usable. Information on how much of this amount was spent on council housing, items unrelated to council housing, and the amount unspent is not collected centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Developers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to introduce incentives to encourage developers to build on (a) hardcore brownfield sites and (b) polluted sites; and what assessment he has made of the contribution such development could make to increasing housing stock. [144539]

Keith Hill: Budget 2001 introduced a 150 per cent. accelerated payable tax credit for owners and investors for the costs they incur in cleaning-up contaminated sites. This year's pre-Budget report announced that the Government are examining the possibility of extending this relief to include remediation of land that is long-term derelict.

English Partnerships, the Government's expert adviser on brownfield land is currently working to develop a housing gap funding scheme for use by themselves, the regional development agencies and the local authorities. The final guidance on the scheme will be available in the New Year. They have also been invited to develop a Land Remediation Scheme which will enable themselves, regional development agencies and the local authorities to give grants to encourage owners of derelict, contaminated and polluted sites to bring them back into productive use. Both of these measures will help to contribute to the delivery of housing.

The Government's planning policies expects new housing to be secured in the most sustainable way, by expecting priority to be given to the re-use of urban brownfield land in preference to greenfield development, although these policies do not rule out greenfield development where it is needed.

Housing

Mr. Steen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many houses have been built outside local plan boundaries in each of the last five years; and how many of these have been built by housing associations. [144540]

Keith Hill: Planning Policy Guidance note 3: Housing advises that local plans and Unitary Development Plans should identify sufficient sites on the plan's proposals map to accommodate at least the first five years (or the first two phases) of housing development proposed in the plan. Local planning authorities should be monitoring closely the uptake of plan allocations and windfall provision, and the type of that provision in terms of size, type and affordability, but this information is not collected centrally, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Local Authority Funding

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average revised level of revenue support grant per head is for (a) West Sussex, (b) inner London boroughs, (c) outer London boroughs, (d) Tyne and Wear and (e) England; and what he estimates extra total grant payable would be if West Sussex were to be funded at the same level of revenue support grant per head as (i) inner London boroughs, (ii) outer London boroughs, (iii) Tyne and Wear and (iv) the average for England. [144632]

Mr. Raynsford: Provisional revenue support grant (RSG) per head in 2004–05 is tabled as follows:

Area	Revenue support grant per head (£)
West Sussex county council	262.12
Inner London boroughs (including City of London)	913.52
Outer London Boroughs	560.79
Average metropolitan district in the Tyne and Wear area	625.10
England	543.78

The RSG per head figures in the table are not directly comparable since the services provided by West Sussex county council are not the same as those provided by London boroughs or metropolitan districts. London boroughs and metropolitan districts also provide those services provided by the district council within the West Sussex area; while West Sussex county council received an allocation of grant to cover fire services in 2003–04, that are provided by the Greater London Authority in the London area and by Tyne and Wear Fire and Civil Defence Authority in the Tyne and Wear area. In addition the City of London also provides police services. The total England figure includes both district level and police services; neither of these services are provided by West Sussex county council.

The calculation of RSG takes account of a range of factors other than the numbers of service recipients. It includes top-ups for deprivation, pay costs, and other factors such as population sparsity that drive the costs of service delivery in different areas, as well as the relative ability of councils to raise council tax in their areas. Simple per capita comparisons will not therefore be meaningful comparisons of all the factors that drive grant distribution.

If West Sussex county council received £913.52 per head of RSG then it would have received £690,488,660, an additional £492,366,039; at £560.79 per head of RSG then it would have received £423,875.925, an additional £225,753,304; at £625.10 per head of RSG then it would have received £472,484,961, an £411,018,832,163,260, an additional £212,896,211.

Local Government Finance

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister why information on the 2004–05 Local Government Finance Settlement was released after local authorities had agreed their budgets; and how he expects councils to take account of the settlement. [145008]

Mr. Raynsford: The provisional local government finance settlement for 2004–05 was announced on 19 November 2003, and we expect the final settlement to be debated at around the end of January or the beginning of February 2004, in line with the normal settlement timetable.

The statutory deadlines by which local authorities must set their budgets fall some time after the expected approval of the final settlement. The deadlines are; for levying bodies, 15 February; for major preceptors, 1 March; and for billing authorities, 11 March.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how he expects local councils in North Yorkshire to make up the shortfall they are facing following the 2004–05 local government finance settlement; and if he will make a statement. [145009]

Mr. Raynsford: The provisional local government finance settlement for 2004–05 gives all local authorities in North Yorkshire an above inflation increase in formula grant. Councils in the Yorkshire and the Humber region receive an average grant increase of 5.0 per cent.

Ministerial Visit

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions he has held with the Minister without Portfolio regarding that Minister's visit to the tri-Service Emergency Centre in Gloucester earlier in 2003. [144927]

Mr. Raynsford: The Minister without Portfolio and I discussed his visit to the tri-Service Emergency Centre on 5 December 2003.

Planning

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the estimated cost is of setting up the new tariff system in the Planning and Compulsory Purchase Bill as the alternative to the section 106 (Town and Country Planning Act 1990); and whether the section 106 procedure will change under the Bill. [144204]

Keith Hill: The issue of the cost of establishing and operating the optional planning charge system is addressed in the partial Regulatory Impact Assessment which accompanies the Government's consultation document "Contributing Sustainable Communities—a new approach to planning obligations", published on 6 November 2003.

Nothing in the Bill precludes the negotiated route being the same in character as the way s106 operates now. The Government's consultation document proposes some improvements to the way in which planning obligations are negotiated, mainly by promoting good practice, where the developer opts for the negotiated route rather than pay the optional planning charge. We will await the results of the consultation before deciding whether any changes to the negotiated procedure are appropriate.

West Sussex County Council

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will estimate what the level of grant increase to West Sussex County Council in 2004–05 would be if calculated on the basis of increase in population; [143861]

(2) what the level of grant increase would be to West Sussex County Council in 2004–05 if calculated on the basis of increase in population; and by how much this would differ from the revised level of settlement following the announcement in the Pre-Budget Report. [144631]

Mr. Raynsford: The increase in formula grant (i.e. Revenue Support Grant plus Redistributed Business Rates plus Police Grant) for West Sussex County Council would be £7,581,434.

This has been calculated as follows:

(a) Total grant for England in 2004–05 minus total grant in 2003–04 on a like for like basis i.e. £46,116,848,766—£43,705,512,675—£2,411,336,091;

(b) Mid-2002 population estimate minus mid-2001 population estimate for West Sussex County Council i.e. 755,855—754,254 = 1,602;

(c) The result of (b) multiplied by the Share of Assumed National Council Tax given in Annex B of the draft Local Government Finance Report (England) 2004–05 i.e. 1,602 * 0.740845 = 1,186.833690

(d) The result of (c) is then divided by the sum of (c) for all authorities i.e. 1,186.833690 / 377,482.000000 0.003144

(e) The result of (d) multiplied by the result of (a) i.e. 0.003144 * 2,411,336,091 = 7,581,434

Please note that the mid-2001 population estimate used was that published by the Office for National Statistics on 10 October 2002, since these were the population estimates used in the calculation of the 2003–04 Formula Spending Shares. Following the approval by Parliament of the 2003–04 Local Government Finance Settlement, the mid-2001 population estimates were revised. An Amending Report for 2003–04 to reflect the revised mid-year estimates will be submitted to the House for approval in due course.

Since in all areas of England council services are supplied by more than one type of authority the change in population in an area has to be divided between the authorities supplying services in an area. For the purpose of the above calculation we have used the share of assumed national council tax given in Annex B of the draft Local Government Finance Report (England) 2004–05 to split the change in population between types of authority.

The proposed increase in grant for West Sussex in 2004–05 is £17,132,188, this is an increase of 4.5per cent. on the 2003–04 formula grant on a like-for-like basis.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Enterprise Advisers

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many enterprise advisers for schools will be publicly funded in (a) England and (b) the Eastern Region. [143504]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: This is a matter for the Learning and Skills Council. Mark Haysom, the Council's Chief Executive, will write to my hon. Friend with this information and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Academies

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the required admissions policies of Academies; and which academies do not comply with the requirements. [142740]

Mr. Miliband: All Academies are required, by their funding agreements with the Secretary of State, to comply with the Admissions Code of Practice and with the law on admissions as it applies to maintained schools. I am not aware of any Academy which has admission arrangements that do not meet this requirement.

Big Conversation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what visits (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department (i) have made and (ii) plan to make using public funds in connection with the Big Conversation; how many civil servants accompanied each Minister in respect of such visits; what the cost to public funds was of visits by (A) each Minister and (B) civil servants in connection with the Big Conversation; and if he will make a statement. [143165]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Leader of the House on 9 December 2003, Official Report, column 355W.

Boys' Literacy

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the decrease in the percentage of boys achieving level two and above in writing tests at Key Stage 1 between 2002 and 2003, referred to in the Ofsted report on National Literacy and Numeracy Strategy. [144376]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The following table shows the percentage of pupils achieving level 2 or above in the Key Stage 1 attainment tests since 1998, (split into girls, boys and all pupils):

	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002	2003
All
Reading	80	82	83	84	84	84
Writing	81	83	84	86	86	81
Spelling	66	71	72	75	78	—
Maths	84	87	90	91	90	90
Boys
Reading	75	78	79	80	81	80
Writing	76	78	80	82	82	76
Spelling	60	66	67	70	73	—
Maths	83	85	89	90	89	89
Girls
Reading	85	86	88	88	88	88
Writing	86	88	89	90	90	87
Spelling	72	77	77	80	83	—
Maths	86	88	91	92	92	91

In 2003 significant changes were introduced to the assessment of writing at KS1. For the first time marks for spelling contributed to the pupils' overall writing level instead of separate level for spelling being reported. In addition there were changes to the format of the writing test and a new mark scheme was introduced. These new testing arrangements have produced a different distribution of marks and it is difficult to draw conclusions through comparisons with previous years' results. For example a larger proportion of pupils secured the higher levels in writing than in previous years. The percentage of all pupils achieving Level 2B or above in writing rose from 60 per cent. in 2002 to 62 per cent. in 2003; the percentage of boys achieving that level rose from 52 per cent. to 54 per cent. The percentage of all pupils at Level 3 rose from 9 per cent. in 2002 to 16 per cent. in 2003; the percentage of boys achieving that level rose from 7 per cent. to 11 per cent.

It remains a point of concern that boys' achievement in writing at KS1, as at all Key Stages, lags behind that of girls, and the Primary Strategy will continue to support teachers in raising standards further. In spring 2004 new support materials will be offered on improving boys' writing. We will also be piloting the development and delivery of a specialist support package for early years practitioners so that they can begin to tackle the challenges faced by disadvantaged children as soon as they enter the Foundation Stage. A particular focus for the specialists will be to improve the speaking, listening and communication skills of these children.

Class Sizes

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children aged between five and seven in Warrington North (a) were taught in classes of more than 30 in 1997 and (b) are currently in classes of more than 30. [143457]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The requested information is given in the table.

English Ability

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils in London lacked fluency in English on their entry to (a) primary and (b) secondary schooling in the last year for which figures are available, broken down by (i) constituency and (ii) local education authority. [143579]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The available information collected centrally relates to pupils whose first language is known or believed to be other than English. This information has been placed in the House of Commons library.

"First Language" is the language to which the child was initially exposed during early development. If the child was exposed to more than one language and these include English, then English has been taken to be their first language. If a child acquires English subsequent to early development, then English has not been recorded as their first language no matter how proficient in it they have become.

Information on first language is not necessarily a robust indicator of fluency.

Enterprise Advisers (Schools)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills by what date all schools in (a) England and (b) the Eastern Region will have access to an enterprise adviser. [143505]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: This is a matter for the Learning and Skills Council. Mark Haysom, the Council's Chief Executive, will write to my hon. Friend with this information and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Environmental Awareness

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he has taken to encourage awareness of environmental issues in schools. [144212]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Education for Sustainable Development (ESD), which includes environmental awareness, is a statutory part of the programmes of study for Science, Geography, Design and Technology and Citizenship within the National Curriculum. The Department and the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) also encourage schools to consider sustainable development issues within the teaching of all subjects. Since 2001, the Department has funded QCA to provide on-line guidance for teachers.

In September, the Secretary of State issued the "Sustainable Development Action Plan for Education and Skills", which is organised around four key objectives:

1. education for sustainable development;
2. the environmental impact of the Department and its partner bodies;
3. the environmental impact of the education estate; and
4. local and global partnership activity.

Further Education

Mr. Mahmood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research his Department has (a) conducted and (b) is planning to conduct regarding the proportion of students from (i) further education colleges and (ii) schools who receive offers from research-intensive universities; and if he will make a statement. [143641]

Alan Johnson: The Government are considering the need for such a study.

Higher Education

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list (a) current and (b) proposed government grants available to universities for improving and widening social access to higher education. [143073]

Alan Johnson: Excluding student support, the relevant schemes and initiatives are as follows:

Aimhigher (previously called Excellence Challenge) provides grants mainly to schools and colleges to raise the aspirations and attainment levels of young people. The Higher Education Funding Council for England's (HEFCE) Partnerships for Progression provides funds to universities for outreach. The White Paper "The future of higher education" announced that these two initiatives would be merged to form a new Aimhigher programme. Expenditure on these initiatives to 2005–06 is given in the tables.

In addition, HEFCE uses part of its teaching grant to provide a widening participation premium to universities to assist them with the additional costs of recruiting and retaining students from non-traditional backgrounds. The amount for this is £255 million in 2003–04, which includes £10 million from the Department's Aimhigher/Excellence challenge budget. HEFCE's disability allocation (£10 million in 2003–04) provides additional funding to universities to support recruitment and retention of disabled students. Plans for expenditure after 2005–06 will be determined during the next spending review.

£ million

Expenditure	2003–04	2004–05 plans	2005–06 plans
Excellence Challenge/Aimhigher	100	—	—
Partnerships for Progression	20	—	—
The new Aimhigher		126	128
Total non-student support	120	126	128

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which higher education institutions in the North West operate Knowledge Transfer Partnerships; and what steps he is taking to encourage other institutions to participate in this scheme. [143454]

Alan Johnson: A total of nine higher education institutions in the North West received funding for knowledge transfer activities during the first round of the Higher Education Innovation Fund (HEIF). The increase in HEIF funding from £60 million in 2003–2004 to £100 million by 2005–06 will broaden the reach of knowledge transfer activities, including partnerships, through support for less research intensive groups and departments.

Language Study

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils took (a) Japanese and (b) Latin at (i) GCSE and (ii) A level in each year since 1995; and if he will make a statement. [144489]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is as follows:

(i) The number of schools who took Japanese and Latin at GCSE level is:

Academic year	Japanese	Latin
1995	129	814
1996	141	812
1997	145	771
1998	149	740

Learning and Skills Council

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the status of the Learning and Skills Council reorganisation plans in (a) Carlisle and (b) Haringey. [144065]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 15 December 2003]: Section 113A of the Learning and Skills Act 2000 gives the Learning and Skills Council powers to propose establishing, closing or altering school sixth-form provision. Regulations require local Learning and Skills Councils to consult on preliminary proposals before deciding whether to publish formal proposals, which are decided by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Cumbria Learning and Skills Council is currently consulting on preliminary proposals to close school sixth forms in the Carlisle area and replace them with a sixth-form college. The consultation is due to end in January 2004.

London North Learning and Skills Council has consulted on preliminary proposals to close school sixth forms in Haringey and replace them with either a 16–19 school or a sixth-form college. The LSC is now considering responses to consultation before deciding whether to proceed with formal proposals.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many staff have been made redundant at the Learning and Skills Council since its inception in 2001; [144622]

(2) what the proposed target for workforce reduction is at the Learning and Skills Council; and what criteria are used to formulate the redundancy programme. [144623]

Alan Johnson: These are matters for the Learning and Skills Council. Mark Haysom, the Council's Chief Executive, will write to the hon. Member with this information and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Legislation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation sponsored by his Department in 2002–03 was introduced to implement EU requirements. [141134]

Alan Johnson: In 2002 and to date in 2003, the percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation sponsored by the Department for Education and Skills introduced to implement EU requirements is as follows:

(a) 0 per cent. Primary legislation

(b) 1.2 per cent. Secondary legislation.

Literacy and Numeracy

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his assessment is of the likely effects of the teaching methods recommended by the recent Ofsted report National Literacy and Numeracy Strategies and the Primary Curriculum which encourage collaborative rather than passive learning on the disparity in achievement between boys and girls in the Key Stage Two literacy tests. [144578]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Ofsted's report confirms that the National Literacy and Numeracy Strategies have brought about an overall improvement in the quality of teaching of literacy and mathematics, and have successfully introduced teachers to a broader range of teaching approaches designed to motivate and engage pupils. Our new Primary Strategy will continue to support teachers in ensuring that their teaching reflects an appropriate balance of approaches, including both direct teaching and opportunities for collaborative learning, and is appropriate to the needs of their individual pupils. For example, all primary schools have recently received new guidance on strategies for improving pupils' speaking and listening skills, which was a need highlighted by Ofsted's report, and we will be making available in spring 2004 new support on improving boys' writing.

National Healthy School Scheme

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the total cost to public funds of the National Healthy School scheme has been. [144563]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The table shows the level of direct financial support for the National Healthy Schools Standard (NHSS) from central Government sources since its launch in 1999–2000. Information on any additional support from the local NHSS or from local education authorities is not held centrally.

£ million

Year (allocations)	From the Department of Health	From the Department for Education and Skills	Total
1999–2000	2	2	4
2000–01	6	2	8
2001–02	5.8	2	7.8
2002–03	5.5	2	7.5
2003–04	5.5	2	7.5

National Literacy Strategy

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what revisions to the National Literacy Strategy he is undertaking to ensure primary schools meet the Government's targets for reading; and if he will make a statement on the prevalence of synthetic phonics teaching in schools. [144490]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The National Literacy Strategy (NLS) has dramatically increased the Key Stage 2 reading results. Since 1998 there has been a 10 percentage point increase in the percentage of pupils achieving the expected level for their age in the Key Stage 2 English tests, with an increase of 10 percentage points in reading. There have also been increases in reading results at Key Stage 1, with a 7 percentage point increase in the percentage of pupils achieving level 2B or above in the Key Stage 1 Reading tests since 1998. The work of the NLS is now being taken forward within the wider context of our Primary Strategy, as set out in "Excellence and Enjoyment".

The emphasis that the Primary Strategy places on phonics in teaching children to read has had a direct impact on the reading results at both Key Stage 1 and Key Stage 2. The Primary Strategy adopts the 'Searchlights' model of reading, which advocates that children should be taught to read using synthetic and analytic phonics as well as other strategies such as knowledge of grammar and context. We will continue to support the teaching of phonics, and will be producing a supplement to "Progression in Phonics" next spring through the Primary Strategy.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 4 December 2003, Official Report, column 185W, if he will provide the information requested in questions 141460, 141424 and 141425 in the form used to answer 141426. [143373]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Please see attached tables, as per request.

Post-16 Education

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received concerning the reorganisation of post-16 education in (a) Haringey and (b) Carlisle. [144062]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 15 December 2003]: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Schools has met with Haringey councillors, headteachers and representatives of London North Learning and Skills Council to hear their views on proposals to reorganise sixth form provision in Haringey.

Ministers have received a number of letters and e-mails about Cumbria Learning and Skills Council's proposals to reorganise sixth form provision in Carlisle. (David Hart, National Association of Headteachers and John Dunford, Secondary Heads Association, and Eric Martlew, constituency MP for Carlisle, have been invited to meet Alan Johnson and Ivan Lewis at separate meetings to be arranged for the New Year.)

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what criteria are used when the Learning and Skills Council formulate post-16 education reorganisation plans. [144063]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 15 December 2003]: In its strategic area reviews of all post-16 provision the LSC's criteria include that the pattern of provision should:

meet learner, employment and community needs;

improve choice of provision, ways of delivery and learner experience including, where appropriate, developing more distinct provision for 16 to 19-year-olds; raise standards and participation;

enhance responsiveness of the infrastructure and employers' involvement; and strengthen collaboration and progression in the 14-19 phase, the post-19 phase and with HE including supporting the development of foundation degrees.

Where such proposals require reorganisation, there is a national framework of criteria for all reorganisation proposals requiring them to extend participation, improve achievement and standards and be affordable. Proposals also have to show that adequate consultation has taken place and that proper consideration has been given to alternatives.

When considering proposals for 16-19 reorganisation the LSC will also have regard to the five key principles that should underpin the organisation of 16-19 provision agreed by Ministers in September. These are:

underpinning all consideration of 16-19 provision should be a requirement that all provision for all learners should be high quality, whatever their chosen pathway;

distinct 16-19 provision to meet the particular pastoral, management and learning needs for this age group will be the norm, wherever they learn. All young people should be attached to a 16-19 base, including those in work-based training when attending college. Popular and successful sixth-form provision—whether in schools, sixth-form colleges or new distinct sixth-form centres in FE colleges—will be an important part of the pattern of provision and should be encouraged, particularly where there is little or no such provision;

there should be diversity to ensure curriculum breadth. Together, providers need to support a wide curriculum offer for all 16-19 learners in an area. Well-managed collaboration can > enable popular and successful small providers, including sixth forms, to remain viable and to share and build on their particular areas of expertise;

> the pattern for 16–19 provision should respect learner choice. Learning provision for 16 to 19-year-olds will normally be in one or more of the following settings: school sixth forms, sixth-form colleges, distinct sixth-form centres in FE colleges, private or voluntary sector training providers and work-based learning providers;
> plans should offer value for money. Any net costs should be commensurate to the expected improvement in learning opportunities.

The LSC has published detailed guidance on these matters and I have asked the LSC to forward to you copies of the relevant circulars, 02/09: Provider Reorganisations, 03/06: Strategic Area Reviews and 03/07: School Sixth Form Reviews. I am also arranging to send you a copy of the Department's document on the key principles for 16–19 organisation.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance has been given to the Learning and Skills Council concerning the maintenance of post-16 education in voluntary-aided schools. [144064]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 15 December 2003]: The Department's statutory guidance makes clear that local Learning and Skills councils should fully involve local diocesan authorities in proposals for the reorganisation of post-16 provision.

In addition Ministers published in September five key principles that should underpin the organisation of all 16–19 provision. The principles are:

> underpinning all consideration of 16–19 provision should be a requirement that all provision for all learners should be high quality, whatever their chosen pathway;
> distinct 16–19 provision to meet the particular pastoral, management and learning needs for this age group will be the norm, wherever they learn. All young people should be attached to a 16–19 base including those in work based training, when attending college. Popular and successful sixth form provision—whether in schools, sixth form colleges or new distinct sixth form centres in FE colleges—will be an important part of the pattern of provision and should be encouraged, particularly where there is little or no such provision;
> there should be diversity to ensure curriculum breadth. Together, providers need to support a wide curriculum offer for all 16–19 learners in an area. Well-managed collaboration can enable popular and successful small providers, including sixth forms, to remain viable and to share and build on their particular areas of expertise;
>
> the pattern for 16–19 provision should respect learner choice. Learning provision for 16–19 year olds will normally be in one or more of the following settings: school sixth forms, sixth form colleges, distinct sixth form centres in FE colleges, private or voluntary sector training providers and work based learning providers;
> plans should offer value for money. Any net costs should be commensurate to the expected improvement in learning opportunities.

Strategic Area Reviews by the Learning and Skills Council will be based on the principles, which will also provide a benchmark against which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will assess reorganisation proposals that come to him.

Programme for International Student Assessment

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the (a) intrinsic value and (b) relative value of the Programme for International Student Assessment 2000 education survey compared to other recent studies. [143982]

Alan Johnson: International comparisons of pupil attainment such as the OECD Programme for International Student Assessment (PISA) offer insights into how the outcomes of our education system compare with those of other countries. PISA, which in 2000 focused on "reading literacy" of 15-year-olds, allows us to compare pupils at the end of compulsory schooling. Together with PISA, other international comparisons studies, such as the IEA's Progress in International Literacy Study (PIRLS) and Trends in International Mathematics and Science Study (TIMSS), with their different age cohorts and subject content, help give us an objective picture of performance across the primary and secondary sectors in relation to our world partners and competitors, complementing the data coming out of our own national assessments. It seems clear that we are not alone in finding these studies valuable, given the large number of countries routinely taking part in them.

Regulations (Consultation)

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of regulations introduced by the Department have been subject to a consultation period of less than 12 weeks since the introduction of the Code of Practice on Consultations. [142487]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultation came into effect on 1 January 2001. In the period 1 January 2001 to 31 December 2002, the Department for Education and Skills has published 110 consultations covered by the Code, of which 24 were less than 12 weeks.

There is not always a direct correlation between Government consultations and individual regulations. For example, there would not be a public consultation prior to the making of statutory instruments designating bodies as eligible to be funded by the Teacher Training Agency.

School Placement Appeals

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of parents appealed against decisions concerning which school their child should attend for (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in each local education authority in the last year for which figures are available; and what proportion of these appeals was successful. [144351]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

SATs

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the cost, including setting of examinations, printing, postage, marking and publishing SATs at Key Stage 2 was in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [144625]

Mr. Miliband: The costs of setting the exam, printing, postage, marking and publishing of the Key Stage 2 tests are as follows:

£ million

Key Stage 2	Amount
Test development, pre-testing and level setting	1.25
Test printing	0.65
Test distribution	0.55
Marking	10.43
National data collection	0.85
Results publication	0.9
Total	14.63

Note:

The costs relate to the 2003 Key Stage 2 tests with the exception of results publication which are for the 2002 tests. Publication figures for 2003 will not be available until the cycle has finished. The figures relate to the test cycle and not a financial year.

Schools White Paper

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to produce a White Paper following the publication of the Green Paper, Schools: Building on Success in 2001. [144493]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The White Paper "Schools: Achieving Success" was published on 5 September 2001.

Scientific Innovation

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he has taken to inform (a) schools, (b) colleges and (c) universities of the Altran Foundation for Innovation's award for 2004 on the theme of Discovery, Understanding and Enjoying Science through innovation. [144501]

Alan Johnson: My Department has not been involved directly with the Altran Foundation for Innovation's award. I have asked my officials to explore the potential for schools, colleges and universities to participate in this initiative in future years.

Specialist Colleges

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills in how many specialist (a) technology, (b) sports, (c) arts and (d) languages colleges the proportion of selective admissions exceeds 10 per cent. of their pupil intake. [141795]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Specialism	Grammar schools	Selection exceeds 10 per cent. (Non-Grammar)	Total
(a) Arts	5	1	6
(b) Language	24	—	24
(c) Sports	6	—	6
(d) Technology	18	5	23
Total	53	6	59

Our figures suggest that 40 specialist schools selected by aptitude in 2001. Most of these specialist schools which select by aptitude were selecting by aptitude prior to the 1998 Act, therefore some schools select more than 10 per cent. of their pupils on this basis.

Specialist Schools

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many specialist schools have been in special measures during their time as specialist schools. [144605]

Mr. Miliband: The answer is as follows: 16 specialist schools have been in special measures during their time as specialist schools.

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of students in specialist schools were entitled to free school meals in each of the last three years. [144606]

Mr. Miliband: The answer is in the following table.

Percentage of pupils eligible to receive a free school meal (FSM) in specialist schools[1]

	2001	2002	2003
FSM percentage for specialist schools	15.2	14.9	14.1
Number of specialist schools	528	676	982
National average FSM percentage (covers all maintained secondary schools in England)	15.8	14.9	14.5

[1] Source: Annual Schools Census as at January 2001, 2002, 2003.

Notes:

1. Figures cover specialist schools which were operational at the time of data collection.
2. Figures exclude special specialist schools.

Student Grant

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the value was of the full student grant in today's prices in (a) 1973, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) 2003. [143670]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 11 December 2003]: The available information is shown in the table.

Rates of standard maintenance grant payable under a mandatory award[1] for the academic years shown, uprated to 2003/04 prices[2]

	Academic year
Rate of grant	1975/76[3]	1980/81	1990/91[4]	2003/04[5,6]
Parental home rate	2,840	2,950	2,610	1,670
London rate	4,040	4,450	4,130	2,510
Elsewhere rate[7]	3,690	3,750	3,290	2,040
Board and lodging[8]	1,570	1,560	[9] —	[9] —

[1] The rate of maintenance grant, before income assessment, applicable to students normally domiciled in England and Wales and studying in the UK.

[2] In 2003/04 prices based on the September Retail Price Index (RPI), excluding mortgage interest payments, at the beginning of the academic year. Data rounded to nearest £10.

[3] The convention, when showing current values, is to apply the relevant factor of the RPI (excluding mortgage interest payments) to the year in question; however, this factor is not available prior to 1975/76 and so the table shows this as the earliest academic year. The cash values for academic year 1973/74 were £390, £520 and £485 for the parental home, London and elsewhere rates respectively. Those in 1975/76 were £570, £810 and £740 respectively.

[4] Student loans were introduced in academic year 1990/91 to provide extra resources. The 'elsewhere' rate of loan in that year was £420 (£610 in current values).

[5] The rate of grant in academic year 2003/04 applicable to mandatory award holders only i.e. mostly those who entered higher education prior to 1998/99. Those who entered from 1998/99 under the new arrangements receive support solely through loans; grants/allowances are available only for students in particular circumstances e.g. students with disabilities, students with dependents and single parent students.

[6] The values shown relate to maintenance grants only; student loans are also available to mandatory award holders at the (full year) parental home, London and elsewhere rates of £1,500, £2,420, £1,960, giving total support of £3,165, £4,930 and £4,000 respectively.

[7] The 'elsewhere' rate of grant is applicable to students living away from home and studying outside London.

[8] Special grant arrangements applied to students provided with free board and lodging by their college.

Student Loans

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the threshold for commencement of repayment of a student loan (a) was at the time of introduction of student loans and (b) is now; and what the threshold would be now if it had risen in line with the retail price index. [143177]

Alan Johnson: The threshold for repayment of a student loan was £10,000 on the introduction of the income contingent student loan scheme. The threshold is still £10,000. The first point at which borrowers could be required to repay income contingent loans was April 2000. The Retail Price Index figures used to maintain the value of student loans in real terms were 2.6 per cent., 2.3 per cent. and 1.3 per cent. for academic years 2000–01, 2001–02 and 2002–03 respectively. Had the threshold been raised in the same way it would now be £10,630.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what estimate he has made of the annual cost to the Government of the increase in the income threshold for student loan borrowers after 2005; [144570]

(2) what additional annual provision he plans to make to cover the cost of the income threshold for repaying income-contingent student loans after 2005. [144571]

Alan Johnson: We plan to publish a Regulatory Impact Assessment early in the new year which will set out the impact of this change alongside the financial implications of the other policies announced in the Higher Education White Paper.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the interest rate on student loans has been in each year since they were introduced; for what reasons the rates have fluctuated; and if he will make a statement. [144624]

Alan Johnson: The interest rate on student loans in each year since their introduction is set out in the following table:

Interest rates applied to student loans—September 1990 to August 2004

Academic year	Percentage	Academic year	Percentage
1990/91	9.80	1997/98	2.60
1991/92	5.80	1998/99	3.50
1992/93	3.90	1999/2000	2.10
1993/94	1.20	2000/01	2.60
1994/95	2.30	2001/02	2.30
1995/96	3.50	2002/03	1.30
1996/97	2.70	2003/04	3.10

Interest applied to student loans is set at the Retail Price Index (RPI) for the financial year ending in the previous March. As an annual measure of inflation, reflecting the change to prices of goods and services in the economy, this ensures that borrowers repay in real terms the value of the loan they take out.

Teacher Vacancies

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his Answer of 4 December 2003, Official Report, column 191W, on teacher vacancies, what recent assessment he has made of the number of secondary school teachers in Portsmouth; what steps he is taking to increase numbers; and if he will make a statement. [143963]

Mr. Miliband: The number of full-time equivalent regular teachers in maintained secondary schools in Portsmouth local education authority in January of each year was as follows:

	Number
2000	600
2001	650
2002	640
2003	620

Source:

DfES annual 618G survey.

A number of incentives have been introduced aimed at encouraging teacher supply and retention. Students on Postgraduate Certificate in Education courses, for example, receive a £6,000 training bursary as well as having their tuition fees paid by the Government. Those who qualify in priority subjects also receive a £4,000 Golden Hello after induction. The Government will continue to take such measures as it believes appropriate to ensure that teacher supply meets demand.

Teachers

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of teachers working in English schools and colleges were trained in the United Kingdom. [144282]

Mr. Miliband: The information is not available in the form requested. In January 2003, there were 408,400 full-time equivalent regular teachers in the maintained schools sector in England with qualified teacher status (QTS).

Qualified Teacher Status is normally obtained either by successfully completing an accredited course of initial teacher training in England, or under mutual recognition of qualifications arrangements with other countries.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many teacher training places have been provided in (a) higher education and (b) further education institutions in each of the past five years; and what estimate he has made of the number in each of the next five years. [144283]

Alan Johnson: The table shows the number of places on courses of initial teacher training allocated by the Teacher Training Agency to higher and further education institutions in England in each of the last five years. The data do not include places allocated to other sorts of training providers, or places on employment-based training routes.

Allocated places

	1999/2000	2000/01	2001/02	2002/03	2003/04
Higher education institutions	25,955	27,353	28,275	30,183	33,259
Further education institutions	222	231	233	233	313

Teacher Training Agency

We expect the final numbers of places for 2004/05 and indicative numbers of places in 2005/06 and 2006/07 to be announced later this month.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the number of teachers who have been recruited by schools from further education colleges in the past three years. [144285]

Mr. Miliband: The following table shows the number of regular teachers in full or part-time[1] service in the maintained school sector in England in March of each year shown, who were in full-time service in further education in England in the preceding March.

Year moved to schools sector	Number moving
2000	210
2001	300
2002	540

[1] Around 10 to 20 per cent. of part-timers may not be included.

University Students

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many university students there were in the UK in (a) 1973, (b) 1980 and (c) 1990; and how many there are currently; [143696]

(2) how many students from the Bassetlaw constituency entered university in (a) 1973, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) 2003. [143694]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 11 December 2003]: Figures for the number of students who enter higher education are not collated centrally by constituency. The total number of students in HE for these years is shown in the table.

Higher education students[1] in the UK

Academic year	Students (thousands)
1973/74	682
1980/81	827
1990/91	1,175
2001/02	2,163

[1] Covers all students from the UK and overseas on postgraduate or undergraduate courses.

Voluntary Aided Schools

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he has had with the bodies representing voluntary aided schools about their contribution to capital expenditure arising from departmental initiatives. [144067]

Mr. Miliband: Officials in my Department have regular discussions with the Church of England Board of Education and the Catholic Education Service in connection with the funding of work at Voluntary Aided schools.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the contribution that the sponsors of Voluntary Aided Schools have to make to capital projects when (a) the project is initiated by the school and (b) the project is initiated by the Department. [144073]

Mr. Miliband: Voluntary Aided Schools must usually contribute at least 10 per cent. towards the cost of capital work at their schools and for which they receive grant support for the remaining 90 per cent. from my Department. Legislation allows grant to be paid at a rate of up to 100 per cent. in exceptional circumstances, although those circumstances are not defined in the relevant legislation. Our published guidance indicates that such an example might be where Ministers have initiated a specific policy programme which also applies to Voluntary Aided Schools.

West Sussex County Council

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how much of the schools damping grant allocated to West Sussex county council for 2003–04 is as a direct result of the education funding changes in 2003–04; [143866]

(2) if he will list the local education authorities that have had an increase in (a) schools damping grant and (b) local education authority damping grant for 2003–04; [143867]

(3) for how many years he will continue to provide schools damping for West Sussex county council at the 2003–04 rate. [143872]

Mr. Miliband: The Government introduced a new funding system for local authorities in 2003–04, replacing Standard Spending Assessments with Formula Spending Shares. In order to phase in the distributional changes implied by the Education Formula Spending Shares, the Government introduced floors and ceilings arrangements for both the school and LEA funding blocks. All of the "damping" amounts within the school and LEA Formula Spending Shares are therefore attributable to the education funding changes in 2003–04. 2003–04 was the first year of this system within the Schools and LEA Formula Spending Shares and it is not therefore possible to calculate an increase in damping amount for 2003–04 over previous years.

These arrangements will continue for as long as necessary. The actual amount allocated will be determined year-on-year and announced at the provisional local government finance settlement.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what progress has been made towards the creation of a central register for cases of work-related stress in the Department. [141691]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My Department is committed to protect the physical and mental health of its employees by providing a safe and healthy working environment. This includes providing occupational health and employee assistance services that offer professional advice to individuals, and to line managers, to help identify and address stress related issues.

My Department is currently developing a written strategy to help reduce stress-related illnesses and absences building on the guidance in the HSE publication "Real Solutions, Real People: A Managers' Guide to Tackling Work Related Stress" My Department has no plans to create a central register for cases of work-related stress.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Biological Weapons Convention

Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries he deems in contravention of the Biological Weapons Convention. [143493]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 15 December 2003]: The UK routinely monitors the compliance of all States Parties to the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention (BTWC).

The UK is a Depositary Government of the BTWC, which entered into force in 1975, and currently numbers 151 countries.

We continue to view the issue of compliance with the Convention as being of central importance and made specific reference to this point in our statement to the BTWC Review Conference in November 2002.

However, it is not our policy to list or name those individual countries we judge to be in contravention with their obligations.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will reply to the letter to him dated 6 November from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to A. K. Akhand and Nuzmol Mahmud. [144333]

Mr. Mullin: I apologise to my right hon. Friend for an administrative error which led to his letter being mistakenly sent to UK visas for advice rather than to the Consular Directorate at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Staff in the Consular Directorate are now making enquiries in connection with the case and that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary will write to him on completion of these inquiries.

Ethiopia/Eritrea

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with his counterparts in the (a) United Nations, (b) European Union and (c) United States Administration with regard to the resolution of the border conflict within Ethiopia and Eritrea. [142639]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 16 December 2003]: We are in regular contact with the United Nations, the European Union and the US Administration and are working closely with all three on resolving the border issue.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the action that has to be taken with regard to the resolution of the dispute between Ethiopia and Eritrea over their border. [142640]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 16 December 2003]: The UK and other members of the international community will continue to take every opportunity to emphasise to both parties that the Boundary Commission's decision is final and binding and that dialogue is essential for the normalisation of relations between Ethiopia and Eritrea. I hope to visit Ethiopia and Eritrea in January to continue to press this message.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of whether the UN Border Commission in The Hague was acting within its remit in granting the border town of Badme to the Eritrean Government. [142641]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 16 December 2003]: We are not aware of any evidence suggesting that the Boundary Commission exceeded its remit.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of relations between Ethiopia and Eritrea. [144328]

Mr. Mullin: There has been only very limited contact between the Governments of Ethiopia and Eritrea since 1998. We believe that dialogue between the two is essential. We are actively encouraging this, to supplement the final and binding decisions of the Boundary Commission which was established as part of the Algiers Agreement in December 2000.

Guantanamo Bay

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings have been (a) planned, (b) held and (c) cancelled with Mr. Azmat Begg in respect of the detention by the United States authorities of Mr. Moazzam Begg at Guantanamo Bay; and if he will provide the reasons for cancellation in each case. [143510]

Mr. Mullin: No meetings arranged between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) and Mr. Begg have been cancelled by the FCO. A postponed meeting between my noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean and the Muslim Parliament, with a delegation including Mr. Begg, was held on 16 December. This follows an earlier meeting with the Muslim Parliament and relatives of some of the British nationals detained at Guantanamo on 14 October, though Mr. Begg was not among those who attended.

Liberia

Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to support the continuation of UN sanctions on Liberia, including timber; and if he will make a statement. [143494]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 16 December 2003]: Measured and targeted sanctions remain on Liberia, as the security situation is a threat to the stability of the sub-region. Like other members of the UN Security Council, we believe that sanctions should remain until Liberia has put in place a diamond certification scheme, and reformed the timber sector to ensure that these natural resources cannot be used to further conflict. The arms embargo and travel ban should remain until the security situation is no longer a threat to the region.

Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy that the reform of the forest sector in Liberia should be a precondition to the lifting of UN sanctions on timber from Liberia. [143495]

Mr. Mullin: We believe that timber sanctions should remain until Liberia has reformed the timber sector to ensure that this natural resource cannot be used to further conflict.

The Liberian Government must establish authority and control over timber producing areas; oversight mechanisms enabling responsible and environmentally sustainable business practices, and transparent accounting and auditing mechanisms. This should ensure that timber industry revenues are used for legitimate social, humanitarian and development purposes for the benefit of the Liberian people.

Sudan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss with the Sudanese authorities acts of flogging under their penal code, with particular reference to the case of Intisar Bakri Abdulgadir. [144155]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 16 December 2003]: The promotion of human rights is one of the British Government's priorities in Sudan and we raise human rights issues on a regular basis, both bilaterally and as part of the EU-Sudan Dialogue. I discussed the implementation of the penal code in Sudan with the Sudanese ambassador on 2 December. More recently, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development (Hilary Benn), discussed the human rights situation in Sudan in general with the President of Sudan in Khartoum on 10 December.

Our embassy in Khartoum has already raised the case of Intisar Bakri Abdulgadir with the Government of Sudan and will be discussing it further with them. The embassy continues to monitor the human rights situation and to lobby the Government of Sudan.

Uganda

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the situation in Northern Uganda. [143649]

Mr. Mullin: We are seriously concerned about the situation in northern Uganda and the activities of the Lord's Resistance Army. Attempts by the Government of Uganda to defeat the rebels militarily have been unsuccessful. There is a growing humanitarian crisis, with 1.3 million living in refugee camps.

The UK is working with other donors to try and resolve the situation. We are urging the Ugandan Government to pursue a negotiated settlement. At the same time we are providing help to the population in the affected region.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further discussions he plans to have with African Commonwealth countries about the future of Zimbabwe. [144329]

Mr. Mullin: I met with a number of African Commonwealth leaders at CHOGM several of whom shared our view of the need to maintain Zimbabwe's suspension from the Commonwealth. I intend to remain in close touch with African Commonwealth countries over Zimbabwe.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Asylum Appeals

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the average time taken is for delivery of decisions by an adjudicator in asylum appeals; what the maximum time that may be taken is; and how many decisions have been reserved for more than three months in the past year. [144559]

Mr. Lammy: The average time taken for delivery of asylum appeal decisions by an adjudicator, in asylum cases promulgated between 1 October 2002 and 30 September 2003, was 17 working days. There are no statutory limits for the service set on asylum appeal decisions, other than for those cases heard in accordance with the Immigration and Asylum Appeals (Fast Track Procedure) Rules 2003, where a time limit of one working day applies. Information relating to the number of decisions which have been reserved for more than three months in the past year is not available without incurring disproportionate costs.

Lord Chancellor

Mr. Heath: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs when the Lord Chancellor will transfer his powers in relation to the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service to the Minister for Children. [143023]

Mr. Leslie: The Privy Council considered and made the draft Transfer of Functions (Children, Young People and Families) Order 2003 at their meeting on 10 December. The Order includes the Lord Chancellor's powers in respect of CAFCASS. The Order will be implemented early in 2004.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Access to Work Scheme

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what training in deaf-blind awareness staff assessing deaf-blind applicants for the Access to Work scheme have had; and if he will publish the guidelines under which Access to Work advisers work. [140514]

Maria Eagle: Access to Work staff can commission the services of specialist assessors, who have the necessary qualifications and proven experience to provide a thorough assessment of applicants needs.

We will shortly be consulting organisations of and for the deaf-blind, about developing open learning material for Jobcentre Plus staff on the employment of deaf-blind people.

In common with other Jobcentre Plus guidance for staff, Access to Work guidance is produced in electronic form for staff to access and read on-line through the Department's intranet. Leaflets describing the Access to Work programme are available for individuals and employers. Relevant extracts from the guidance can be made available to individuals or organisations in response to specific inquiries.

Art Acquisition

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much his Department has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by his Department since 1997 has been; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by his Department through sales of works of art has been since 1997. [142359]

Maria Eagle: The Department for Work and Pensions has not acquired any works of art since 1997 or raised any revenue through sales of works of art in the same period.

Benefit Payment Arrangements

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the evidence he used to derive the statement that the Post Office Card Account costs public funds at least 30 times more than direct payments into a bank account for clients of Job Centre Plus; and if he will publish the evidence. [144395]

Mr. Pond: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Clark) on 15 December 2003, Official Report, column 685–86W.

The actual costs remain Commercial in Confidence. Information that is held on a commercial in confidence basis is withheld in line with the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, part 2, paragraph 13.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what discussions he has had with (a) the Department for Trade and Industry and (b) the Royal Mail on the advice that he is offering to Job Centre Plus clients about moving to direct payments; [144396]

(2) what the basis is for the Department's advice to Job Centre Plus clients that the Post Office Card Account is not the best option for direct payment; [144397]

(3) if he will publish the targets and benchmarks for the Department regarding the number of Job Centre Plus clients whom they wish to move to direct payment, broken down by (a) current accounts, (b) basic bank accounts and (c) Post Office Card Accounts. [144398]

Mr. Pond: All Department for Work and Pensions information on Direct Payment account options is based on the Government policy in this area which was set out by my hon. Friend the former Minister of State for the Department for Trade and Industry on 17 December 2001, Official Report, column 119–120W.

Jobcentre Plus staff have recently been reminded of the need to ensure that new customers are paid by Direct Payment (including the Post office card account) from the outset of their claim. This advice was intended to equip staff with the factual information they need to provide to customers in order for customers themselves to choose the account which best meets their needs and circumstances. The Post Office card account will not be the best option for them as it cannot receive payments of wages. Post Office Ltd. have also had the opportunity to comment on DWP information material for our customers, including leaflets.

Customers are being provided with all the information they need on all of their account options, including those accounts, which can be used at Post Office branches. It will be up to the customers themselves to decide which type of account they wish to have their money paid into.

The Department has a published Public Service Agreement (PSA) target that, by 2005, 85 per cent. of customers will have their benefits paid by Direct Payment. There are no targets for the number of customers paid directly into a standard current account, basic bank account and Post Office card account.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions who is eligible for the direct payment exceptions service. [142837]

Mr. Pond: We have always recognised that there will be a small number of people who we cannot pay directly into an account. Our plan is to design an exceptions method of payment to properly meet the needs of customers in these circumstances. It is anticipated that it will be a cheque-based solution. Payment outlets will include Post Office branches. We are in the process of discussing the design of the exceptions method of payment with the representative bodies most directly affected.

Correspondence

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the hon. Member for Christchurch will receive a response to his letter of 31 October relating to the disability living allowance claim of Mr. Harvey. [145000]

Maria Eagle: I regret we have no record of having received the hon. Member's letter. If he would forward a copy I will arrange for it to be considered urgently.

Council Tax

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what research his Department has collated about the impact of council tax on older peoples' incomes. [142231]

Mr. Pond: The Department holds information about the impact of council tax on older peoples' incomes from a variety of sources.

The Family Resources Survey is a large-scale annual survey of private households run by the department which collects detailed information about income and about certain expenses, including council tax.

Regularly published information from this survey includes estimates of pensioners1 net incomes after the deduction of taxes, including council tax payments. The Pensioners' Income Series 2001–02 shows that between 1996–97 and 2001–02 the average net income of pensioners before the deduction of housing costs increased by 17 per cent. in real terms, while after housing costs it increased by 23 per cent.

Data from administrative sources shows the number of pensioners receiving council tax benefit. In 2002, 2.4 million families over 60 received council tax benefit.

The Department also publishes estimates of the level of take-up of council tax benefit, in the annual publication income related benefits: Estimates of take-up.

The Department further estimates that with the introduction of pension credit almost 1.9 million pensioner households will be eligible for more help, or help for the first time, with council tax or rent payments.

The Department also carries out calculations to establish the level of income at which pensioners are eligible for help with their council tax. From October 2003, a single person over 65 with no entitlement to disability benefits and an income of £116 could be eligible for maximum council tax benefit.

The Department also regularly receives research from other organisations.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what progress has been made in reducing sickness and absence in his Department; what the principal causes of sickness and absence are in his Department; and what remedial work his Department has under way or is proposing. [140649]

Maria Eagle: The Department for Work and Pensions has targets set by Cabinet Office to help contribute to a reduction in public sector sickness absence. These involve an average working days lost figure of eight days by March 2006, and an interim target of 10 days by March 2004. The cumulative average working days lost figure for the period April to October 2003 was 12.3.

Ministers and senior managers in the Department fully recognise the importance of good attendance. The Department's Executive Team, chaired by the Permanent Secretary, reviews sickness absence on a monthly basis.

The remedial work we have in place includes the following:

A new Departmental attendance management policy was implemented in February 2003. This aims to encourage good attendance and provide support to enable people to return to work as quickly as possible following an illness. Formal unsatisfactory attendance action can be considered when an absence reaches eight days in a rolling 12 month period. To measure the effectiveness of the policy, an evaluation exercise will start shortly.

Each of the businesses within the Department has initiatives in place aimed at getting sickness absence levels down. Jobcentre Plus has an 'Improving Attendance' task force in operation. Its emphasis is on reducing long-term absences (i.e. those over 28 days duration), by either facilitating a return to work, or effecting a termination of an individual's contract. The Department is also participating in the 'Well-being at work' pilots that are being run by the Health and Safety Executive. This initiative is intended to combat workplace stress. In addition, the Department is committed to discharging its responsibilities to disabled people by making reasonable adjustments to the workplace to facilitate an individual's return to work, or to avoid people going off in the first place. A pilot will also commence in January that will involve the early intervention of occupational health nurses in addressing, quickly, those absences that have the potential to become long-term.

Jobcentre Plus Premises

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) if he will list the (a) number, (b) location and (c) size of Jobcentre Plus premises due to be disposed of; and what (i) costs and (ii) savings he expects from the disposal over the life of the disposal contract; [141198]

(2) if he will place the terms of reference of the external benchmarking exercise carried out on the disposal of Jobcentre Plus premises in the Library. [142183]

Mr. Browne: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 15 December 2003:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the disposal of Jobcentre Plus premises. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Rollout of the Jobcentre Plus service across the country is a four year programme, planned for completion in March 2006. We are not yet halfway through the implementation of the Jobcentre Plus service and detailed information on disposals for the whole programme is not yet available. However from the information currently available I can tell you that so far we have disposed of 48 sites, totalling 30,548 square metres and a saving to Jobcentre Plus of £6,249,418 per annum. Those sites are listed in the table:

Strategic, high-level planning has been undertaken for the remaining two years of the programme, 2004–2006, but I am not yet able to provide firm details of premises disposals or surrenders due for that period. Similarly, information on costs and savings from future disposals is unavailable.

We have not carried out an external benchmarking exercise on the disposal of Jobcentre Plus premises. Because of the diversity of the districts, service delivery planning for Jobcentre Plus is a locally-driven activity. In undertaking such exercises local managers have to take account of a wide range of factors relevant to the local community before any changes are made to the premises available to them.

I hope this is helpful.

Jobseeker's Allowance Appeals

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to centralise (a) jobseeker's allowance and (b) labour market appeals; and what the implications of the plans are for (i) appellants and (ii) staff. [142983]

Mr. Browne: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Dr. Jones, dated 17 December 2003:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply direct to your question on what plans he has to centralise (a) Jobseekers Allowance and (b) Labour Market Appeals; and what the implications of the plans are for (i) appellants and (ii) staff. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Jobcentre Plus was formed in 2002 from the Working Age elements of the former Benefits Agency and the Employment Service. Since that time, the organisation has undergone an unprecedented rollout programme, bringing together both parts of the formerly separate operations.

An internal review recommended that appeals would be delivered more efficiently through teams of appeals staff covering all Jobcentre Plus benefits, and also for appeals teams to be organised on a district basis and accountable to the District Manager. This work is now underway and is being led by the Deputy field Director of East of England, supported by district, regional and national tiers throughout Jobcentre Plus.

Improvements to Jobcentre Plus decision making and appeals processes are to be further supplemented following recommendations from the recent National Audit Office report "Getting It Right, Putting It Right—Improving Decision Making and Appeals In Social Security Benefits". It was their view that the centralisation of appeals work, reconsiderations and complex decision making, would achieve financial savings for the organisation and lead to improved standards, better communications and better customer service.

Pressures on staff to achieve demanding targets will be relieved as more resource is freed when these plans are implemented. Centralisation and a more defined management, training apd communications structure will also lead to improved skills of and support to those staff employed to process complex decisions, handle reconsiderations and write appeals. This will provide a better service for Jobcentre Plus customers.

I hope this is helpful.

Pension Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his latest estimate is of the number of pensioners who are not receiving pension credit but are receiving housing benefit and council tax benefit. [144701]

Mr. Pond: Our latest estimate for the number of pensioner households who are not receiving Pension Credit but are receiving Housing Benefit and/or Council Tax Benefit is around £900,000.

Households claiming Housing Benefit or Council Tax Benefit may be a single person, a couple or a family. More than one benefit household can live in one property, for example two or more adults in a flat or house share arrangement.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for West Derbyshire (Mr. McLoughlin) of 9 December 2003, Official Report, columns 416–17W, on Pension Credit, how many pensioner households in each Government Office region he estimates are eligible for Pension Credit. [144702]

Malcolm Wicks: The number of pensioner households eligible for Pension Credit at the end of November 2003 by region is set out in the following table.

Government office region	Estimated number of households eligible for Pension Credit
North East	250,000
North West and Merseyside	500,000
Yorkshire and Humber	350,000
East Midlands	300,000
West Midlands	350,000
Eastern	300,000
London	450,000
South East	350,000
South West	300,000
Wales	250,000
Scotland	400,000
Total (GB)	3,800,000

Notes:

1. Estimates are done on a benefit unit basis (single pensioner or pensioner couple).
2. Figures do not include care home cases.
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest 50,000.

Post Offices

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what arrangements he will put in place to pay benefits in urban areas where the Royal Mail has closed post office outlets and no services are available within two miles of claimants' homes. [144175]

Mr. Pond: The Government are committed to doing all they can to ensure a viable Post Office network for the future. We are investing very substantial sums in supporting the transformation of the network—some £2 billion in total over the next five years. The Post Office in turn has guaranteed that, even after the urban reinvention programme, 95 per cent. of people living in urban areas will be within a mile of a Post Office, the majority within half a mile.

Direct Payment and the introduction of universal banking services has provided customers with a choice of options as to how they can access their money including, cash machines, via the cashback facilities offered by some retailers, over the counter at banks and building societies and through Post Office branches.

Small Businesses

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether his Department uses a database of individual small businesses for consultation purposes. [142474]

Mr. Browne: When conducting public consultation exercises governed by the Cabinet Office Code of Practice, the Department for Work and Pensions draws on a variety of sources to ensure consultations are targeted as effectively as possible including small businesses as appropriate. The Department has access to the Small Business Service to help identify appropriate small businesses.

Remploy

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many Remploy employees have subsequently taken up jobs in the open labour market in each of the last 10 years. [143228]

Maria Eagle: Each year Remploy helps disabled people, where appropriate, to progress to unsupported employment with a mainstream employer. Since the implementation of the company's modernisation strategy this has become a key element in its programme to support disabled people.

	Progressions to open employment
1994–95	118
1995–96	177
1996–97	182
1997–98	225
1998–99	347
1999–2000	536
2000–01	537
2001–02	1,243
2002–03	1,610
2003–04	1,650 (target)

Note:

Figures for 1994–98 include people moving from Remploy Factories to supported employment with a mainstream employer. From 1998–99 onwards, figures relate only to the number of people working in the open labour market.

Remploy Audited Accounts

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the investment by Remploy in maintaining and upgrading exisiting sites, as specified in the Remploy 21 agreement. [143229]

Maria Eagle: Remploy 21 is the company's modernisation strategy to establish itself in businesses that mirror growth sectors of the economy. Since 2000, Remploy has moved from 36 disparate businesses mainly in traditional manufacturing to 10 competitive national businesses with an increasing focus on the service sector. To support this programme it has invested £4 million in the maintenance and upgrading of existing sites.

Remploy is in the process of surveying all sites as part of this activity; the expectation is that at least £1 million annually will be allocated to further site improvements.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the strategic decision by Remploy management to close owned factories and to move to leased units. [143230]

Maria Eagle: Remploy owns a significant majority of its factory sites and this will continue to be the case following the modernisation plans the Company currently considers necessary over the next few years. In the long-term, if Remploy were to carry out all potential relocation plans, they would have a total of 50 sites owned and 31 leased. In every case Remploy will consider upgrading the existing site, purchasing or building at a new site or leasing a site. Remploy has only entered into agreements to lease factory sites where it has made business sense.

Leased premises tend to be acquired for a minimum of 15 years and occasionally for longer periods. This is normal commercial practice and recognises that, because business requirements evolve over time, there must therefore be a corresponding ability to evolve the estates strategy to ensure that the facilities match business and learning objectives.

The Company's approach to providing better and more modern facilities in Remploy locations is primarily to improve business opportunities that will in turn lead to more opportunities for growth in employment levels.

Since 2000, Remploy has invested in new or improved sites in Acton, Barnsley, Bradford, Gateshead, Lanarkshire, and North Staffordshire. There are also plans, some of which are already under way to replace existing facilities in Abertillery, Bristol, Holloway, Preston and St. Helens. All these sites are leased.

The above sites produced proceeds of sale of £5.7 million. At the same time, the Company invested £5.9 million on fitting out the replacement sites; consequently that has been a net outflow of investment. The majority of the sales proceeds arose from the sales of Acton and Bristol (£3.5 million of the £5.7 million) where there were opportunities to take advantage of site development potential. In other cases, the proceeds were very modest, reflecting the individual constraints of the existing site.

The Company's growth and investment plans are discussed with the Government on a regular basis. It should be noted that Remploy cannot sell a factory without securing the Government's approval. The Government will only agree to the sale where a case is presented which demonstrates the business sense of the proposal.

Standard Housing Allowance

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what representations he has received regarding the introduction of a standard housing allowance; and if he will make a statement. [143835]

Mr. Pond: We consulted both formally and informally on the Government's proposals for a Local Housing Allowance.

The formal consultation exercise was conducted through the Social Security Advisory Committee. The Committee received 73 responses from both individuals and organisations with an interest in the Local Housing Allowance reforms. Our response is set out on the Command Paper 5955 which was presented to Parliament on 24 September 2003; a copy is in the Library.

HEALTH

Bed Blocking

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance his Department has given to social services departments to prepare for the commencement of fines for bed blocking. [144384]

Dr. Ladyman: In 2003–04 the Delayed Discharges Grant of £50.8 million means that social service departments will retain a proportion of the grant provided they improve the performance compared to levels of delay in March 2003. Additionally the Department has provided guidance, a dedicated website (www.doh.gov.uk/reimbursement) and an implementation team to support social services and national health service partners in preparing for charging for delayed discharges.

Care Homes

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those areas in which (a) there is a shortage of places in care homes at the price the local council wants to pay and (b) there are so many spare places available that a council can buy all the places it needs at a rate lower than the rate at which many providers wish to trade. [142968]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 9 December 2003]: I made this general statement based upon conversations my officials have had with some councils and independent providers. However, I would not be surprised if every council felt there was a shortage of places at the price they wanted to pay. And I would not be surprised if in every council area there are some providers who feel they are faced with a price that is below the level at which they wish to trade. Our aim must be to create a market place that is felt to be fair by commissioners and providers of services alike.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many self-funding residents were in (a) residential care homes and (b) nursing homes on the last date for which figures are available. [144292]

Dr. Ladyman: There were 42,000 self-funders receiving national health service-funded nursing care in nursing homes in England in December 2002. Further details can be found on the Department's website at: www.doh.gov.uk/jointunit/nhsfundednursingcare Information regarding the number of self-funders in residential care homes is not kept centrally.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average weekly cost to self-funding residents in residential care and nursing homes was in the last period for which figures are available. [144293]

Dr. Ladyman: Information regarding the average weekly cost to self-funding residents in residential and nursing homes is not kept centrally. Fees levels for self-funders are a matter negotiated between the care home and the individual requiring care, or their representive.

Chemotherapy-induced Anaemia

Mr. Havard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has drawn up a list of stakeholders for the technology appraisal of erythropoietin in chemotherapy-induced anaemia; and if he will publish this list; [144472]

(2) what the scope of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence technology appraisal of erythropoietin for chemotherapy-induced anaemia will be; and when consultation will begin; [144473]

(3) if he will ensure that NHS trusts and primary care trusts do not limit funding for erythropoietin as a treatment for chemotherapy-induced anaemia during the National Institute for Clinical Excellence technology appraisal into its greater use. [144474]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The use of erythropoetin (EPO) for treating chemotherapy-induced anaemia has been referred to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) as part of its "ninth wave" work programme. The ninth wave was referred to NICE in October 2003.

All information relating to the NICE appraisal of EPO will be on its website at: www.nice.org.uk on 23 December 2003. This information will include a planned date for when the final scope and list of stakeholders for the appraisal will be published. Detailed questions about the process and timetable for technology appraisal are matters for the chief executive of NICE.

Health Service Circular 1999/176 asks national health service bodies to continue with local arrangements for the managed introduction of new technologies where guidance from NICE is not available. These arrangements should involve an assessment of all the available evidence. Funding for such treatments should not be withheld simply because of an absence of guidance from NICE.

Choice and Plurality Policies

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information will be provided to enable patients to choose health care providers under the Choice and Plurality policies. [140619]

Mr. Hutton: Patients will require information on waiting times, convenience, patient experience and clinical quality to support their choice of hospital for elective surgery. nhs.uk already provides information on waiting times and star ratings. We will develop this site to provide a wider range of information to support choice. Primary care trusts will be asked to ensure that appropriate information is also made available in hard copies and in forms which are accessible by individuals with sensory impairments.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the possible impact of institutional resistance on the implementation of the Choice and Plurality policies. [140621]

Mr. Hutton: Increasing patient choice will require a change in culture for national health service staff and indeed, for patients. Staff and patients are broadly supportive of the principle of extending patient choice. However, we need to work closely with staff and patients on the detailed implementation of our patient choice policies to ensure that we retain that support. The new financial framework, Payment by Results, will provide new incentives to providers to attract patients. Our plurality policies will help secure the capacity needed to deliver the improved waiting times patients expect, and will allow a greater range of choices for patients. The biggest safeguard against any institutional resistance, however, is likely to be the attitude of the patients themselves. The experience from London and other choice pilots is that once offered choice over where and when their treatment is provided, many patients exercise these new opportunities.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures will be put in place to extend choice of health care provider to patients who live in isolated rural communities. [140623]

Mr. Hutton: We recognise that patients in isolated rural communities may find it more difficult to access the same range of choices as others. We are exploring options for primary care trusts to provide greater support for patients living in more isolated rural communities. These could include peripatetic patient care advisers, the use of mobile service, for example, the mobile cataract surgery service being introduced in many areas from the spring of 2004. We will be including rural representatives of patients, patient groups and local authorities in these discussions, so that they are able to influence the Department's final policy guidance on choice at referral.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the percentage occupancy rate of in-patient care which would need to be maintained to provide the capacity to enable patients to choose a health care provider. [140625]

Mr. Hutton: We are investing in substantial and sustainable increases in national health service capacity to improve quality and allow us to deliver the shorter waiting times patients expect. Choice of hospital for patients requiring elective surgery will be introduced alongside this additional capacity. By December 2005, patients will choose at the point of general practitioner referral, so patient choice will not be directly dependent on the inpatient occupancy rate.

Community Health Councils

Rob Marris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff were made redundant as a result of the closure of community health councils. [144448]

Ms Rosie Winterton: An estimated 470 staff were made redundant as a result of the closure of community health councils. The final numbers will be confirmed in January.

Coronary Care

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he proposes to take to prevent people of all ages from dying from fatal cardiac arhythmias. [143978]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The focus of this work is on early diagnosis for this group of patients. The Department is investing in diagnosis, investigation and treatment of cardiac related problems. In November 2001, the Department announced £65 million from the New Opportunities Fund (NOF) and £60 million from the Department of Health to enable the rapid expansion of facilities for angiography, to fund 89 new or replacement catheterisation laboratories. 24 sets of equipment have already been delivered.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter to him dated 4 November 2003 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Alan Ryan, forwarded to him by the Department for Work and Pensions. [144641]

Dr. John Reid: A reply was sent to the right hon. Member on 16 December 2003.

Departmental Downsizing

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his plans for downsizing his Department. [141208]

Ms Rosie Winterton: By October 2004, the size of the core Department will be reduced by 1,400—from over 3,600 to 2,245—a 38 per cent. reduction. Half the posts will be transferred to other national bodies, which are themselves being renewed and the remaining reduction will be achieved through changing the way we work as a Department.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the rationale underlying the proposed reduction in size of his Department. [143706]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department is changing to reflect the environment in which it works, particularly:

> The reform of the national health service and local government to meet the public's expectations for better health and social care services.
> The government's drive to shift the balance of power from Whitehall to staff in frontline hospitals, general practitioner surgeries, care homes, social services and the community.
> The creation of new independent bodies.

The Department will work closely with a number of important partners to deliver better health and social care services. It will employ a much lighter touch on performance management, enabling the 28 strategic health authorities to operate as the local headquarters for the NHS. The Department will also work with the Commission for Healthcare Audit and Inspection and the Commission for Social Care Inspection, which will independently inspect NHS and social care services.

The Department's Change Programme will help shift the balance of power to the frontline and reduce bureaucracy at the centre.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reduction in staff numbers in his Department he expects to have been achieved by the end of 2004. [143056]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The change programme currently under way in the Department will reduce its size by 1,400 posts. This is a 38 per cent. reduction in posts and will be achieved by October 2004. Some of the posts will be transferred to other national bodies, which are themselves being reviewed and efficiency savings will achieve the remaining reductions.

Diabetes

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what provisions are in place to provide healthcare professionals with extensive and accurate information about diabetes; and if he will make a statement; [143737]

(2) what provisions there are for education on mild diabetes; and if he will make a statement. [143740]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The diabetes national service framework (NSF) states that 'the NHS will need to ensure that all health professionals involved in the diagnosis and care of people with diabetes receive continuing training to ensure that they are appropriately skilled in the diagnosis and management of diabetes' (page 29 of the "Diabetes National Service Framework for Diabetes: Standards document"). Curriculum content for pre-registration education and training programmes for healthcare professionals is determined by individual higher education institutions (HEIs) in the light of recommendations from the relevant regulatory bodies. Post registration training needs for all national health service healthcare staff is determined locally through skills auditing of teams against priority local needs and through the appraisal process. In addition there are a number of central initiatives to increase healthcare professionals' access to knowledge, such as the development of the National Electronic Library for Health's specialist 'branch' library for diabetes and 'Diabetes NSF Zone' and the Department of Health's commitment to establishing a National Knowledge Service.

Structured patient education is an integral part of the diabetes NSF and its provision is a key intervention for Standard 3 of the NSF that is concerned with patient empowerment. All people with diabetes will receive a service that encourages partnership in decision-making and supports them in managing their diabetes. This is reflected in the "Planning and Priorities Framework for the NHS 2003–06", that includes targets for the diabetes NSF. One such target states the need for primary care trusts to update practice-based registers for people with diabetes by March 2006. This will help to ensure that they receive systematic treatment regimens and advice, including the provision of information, education and psychological support, to help them in managing their own condition.

Early Retirement Packages

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what early retirement packages are available for staff in his Department and what additions to those packages have been made available in the last year. [143052]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The early retirement packages available to staff in the Department are those under the terms of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme. The Department has not made available any additions to these packages in the last year.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members of staff in his Department have taken early retirement packages in each of the last six years. [143053]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested is shown in the table.

The number of staff who have taken early retirement for the financial years 1997 to 2002

[1] For the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99, figures are not available for any members of staff who retired within two years of pension age.

[2] Includes 66 staff based in the Department's former regional offices, which were closed as a direct result of the "Shifting the Balance of Power" programme.

Electronic Magnifiers

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects electronic magnifiers to be made available on the NHS.[R] [144189]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 15 December 2003]: Electronic magnifiers are considered to be aids to daily living and as such, their provision is the responsibility of social services departments as they are considered to be aids to daily living. They can be given if it is felt that their provision is warranted. However, hand-held, stand and spectacle-mounted magnifiers are generally considered to be easier to use, more widely available, more accessible and more cost effective.

The Hospital Eye Service is responsible for providing optical devices and loans low vision aids, such as high-powered reading lenses, hand-held and stand magnifiers and telescopes to people with visual impairment. In addition, some primary care trusts have local arrangements for the provision of low vision aids through community based opticians.

Epilepsy

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what provisions in the National Service Framework for long-term conditions will address the needs of long-term epilepsy sufferers; [144703]

(2) what progress he has made in addressing the concerns raised in the National Sentinel Clinical Audit of Epilepsy-related Death, published in May 2002. [144704]

Dr. Ladyman: In February 2003, we published an action plan for epilepsy services which addresses the key recommendations in the National Clinical Audit of Epilepsy Related Deaths audit and the Chief Medical Officer's 2001 Annual Report on epilepsy. This will be complemented by two key initiatives, which are planned for publication next year. The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) is developing a clinical guideline for the diagnosis, management and treatment of epilepsy, which it plans to publish next July. It is also looking at the clinical and cost effectiveness of new anti-epilepsy drugs in children and adults and plans to publish an appraisal in the new year. These will help address any variations in clinical practice and contribute to the improvement of services. We are developing the national service framework (NSF) for long-term conditions, which will focus on improving the standard of general neurology care across England for people with conditions such as epilepsy. The NSF will address a range of key issues, for example: the need for equitable access to a range of services; good quality information and support, for patients and carers; the ability to see a specialist and get the right investigations and diagnosis as quickly as possible; and, maintaining independence and quality of life. We currently plan to publish the NSF late next year for implementation over 10 years from 2005.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to change the level of funding available for services for long-term epilepsy sufferers at the Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Birmingham. [144705]

Dr. Ladyman: Primary care trusts (PCTs) in partnership with strategic health authorities (SHAs) and other local stakeholders determine how best to use their funds to meet national and local priorities for improving health, tackling health inequalities and modernising services.

The pan-Birmingham epilepsy group, including representatives from the acute national health service trusts and PCTs within Birmingham is currently reviewing the provision of epilepsy services across the city.

Over the three years from 2002–03 to the end of 2005–06 the total allocation to PCTs will increase in cash terms by £12.7 billion or 30.8 per cent. That is a significant level of investment and should deliver real benefits and results. The allocation includes resources to finance the cost of pay reform, new drugs and treatments and additional capacity.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) in-patient, (b) out-patient and (c) long-term provision is available for epilepsy sufferers in Birmingham. [144706]

Dr. Ladyman: All of the acute hospitals in Birmingham provide some degree of epilepsy services as part of their neurology services.

University Hospital Birmingham National Health Service Trust has 32 dedicated in-patient neurology beds which are used by epilepsy patients. There are currently no in-patient beds within Birmingham specifically designated for epilepsy. Patients requiring such beds are referred to the National Society for Epilepsy in London.

Out-patient services are provided for the whole of the West Midlands region at the Queen Elizabeth Psychiatric Hospital for around 1,500 patients a year. Around 40 per cent. of patients are referred from Birmingham. There is an active electro encephalography department, with overnight monitoring for people with difficult-to-control epilepsy or in cases of diagnostic difficulty.

The Birmingham Women's Hospital also provides a clinic for pregnant women with epilepsy.

Generic Drugs

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that general practitioner prescribing computer systems do not prevent pharmacists dispensing generic brands of the same drug with a different formulation; and if he will make a statement. [142062]

Ms Rosie Winterton: There are a number of commercially available computer systems that general practitioners may decide on their own initiative to use in assisting their choice of what medicine to prescribe for a patient. Any system used by a GP must meet a core set of Requirements for Accreditation (RFA). RFA was introduced in April 1993 to ensure general medical practice computer systems provided an agreed level of core functionality and conformed to national standards.

All generic medicines licensed for national health service use must meet the strict requirements of the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) and must be equivalent to, and have the same therapeutic effect as, the branded formulation. Some manufacturers of generic medicines may choose to market their product by using a brand name. In other instances, for example in the case of modified release generic medicines, the MHRA may require that these medicines are prescribed by a brand name so as to avoid any problems concerning bio-availability. However these products must also be licensed by the MHRA.

On receiving a script from a patient, a pharmacist is obliged to dispense the branded product if one has been specified by a GP. If, however, a GP has prescribed a generic medicine then a pharmacist is free to chose from amongst a range of licensed generic medicines.

When officials recently became aware that a major pharmaceutical company ad sought to change GP databases to default to their formulation of a medicine, action was taken to ensure that GPs were aware and prepared to over-ride their systems to select their preferred medicine.

These arrangements should be sufficient to prevent a pharmacist from dispensing any NHS generic medicine that has a different formulation from that prescribed by a GP—whether or not a GP used a computer system in making that decision. The forthcoming renegotiations of the 1999 Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme will be used to consider the need for even stronger controls in this area.

Genetically Modified Food

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the full dossier submitted in relation to the Bt11 sweetcorn application. [144699]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The application for authorisation of Bt11 sweet maize as a novel food was made to the Netherlands in 1999, under Regulation (EC) No. 258/97. A further European Commission Regulation, Commission Regulation 1852/2001, lays down detailed rules on the making of information relating to such applications available to the public. These rules are concerned with striking the right balance as between the protection of information submitted by applicants and the public interest in the disclosure of that information. They provide for the Commission to publish a summary of the dossier on Bt11 sweet maize and the initial assessment of that dossier by the member state to which the application was made. It is not, therefore, for the United Kingdom authority to publish such information.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the requirements for a post approval safety monitoring plan specified in the new food and feed regulations for GM foods will be applied to Bt11 sweetcorn. [144700]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Regulation 1829/2003 on genetically modified food and feed comes into effect on 18 April 2004. This regulation does not impose a requirement for the post marketing monitoring of all genetically modified foods, although monitoring may be required in specific cases based on the outcome of the risk assessment. The authorisation of Bt11 sweetcorn is currently being considered under the novel food legislation (regulation 258/97) and does not include a requirement for post-market monitoring.

Head Lice

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will put in place a strategy for tackling head lice similar to the one in place in Scotland. [143031]

Dr. Ladyman: No. Primary care trusts are best placed to develop strategies for dealing with head louse infestation within their area. This will take into account local circumstances.

Our policy, which is shared by the Department for Education and Skills, is to encourage a "whole school approach" to the detection and treatment of head lice. This entails encouraging parents to check their children and other family members for head lice as need arises, and arranging treatment—either through a combing regime or insecticides—where necessary with such advice and support from the local primary health care team (general practitioner, health visitor, school nurse or local pharmacist) as they may require. If this exercise is successfully undertaken at the same time by all parents of children within a school, then the spread of head lice will be arrested.

Healthcare Cartels

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he will put in place to avoid the risk of health care providers forming cartels under the policy of giving more choice to patients. [140618]

Mr. Hutton: By December 2005, primary care trusts (PCTs) will offer, at the point of general practitioner referral, a menu of four to five choices for patients who may require elective surgery. To do this, PCTs will commission services from an appropriate range of providers to secure real choices for their local populations; avoiding any potential for 'cartels' being formed. The new national tariff will strengthen PCTs' position, making it easier for them to move activity and funding between providers.

Hip Braces

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost to the National Health Service was of hip braces imported from the United States of America in each of the last five years. [143805]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 16 December 2003]: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons hip braces are not purchased from United Kingdom manufacturers. [143806]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 16 December 2003]: The NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency has a national framework agreement for the supply of orthoses, which includes hip braces. This agreement is available to all national health service trusts and health authorities in England, although it is not mandatory. There are 59 suppliers on the agreement, all of which are based in the United Kingdom.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has met its most recent target to deliver assertive outreach for severe mental illness; and if he will make a statement. [143708]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department has met the NHS Plan target to establish a total of 220 assertive outreach teams for patients with severe mental illness and complex problems who regularly disengage from services. We are encouraged by the progress made so far and we will be reviewing the level of need for assertive outreach services by the end of the financial year.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many child and adolescent mental health services in-patient beds were provided in each year since 1997 (a) in total, (b) in England and (c) in each local authority; how many are planned to be provided in the next two years; and if he will make a statement. [143709]

Dr. Ladyman: The information is not collected in the form requested. The table shows the average daily number of beds available in the national health service classified as 'Mental Illness: Children'.

In the three years to March 2006, we will be investing an additional £250 million in child and adolescent mental health services provided by the national health service and local authorities for them to further develop their services.

Average daily number of available beds by ward classification, England, 1997–98 to 2002–03

	Department of Health form KH03
	Mental illness: Children	Learning disabilities: Children
1997–98	522	380
1 998–99	538	363
1999–00	482	376
2000–01	531	376
2001–02	484	274
2002–03	504	409

Notes:

1999–2000 and 2001–02 incomplete data.

There is not a separate ward classification in the data collection for adolescent beds. NHS Trusts providing services specifically for adolescents may record the beds as "Children's" or as "Other ages"—the latter includes all the adult provision.

Department of Health form KH03

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (a) how much and (b) what proportion of mental health expenditure has been spent on child and adolescent services in each of the last five years. [143710]

Dr. Ladyman: This information is not available centrally. However our estimate for likely mental health expenditure in 2002–03 and the proportion spent on child and adolescent services is shown in the table.

We recognise that much still needs to be done to improve child and adolescent mental health. The work of the child and adolescent mental health module of the children's national service framework will do much to inform future plans.

Estimated mental health expenditure 2002–03

	Child and adolescent mental health services	Adult mental health	Elderly	Total
Hospital community health service (millions)	331	3,476	248	4,055
Percentage	8	86	6	100
Personal social services (millions)	281	739	418	1,438
Percentage	20	51	29	100
Total (millions)	612	4,216	666	5,494
Percentage	11	77	12	100

Notes:

1. The table above is based on estimated projections of expenditure, not actual expenditure. HCHS figures, for instance, are only available up to 2000–01 and PSS figures are only available up to 2001–02. Relevant figures are taken from this year's Departmental Report (Chapter 6) and have been used to update the projections given previously. The actual figures for 2000–01 HCHS spend on mental health were higher than had been previously projected.

2. CAMHS costs are based on estimates from 2002 projected forward in line with increases in overall expenditure. They may underestimate CAMHS expenditure, as they do not account for any new policy developments.

3. HCHS costs exclude the cost of drugs. PSS costs include children's social services where relevant

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the findings in the Wanless Report of April 2002 relating to the spending increases required to implement the National Service Framework for mental health by 2010–11. [143716]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Following the Wanless final report, my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his 2002 Budget, announced the biggest ever-sustained real terms growth in history of national health service, to create a world-class health system. Health spending is to grow on average by 7.2 per cent. per annum in the United Kingdom in real terms over next five years—from £68.1 billion to £109.4 billion in 2007–08.

In line with "Shifting the Balance of Power", primary care trusts have not been given allocations specifically for mental health but have received a block allocation with which to provide the services as set out in the NHS Plan , the national service frameworks and to meet local need. A proportion of the increases for total health spend will relate to mental health service and the Department will be monitoring the increase through annual financial mapping exercises.

Memory Clinics

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what definition the Department uses of a memory clinic; and how many memory clinics have been set up (a) in total in England and Wales and (b) in each strategic health authority. [142959]

Dr. Ladyman: There is considerable variation in the way in which memory clinics are run, in order to meet the needs of different localities. However, in general they are used to help diagnose whether a person has dementia and to help people with dementia access the treatment, care and support they need.

Information on the number of memory clinics is not collected centrally.

Midwifery Units

Mr. John Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many closures of midwifery-led units since 1997 were due to a shortage of staff; and what the other reasons for closure were; [144658]

(2) whether consultant-led midwifery units have had higher vacancy rates than midwife-led maternity units in each of the last six years; and what the average difference was for each year. [144661]

Mr. Hutton [holding answers 16 December 2003]: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Northwick Park Hospital

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints he has received concerning Northwick Park Hospital. [142930]

Mr. Hutton: Figures for the number of complaints received about individual hospitals are not collected centrally. Figures for the number of complaints relating to North West London Hospitals National Health Service Trust are available at http://www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/.

Operations (Cancellations)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations were cancelled at London hospitals in each of the last 16 quarters for which figures are available; what percentage of the cancelled operations were consequently carried out within four weeks; and if he will make a statement. [143997]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 15 December 2003]: Information is not available for cancellations at individual hospital sites. Information on the number of operations cancelled at the last minute and the number not treated within 28 days of a last minute cancellation for each national health service trust is published at: http://www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/ Copies of the published information are available in the Library.

Orthopists

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implementation of the pathfinder project in orthotic services. [R] [144191]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 15 December]: The report of the orthotics pathfinder project will be published in January 2004 after which any policy implications will be considered.

Pneumococcal Conjugate Vaccine

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost to the NHS of providing the pneumococcal conjugate vaccine to (a) all children between two months and two years of age and (b) only those children at risk between two months and two years of age; and if he will make a statement. [144108]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The cost of providing pneumococcal conjugate vaccine to all children under two years of age will depend on the negotiated price of the vaccine.

The number of children at risk is not known and therefore the cost cannot be estimated. The recommendation to immunise at-risk children under two years is consistent with United Kingdom policy for those aged over two years.

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many at-risk children are entitled to pneumococcal conjugate vaccine; what proportion of those children have been given the vaccine; and if he will make a statement. [144109]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information is not held centrally.

Premature Babies

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many premature babies were born in each region of the UK for each of the last five years. [143679]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Prisoners

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to promote effective inter-agency arrangements for dealing with mentally disordered offenders. [144072]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Government are committed both to providing better services for people with mental health problems and to protecting the public from crime and the fear of crime. A number of initiatives to support these aims are underway, involving a number of Government departments to tackle the issues raised by mentally disordered offenders.

The Department of Health, the Home Office and the Prison Service are developing new assessment and treatment facilities for dangerous people with severe personality disorder. This will result in 300 new places becoming available in high secure care with the development of an infrastructure at lower levels of security to allow a safe transition for those whose risk is reduced.

Multi-agency public protection arrangements exist in every part of the country and bring together health, police, probation and other agencies to plan the management of people who pose a risk in the community, many of whom are mentally disordered offenders.

Closer working between social services departments and mental health trusts, often leading to single management, has benefited all mental health services, including mentally disordered offenders by removing the traditional boundaries between health and social care.

Court liaison and diversion schemes are widespread and act to ensure that mentally ill people who come into contact with the Criminal Justice System receive mental health care whenever possible.

A number of strands of work are underway with the National Probation Service to ensure that they are supported by mental health services while managing people with mental health problems in hostels and the community.

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are taken to ensure that the use of medication for women in prison complies with the best practice guidance of the NHS. [144520]

Dr. Ladyman: All prison establishments are expected, in conjunction with their local primary care trust, to be covered by a drugs and therapeutic committee or its equivalent. Drawing on specialist advice, this committee should be responsible for the development of an evidence-based local formulary, disease management guidelines and medicine-related policies and procedures. All establishments are expected to take account of relevant guidelines issued by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence.

Rheumatoid Arthritis

Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many primary care trust, collaborative commissioning groups are providing funding for the treatment of rheumatoid arthritis. [144548]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not collected centrally. Only the small amount of rheumatoid arthritis services that are specialised would be commissioned by a group of primary care trusts acting in a collaborative commissioning group. We do not know how many of these groups separately identify and fund rheumatoid arthritis services.

Targets

Ms Munn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the outcome of the consultation exercise on clinical exceptions to the four hour emergency care target. [144888]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The target for accident and emergency departments is that, by December 2004, all patients should be discharged, admitted or transferred within four hours of arrival. However, front line emergency care staff have told us that in a small proportion of cases it may not be clinically appropriate to move patients within that time frame—for example when they are undergoing active resuscitation.

Responses to the consultation exercise that we announced in September confirmed that. We have listened to the advice we received and have now reached a consensus with the British Association for Accident and Emergency Medicine, the Faculty of Accident and Emergency Medicine and the Royal College of Nursing Emergency Care Association on the type of cases that can be regarded as clinical exceptions to the target. The agreement is available on the Department of Health website at: http://www.doh.gov.uk/emergencycare/clinical-exceptions.htm

Other than in these exceptional cases the target remains in place, and National Health Service trusts must still do everything they can to avoid any breaches of the target that are not clinically necessary.

Temporomandibular Joint Dysfunction

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on the funding of treatment for temporomandibular joint dysfunction; and if he will make a statement. [144275]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Cases of temporomandibular joint dysfunction, which are suitable for treatment by a general dental practitioner, can be funded through the general dental services. More complex cases, for example requiring surgery, will be referred to hospital and funded as with other hospital services.

Top-up Fees

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the bodies that have made representations on the impact of top-up fees on NHS professionals. [144393]

Mr. Hutton: A wide range of bodies have made formal written representations on variable fees in the consultation exercise on the White Paper "The Future of Higher Education" (column 5735), which was co-ordinated by the Department for Education and Skills. Department of Health Ministers and officials are of course in regular contact with the full range of stakeholders involved in the training of the future health professional workforce.

University of Leicester Hospital Trust

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next plans to visit the University of Leicester Hospital Trust. [142933]

Ms Rosie Winterton: There are no current plans in my right hon. Friend's official diary to undertake a visit to the University of Leicester Hospital Trust. Should a request to do so be received in the Department, it will be given full consideration.

Waiting Lists/Times

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time is for an MRI scan for a patient in (a) England and (b) North Staffordshire; and if he will make a statement. [144104]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Data are not collected centrally on waiting times for a magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scan. The length of time that a patient may have to wait for any scan is dependent on their clinical condition. Emergency cases need to be seen immediately. Other cases will be carried out as quickly as possible, dependent on the clinical priority of all patients waiting to be scanned.

Where a MRI scan forms part of the diagnostic process for a patient urgently referred with suspected cancer, this will be covered by the target of a maximum two month wait from urgent referral to first treatment, which is currently in place for breast cancer patients, and will be in place for all cancers by the end of 2005.

To increase capacity of diagnostic services, funding has been made available for the provision of new and replacement scanners. To date, new and replacement equipment provided through central programmes includes, as of 15 December 2003, 51 new MRI scanners, 69 linear accelerators, 148 computed tomography scanners and over 600 items of breast screening equipment, all delivered since April 2000.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Afghanistan

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps are being taken to encourage (a) the use of alternative crops and (b) non-farming livelihoods in the Afghan provinces. [144859]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: We are providing more than £20 million over three years to our livelihoods programme in Afghanistan. This includes funding a Research in Alternative Livelihoods Project, (£3 million over three years) designed to help the rural poor in Afghanistan build new ways of making a living. Research grants will be given to organisations, which put forward innovative ideas for the development and promotion of new farming and non-farming opportunities in Afghanistan.

Workshops will be held to share lessons learnt and information gathered by the projects being funded with other rural development projects across Afghanistan. We are also building the capacity of key Ministries to enable the Afghan Government to support the new livelihoods opportunities and engage with the local communities through newly established development councils.

Global Fund

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of the UK target figure for the Global Fund his Department has pledged for 2004–05. [141501]

Hilary Benn: For the financial year 2004–05 we will provide £30 million and have extended our current commitment through to 2008 bringing our total planned contribution to the Global Fund to fight AIDS TB and Malaria (GFATM) to US$280 million.

At the 6th Board meeting of the Global Fund held in October, members of the Board of the Global Fund voted to move to a periodic replenishment model on a voluntary basis for all public donors, complemented by additional ad hoc donations. This is now the agreed system for contributions to the Global Fund and should put the Fund on a firmer financial footing.

Future UK funding will be subject to the GFATM reflecting a clear poverty focus, achieving a better financing system, integrating the Fund's activities more effectively with national programmes and meeting agreed benchmarks to monitor its effectiveness. We have been working closely with the Fund on all of these issues and made some good progress at the recent Board meeting held in October—particularly on improving the financing system by moving to a more reliable system of replenishment based on commonly agreed performance measures. Good results will encourage increased contributions to the Global Fund—both from the UK and, importantly, from the wider international community and this will help to ensure its future as an effective instrument to tackle these terrible diseases.

Our contribution to the GFATM reflects only part of the UK's significant contribution to the fight against HIV/AIDS, TB and Malaria. At country level, DFID has committed over £1.5 billion since 1997 to strengthening health systems so that better care and drugs can be delivered. Our commitment to HIV/AIDS is demonstrated by the increase in bilateral spending from £38 million in 1997–98 to over £270 million in 2003–04. We are now intensifying our efforts to tackle the HIV/AIDS epidemic. In the recently published "Call for Action", we state that we will make HIV/AIDS a priority for the extra £320 million the UK will be devoting to development in Africa by 2006. We will also double our core funding of UNAIDS.

We also contribute to other global partnerships, which work on different aspects of these diseases. For example DFID has contributed £48 million over four years (1999–2003) to Roll Back Malaria, a global partnership which aims to halve the world's malaria burden by 2010. This financial year we are providing some £1.2 million in support for public private partnerships to develop a new generation of affordable drugs required for malaria control. DFID plays a major role in supporting TB control and the adoption of good practice in countries such as India, Russia, Zambia, Nepal, Bolivia and South Africa. The UK is also a member of the coordinating Board of the global Stop TB partnership and in 2002–03 we provided £0.75 million to the partnership.

Identity Cards

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment he has made of the implications of the introduction of compulsory identity cards for his Department. [142950]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: There has been no assessment made.

Iraq (Medicines)

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on shortages of (a) antisera (anti-snake venom) and (b) anti-cancer medicines in Iraq. [143935]

Hilary Benn: Assessments by the World Health Organisation (WHO) and the Iraqi Ministry of Health earlier in the autumn indicated that there are no major shortages of essential medical supplies in Iraq. There are however still reported shortages of some very specialised supplies including antisera (ie anti snake venom) and some anti-cancer medicines.

A great deal has already been achieved to re-establish drug systems in Iraq. The initial focus was, rightly, on securing adequate supplies of the most essential and most used medicines and vaccines. On 27 October, the Iraqi Ministry of Health estimated that 15,000 tons of pharmaceuticals and medical supplies had been delivered in 150 days. However, new supply systems are not yet fully operational. Until these are in place, including comprehensive accounting and reporting processes to ensure that needs are identified before shortages arise, some problems will continue to occur.

Work is currently underway in the Iraqi Ministry of Health to develop a national drug formulary. This will enable improved sourcing of drugs and a new purchasing structure which will facilitate the arrival of some drugs which were almost non-existent under the old regime, including top-tier cancer drugs and other advanced pharmaceuticals. Work is also being done by the Ministry of Health, CPA and WHO to develop a complete overview of missing drugs and supplies. This is scheduled to finish in three months.

TREASURY

Private Health Care

6. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had on financial incentives for private healthcare. [144721]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I have met BUPA and others. We estimate the cost of financial incentives for private medical insurance, including tax relief on private medical insurance and vouchers for private healthcare, at £2 billion.

Council Tax

19. Mr. McWalter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what mechanisms are available to him to ensure that the resources he makes available to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister for the 2004–05 settlement for local authorities will generate council tax rises in that year no higher than the rate of inflation. [144734]

Mr. Boateng: The extra resources for local authorities announced in November and in the pre-Budget report amount to an additional £760 million for local government on top of previously planned increases in grant. Following the provision of these substantial extra resources provided, excessive increases should not be necessary, but the Government have capping powers and are prepared to use them to protect local taxpayers from excessive council tax rises imposed by local authorities.

Information Technology

20. Mr. Bacon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer until what date and for how much money his Department has given financial commitments in relation to the funding of the National Programme for information technology in the health service. [144735]

Mr. Boateng: Although programmes of this scale do need Treasury approval, the Treasury does not commit funding to individual projects. It is for the Department of Health to ensure that the national programme for information technology is affordable within its budget, without pre-empting the results of future spending reviews.

North-East

21. Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action his Department is taking to promote wealth creation in the North East. [144736]

John Healey: All areas of the UK are benefiting from a stable macroeconomic framework, and the measures to promote entrepreneurship and set out in the pre-Budget report.

Regulatory and VAT reforms could benefit 15,700 businesses in the North East:

> Better access to advice and finance could assist up to 33,000 SMEs in the North East;
> 72,000 people have been helped into work in the North East by the New Deal.

There has also been an indicative allocation rise, from £227 million in this year to £240 million in 2005–06, for the North East regional development agency to promote wealth creation in the North East.

Child Trust Funds

22. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with officials from the Inland Revenue regarding the introduction of Child Trust Funds. [144737]

Ruth Kelly: I am the Minister with specific responsibility for the Child Trust Fund and I have regular discussions with both the Chancellor and officials of the Inland Revenue on a wide range of issues in connection with the Child Trust Fund and its introduction.

Equitable Life

23. Sandra Gidley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Equitable Life. [144738]

Ruth Kelly: Equitable Life's most recent interim accounts, which reflected its position as at 30 June 2003, confirmed that it remained solvent. However, the interim accounts also refer to the fact that it continues to face fundamental uncertainties over its mis-selling liabilities and, like all market participants, has had to operate in difficult economic conditions.

Health Care Funding

24. Mr. David: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the funding of healthcare through (a) charges and (b) private medical insurance. [144739]

Mr. Boateng: We have met BUPA and others to hear representations on private medical insurance. The Government believe that the best way to fund healthcare is through general taxation and that delivery of healthcare should be on the basis of clinical need not ability to pay.

International Finance Facility

David Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the proposed conditionalities to be applied to the proposed International Finance Facility. [144740]

John Healey: The International Finance Facility would not impose new conditions on recipient countries.

Child Benefit (Scotland)

John Barrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people receive Child Benefit in Scotland, broken down by (a) parliamentary constituency and (b) local authority area. [144528]

Ruth Kelly: The latest available figures, for November 2002, are shown in a table which is being placed in the Library. Recent annual changes in the number of families in Scotland with Child Benefit awards have been very small.

Foreign Debt

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to set up a realisation fund for outstanding Export Credits Guarantee Department debt. [144835]

Mr. Boateng: The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry informed the House of progress towards establishing the Export Credits Guarantee Department as a Trading Fund on 22 July 2002. Details of the structure of the Trading Fund will be set out in a public consultation document ahead of the move to Trading Fund status.

Progressive Governance Conference

Sue Doughty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the total cost to public funds was of the Progressive Governance Conference hosted by the United Kingdom in July. [140566]

Mr. MacShane: I have been asked to reply.

The Progressive Governance Conference from 11 to 13 July was organised and paid for by the think-tank Policy Network.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) organised the subsequent Summit on 13 and 14 July for the heads of state or government of 14 countries. The final cost of organising the Summit was £251,929. This was met by the FCO. This excludes costs for policing.

TRANSPORT

Airlines (Disciplinary Action)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions disciplinary action has been taken against airlines for (a) breach of aircraft noise arrival and departure regulations and (b) failure to follow preferred routes into and from Belfast City Airport in each of the last three years. [144601]

Mr. McNulty: Noise and track-keeping procedures applicable at Belfast City Airport are a matter for local control by the Airport. The Department for Transport does not hold the information requested, which should be available direct from Belfast City Airport.

Biofuels

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made against the EU target for biofuels to reach two per cent. of the petrol and diesel market by December 2005. [144771]

Mr. Jamieson: The EU Biofuels Directive (2003/30/EC) requires member states to set indicative targets for sales of biofuels for 2005 and 2010, and provides reference values of 2 per cent. and 5.75 per cent. respectively. Member states must report to the Commission by 1 July 2004, indicating the level of their national indicative targets for 2005.

Current sales of biofuels in the UK are around two million litres a month, which is approximately 0.05 per cent. of the transport fuels market. This represents a dramatic increase since the position prior to July 2002, when the 20 pence per litre fuel duty incentive for biodiesel came into effect.

The Department for Transport will be consulting in early 2004 on its plans for implementing the Directive.

British Transport Police

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what additional money has been given to the British Transport Police in this financial year for their duties under the Terrorism Act 2000. [145133]

Mr. McNulty: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today [144178].

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what additional resources have been made available to the British Transport Police to take on anti-terrorist responsibilities since 2001. [144178]

Mr. McNulty: The resources available to the British Transport Police (BTP) are a matter for the BTP Committee, which overseas the Force and sets its budget. The rail industry is responsible for providing the necessary funding for the Force. In addition to this funding Government has agreed to provide the BTP in 2003–04 with an additional £1.5 million for anti-terrorist response vehicles in London.

Speed Cameras (East Anglia)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many speed cameras there were in (a) Suffolk, (b) Cambridgeshire, (c) Norfolk and (d) Essex, in each year since 1997; and what amount of revenue was raised in each of those counties. [143348]

Mr. Jamieson: Before the safety camera netting off trial began in April 2000 local authorities were not obliged to inform central government about their camera activity. Essex have netted off since 2000 and Cambridgeshire and Norfolk since 2001. The number of camera sites (both fixed and mobile) for each is:

	2000–01	2001–2002	2002–2003
Essex	200	356	342
Cambridgeshire	—	15	40
Norfolk	—	44	60

Suffolk joined the scheme in April 2003. During the 2003–2004 financial year Suffolk's plans are to install 5 new fixed site camera housings in addition to their existing 3 and will be enforcing 41 sites with mobile camera units.

Receipts from conditional offer fixed penalty fines for the latest audited years were:

	2000–01	2001–02
Essex	1,843,480	3,524,120
Cambridgeshire	—	135,420
Norfolk	—	160,140
Suffolk	—	—

A21

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make an announcement on the route for the A21 South of Pembury to Flimwell before Parliament rises on 18 December 2003. [144449]

Mr. Jamieson: An announcement will be made following full consideration. The Highways Agency is developing proposals for the section of the A21 between Kippings Cross and Lamberhurst. This area is particularly sensitive in environmental terms and it is important to achieve a balance between the impact on the environment and the impact on those living beside the existing route. I hope to make an announcement early in the New Year following further discussions with colleagues in the Department for Environment Food and Rural Affairs.

The Highways Agency has not yet started looking at the Lamberhurst to Flimwell section of the A21 and the Lamberhurst bypass is currently under construction.

A421

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what financial support is available from Government to assist returning the stretch of the A421, proposed to be de-trunked around Great Barford, Bedfordshire, following the construction of a by-pass, to its rural character. [144820]

Mr. Jamieson: Once de-trunking of the stretch of the A421 at Great Barford, Bedfordshire, has taken place, management becomes the responsibility of Bedfordshire County Council. They will be able to apply through the Local Transport Plan process for funding of any works they feel necessary to reflect the changed character of the road.

A43

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further developments are planned to improve the safety and capacity of junctions on the stretch of the A43 between junction 15A of the M1 and junction 10 of the M40. [144480]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Chief Executive of Highways Agency, Mr. Archie Robertson, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Archie Robertson to Mr. Tim Boswell, dated 18 December 2003:

I have been asked by the Transport Minister, David Jamieson to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about what further developments are planned to improve safety and the capacity of junctions on the A43 between Junction 15A of the M1 and Junction 10 of the M40.

There were 3 improvement schemes on the A43: A43 M40—B4031 dualling; A43 Whitfield Turn—Brackley Hatch Improvement and the A43 Silverstone Bypass scheme which were all opened to traffic in September 2002. These schemes have already relieved many of the safety and capacity issues on the A43.

Further developments include:

> A Route Management Strategy (RMS) is currently being developed for the complete length of the A43 trunk road between M1 J15A and M40 J10 as part of an RMS studying the length of the A43 and A45 route between the M40 and A14.
> An accident analysis study is currently in progress at the A43/M40 J10. This study is due to report in the spring of 2004. A broader ranging study to examine congestion factors at A43/M40 J10 is planned for 2004–05.
> A study into the short term and long-term options to relieve congestion at A43/A5 Tove junction is due to report in 2004.
> Investigation of improved traffic signing and road markings at A43 Blisworth/Tiffield junctions.

If you would like to discuss any of these issues in more detail, you are welcome to contact the Highways Agency's Route Manager, Steve Davy, 49/53 Goldington Road, Bedford, MK40 3LL or via e-mail at steve.davy@highways.gsi.gov.uk

BAe 146 Aircraft

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he still expects the Air Accident Investigation Branch to publish in December its report of the investigation of a series of cabin air quality incidents involving BAe 146 aircraft and other similar incidents; and if he will make a statement. [144970]

Mr. McNulty: The Air Accidents Investigation Branch report following the investigation of a series of cabin air quality incidents involving BAe 146 aircraft and similar incidents to other aircraft is now complete, following extensive industry consultation. The report is to be processed for printing and publication in February 2004. Five safety recommendations were made during the course of the investigation.

Departmental Spending

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has spent on the acquisition of works of art in each year since 1997, broken down by amounts spent on (a) paintings and (b) sculpture; what the single most expensive piece of art purchased by his Department since 1997 has been; how much it cost; and what the total revenue raised by his Department through sales of works of art has been since 1997. [142360]

Mr. McNulty: The Department for Transport was formed in May 2002 and since then no works of art have either been purchased or sold. All works of art within the Department have been provided on loan from the Government Art Collection.

Drink Driving

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of drivers killed in traffic accidents were over the legal blood alcohol limit, in the last five years for which data are available. [144552]

Mr. Jamieson: The following table shows the percentage of drivers or riders killed in traffic accidents over the legal blood alcohol limit over the last five years.

Percentage of Drivers and riders killed in road accidents over the legal blood alcohol limit

	Percentage over limit
1998	11
1999	9
2000	10
2001	10
2002[1]	11

[1] Provisional data

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the key characteristics of drink drive casualties are, broken down by (a) age, (b) gender, (c) time of day, (d) month of year and (e) mode of travel; and if he will list the measures he has put in place to combat drinking and driving. [144554]

Mr. Jamieson: The most recent road casualty statistics are contained in "Road Casualties Great Britain 2002: Annual Report", a copy of which is in the House Library.

These show that:

(a) About one third of all drink-drive casualties are aged 16–24;

(b) Around one third of drink-drive casualties are female;

(c) Nearly half of all failed breath tests occur between 10pm and 4am, and around half the drivers killed between those times had a blood alcohol level above the limit;

(d) There are more drink-drive accidents and casualties during the summer and autumn months than during winter and spring;

(e) The large majority of casualties in drink-drive accidents are car occupants, with only a small percentage among pedestrians and cyclists.

As regards anti-drink-driving measures, the law has been changed to make drivers who cause death by careless driving while under the influence of drink or drugs take an extended driving test and the maximum penalty for this offence will shortly be increased from 10 to 14 years' imprisonment. Blood samples may now be taken from unconscious, hospitalised drivers suspected of committing drink-drive offences in order to make it easier to prosecute them. The option of referring drink-drive offenders to rehabilitation courses has been extended to courts throughout Great Britain as a means of reducing re-offending. The Government's drink-driving publicity campaigns are being extended to run at different times and in a variety of media throughout the year, rather than just at Christmas and in the summer.

In addition, the Government have announced its intention to strengthen police powers to carry out evidential breathtesting at the roadside. We are also planning to introduce mandatory retesting as a penalty for repeat drink-drive offenders and are assessing the potential effectiveness of breath alcohol ignition interlock devices as a further form of intervention to deal with drink-drive offenders.

Give as You Earn Scheme

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many and what percentage of staff in his Department contribute to a charity through the Give as You Earn scheme; how much money is donated to charity per month by staff in his Department through the scheme; and what steps he is taking to encourage greater participation in the scheme by staff in his Department. [143911]

Mr. McNulty: DfT have only had a separate payroll from ODPM for the last two months, October and November. We can therefore only provide useful data for this period.

October 2003: 107 staff donated to "Give As You Earn" (GAVE) out of a total headcount of 2049 staff. Percentage of staff = 5.22 per cent. Total charitable donation was £2471.90.

November 2003: 107 staff donated to GAYE out of a headcount of 2,078 staff. Percentage of staff = 5.15 per cent. Total charitable donation was £2456.90.

Rail Services

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of all journeys was made by rail in England and Wales in the last month for which figures are available. [142616]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 8 December 2003]: Data from the National Travel Survey on main mode of trip show that, over the period 1999–2001, 2.7 per cent. of all trips (excluding walking) by people in England and Wales were by rail (1.7 per cent. by surface rail and 1.0 per cent. by London Underground). Monthly figures are not available.

Speed Cameras

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fixed speed cameras there were in Essex in each of the last 10 years; how much revenue was raised from them in each year; and how many speeding convictions resulted from them in each year. [142044]

Mr. Jamieson: The numbers of fixed speed cameras placed in total in Essex are shown in the following table.

Year	New Camera Sites
1994	0
1995	9
1996	9
1997	0
1998	2
1999	8
2000	0
2001	28
2002	9
2003	17
Total	82

It is not possible to separately identify Conditional Offer Fixed Penalty Notices issued as a result of motorists detected speeding solely by fixed cameras. The amount of conditional offer fixed penalty receipts raised by fixed and mobile cameras in Essex during the first two years of the netting off safety camera scheme is shown in the following table:

Year	Penalty Receipts
2000	1,843,480
2001	3,524,120

Taxis

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the estimated average cost is of establishing a taxi rank in an urban area (a) at a major transport interchange and (b) at a main road. [144883]

Mr. McNulty: Taxi ranks in England and Wales are normally appointed by the relevant Licensing Authority. We do not collate information about the cost of appointing taxi ranks.

Transport Funding

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on how funding for transport in London will take account of the projected increase in London's population between 2001 and 2016; [144034]

(2) what assessment he has made of the (a) infrastructure and (b) revenue investment in London transport required to meet London's projected population increase over the next 15 years. [144035]

Mr. McNulty: The Government's latest spending plans for London were set out in the Ten Year Plan for Transport, and its subsequent progress report "Delivering Better Transport". Spending plans and priorities are regularly reviewed. We will consider the case for additional resources put forward by TfL in their latest business plan in the run-up to next year's spending review, as well as the Mayor's emerging London Plan, which sets out his vision of the development of London over the next 15–20 years.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the case put forward for extra funding for Transport for London in the next spending review. [144247]

Mr. McNulty: We will consider the case for additional resources put forward by TfL in their latest business plan. The Spending Review is expected to conclude in Summer 2004.

U-turns

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the total mileage of roads in the Greater London area and (b) the total mileage of roads in the Greater London area where u-turns were forbidden for the last five years for which figures are available. [144884]

Mr. McNulty: The total mileage of roads in the Greater London area is 8,959 miles (14,415 kilometres). Information on the total mileage of roads in the Greater London area where u-turns were forbidden is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office whether members of the Senior Civil Service are required to report an invitation to take up an external appointment in industry and commerce received whilst serving, and to whom; what restrictions they are subject to; and what obligations there are with regard to appointments in industry and commerce taken up once they have retired from their civil service posts. [143688]

Mr. Alexander: All civil servants are subject to rules on the acceptance of outside appointments. These rules are set out in Section 4.3 annexes A & B of the Civil Service Management Code, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many new recruits there were to the civil service in each year since 1997. [144657]

Mr. Alexander: The number of new recruits to the civil service between 1996–97 and 2001–02 are shown in the following table. The figures shown are on a headcount basis and apply to non-industrial civil servants only. The figures cover information on 98 per cent. of civil servants, based on data collected on individuals and held in a central database. Information on the remainder is only collected in aggregate form.

More detailed information on entrants to the civil service is published annually in 'Civil Service Statistics', copies of which are laid in the Libraries of both Houses. The last edition, based on April 2002 data, was published in July 2003.

Entrants to the civil service 1996–97 to 2001–02
Non-industrials

		Of which
	Total recruits	New recruitment	Re-instatement to the civil service
1996–97	29,000	27,910	1,090
1997–98	26,640	25,970	670
1998–99	29,770	29,230	540
1999–2000	38,700	37,900	800

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Landfill

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether, following the reform of the Landfill Tax Credit Scheme, the resulting funds are to be made available to the community waste and recycling sector. [143987]

Mr. Morley: A sustainable waste delivery public spending programme, administered by Defra, has been established following the reform of the Landfill Tax Credit Scheme (LTCS) in April 2003, to ensure that sustainable alternatives to landfill disposal are widely available. The funds are being administered by the Waste Implementation Programme.

Plans for expenditure under the Programme are at various stages of development and execution. So far, for example, a review has been commissioned to identify any former LTCS projects which, if continued with Defra funding, would support the Programme's objectives. Similarly, the Programme will fund relevant waste research and community groups will be able to bid for those funds.

Warm Front Initiative

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average length of time taken to supply equipment to households under the Warm Front initiative has been; and if she will make a statement. [141941]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Department has contracts with two scheme managers, Eaga Partnership and Powergen Warm Front Ltd. for the delivery of Warm Front. Heating materials are provided under separate contracts with two suppliers who have sub-contracts with a number of manufacturers.

Following survey of a property, the average time taken to install measures ranges between 4 to 6 months for heating and 2 to 3 months for insulation.

30-month Scheme

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to lift the market restrictions on beef from cattle over 30 months old. [143610]

Mr. Bradshaw: Ministers are still considering the FSA advice on replacing the OTM Rule and the OTM Scheme with testing. Defra has commissioned a study co-ordinated by the MLC (involving all sectors of the meat chain) to investigate the impact on the beef market of any changes to the OTM rule and OTMS exit. The Government are also investigating with the EU Commission the possibility of introducing an underpinning temporary market support measure to insure against any disruption to the market.

Abandoned Cars

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what percentage of abandoned cars were set alight in the UK in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [143843]

Mr. Raynsford: I have been asked to reply.

In England, the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra) conducted a Municipal Waste Management Survey in 2001–02 which estimated that 292,900 abandoned vehicles were removed and destroyed by local authorities. No data are available for Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland for that year.

An analysis of national fire statistics shows that in 2001–02 an estimated 22,700 fires occurred in vehicles that had previously been abandoned. This estimate represents 8 per cent. of all abandoned vehicles removed and destroyed, as recorded by the Defra survey.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many vehicles she expects to be abandoned in each year before the End of Life Vehicles Directive is fully enforced. [143957]

Mr. Morley: It is not possible to estimate how many vehicles will be abandoned in the period leading up to January 2007, from which time producers will be required to take back end of life vehicles at no cost to the owner.

Vehicle abandonment rates will be dependent on a number of factors, including the price of scrap metal.

The Government have introduced a range of measures, including the advent of continuous registration in January 2004, which will enable local authorities to tackle abandoned vehicles effectively and make it much harder for last owners to evade responsibility for their vehicles.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total average cost per car was of disposal of end of life vehicles in the last 12 months for which figures are available [143955]

Mr. Morley: Based on estimated disposal costs of between £30 and £50 per vehicle, the total cost of disposal for end of life vehicles in the financial year 2001–02 was between £8.79 million and £14.65 million.

Air Quality

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action her Department is undertaking to reduce levels of nitrogen dioxide around Heathrow airport. [143793]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Air Quality Strategy sets out the Government's policies and measures to reduce levels of nitrogen dioxide and other key air pollution throughout the UK in general. Various emissions sources may contribute to levels of nitrogen dioxide in the Heathrow area. The Department is working with other departments, local authorities and other organisations concerned to secure improvements.

Emissions arising in mainland Europe can contribute significantly to concentrations in London and the South East. Reductions agreed under the National Emission Ceiling Directive in UK and in other member states will cut emissions of oxide of nitrogen and other air pollutants at source.

Measures to cut emissions from transport include tighter vehicle emission and fuel standards, fuel duty differentials and schemes to promote the wider use of greener fuels and vehicles. The 10-year transport plan sets out measures to improve public transport, to cut congestion and to reduce air pollution. The UK is working through the International Civil Aviation Organisation to reduce emissions from aviation. Under a condition in the planning permission for the Fifth Terminal at Heathrow BAA plc are required to produce and review an action plan to minimise emissions—their Air Quality Strategy and Action Plan was published in April 2002 and is currently being reviewed.

Under their statutory duties for air quality, the three local authorities adjacent to Heathrow have declared Air Quality Management Areas in the vicinity of the airport and are now developing action plans in order to improve local air quality.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what targets her Department has set to reduce the levels of nitrogen dioxide by (a) 2005 and (b) 2010. [143823]

Mr. Bradshaw: The national Air Quality Strategy, published in 2000, sets a one hour mean air quality objective for nitrogen dioxide of 200 micrograms per cubic metre not be exceeded more than 18 times per year and an annual mean of 40 micrograms per cubic metre, both to be achieved by 31 December 2005. These objectives, together with objectives for six other air pollutants, are prescribed in the Air Quality (England) Regulations 2000. Local authorities are required to review and assess the objectives and, where these are unlikely to be met, to work towards the achievement. European Council Directive 99/30/EC sets similar limit values for nitrogen dioxide which members states are required to achieve by 2010. The limit values have been implemented by the Air Quality Limit Values Regulations 2003.

American Ships (Decommissioning)

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the polychlorinated biphenyls in the US ships intended for decommissioning by Able UK have been analysed to determine whether the waste meets the necessary standards for (a) incineration and (b) landfill. [143442]

Mr. Morley: Not yet. Dismantling work on the ships is currently prevented while matters concerning their future are addressed.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will take steps to prevent further US vessels crossing the Atlantic for dismantling in Hartlepool. [143663]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 11 December 2003]: The remaining nine vessels in the contract, will remain in the US pending the resolution of US legal action which prevents them leaving the US before April 2004.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether planning permission for the construction of the dry dock at Able UK was within its period of validity when the American ghost ships were given permission to come to the UK. [143808]

Mr. Morley: Whether a grant of planning permission is effective for the development concerned is a matter in the first place for the relevant local planning authority and ultimately the courts.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received asking her to ban the slaughter of animals without pre-stunning; and if she will make a statement. [141953]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 4 December 2003]: Following the recommendation in the Farm Animal Welfare Council report on the welfare of red meat animals at slaughter, a number of organisations concerned with animal welfare, and individuals, have called for a ban on slaughter of animals without prior stunning in this country.

Jewish and Muslim groups have suggested that the practice be maintained. We hope to issue our response for consultation early next year.

Mr. Gwyn Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the UK Government's representatives are pursuing the policy of an eight-hour journey limit for slaughter animals in EU Council working group meetings; and if she will make a statement. [143844]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government is seeking a finite journey limit for the transport of animals destined for slaughter and further fattening, in accordance with our policy of replacing the long distance transport of animals for slaughter with a trade in meat. Journey limits cannot be considered in isolation and must be part of an overall package of agreed measures that provide a significant improvement in animal welfare throughout the EU and beyond.

Cattle Testing

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has for pre-movement testing of cattle for exposure to m.bovis. [144438]

Mr. Bradshaw: All farmers have been sent a leaflet "Golden rules for a healthy herd", which advises purchasers to check the disease status of cattle prior to purchase.

In February 2003, the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs announced a review of our bovine tuberculosis strategy. Early in the new year we will be publishing a consultation document which will represent the outcome of the first stage of that review. The consultation document will include proposals for short-term measures for reducing the risk of geographic spread of bovine TB from high to low incidence areas, including consideration of proposals for the pre and/or post movement of cattle.

Cod By-catches

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent research she has commissioned into cod by-catches in nephrops fisheries; and if she will make a statement. [143719]

Mr. Bradshaw: Defra and the other Fisheries Departments in the UK have sufficient data on the catches of vessels which take both nephrops and cod to be able to demonstrate that curtailing nephrops catches brings minimal benefit to cod stocks. We shall continue to draw to the attention of the European Commission the evidence we have on this.

Common Agricultural Policy

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received concerning the Common Agricultural Policy reform options of (a) individual historic payments and (b) regional average payments. [143609]

Mr. Bradshaw: We received over 800 responses to our consultation letter on CAP reform implementation. Most respondents presented arguments in favour of the individual historic, flat rate or hybrid models of allocating entitlements under the new Single Payment Scheme. We will follow our standing practice for public consultations in placing a list of the respondents in the House Library; making copies of individual responses available in the main Defra library (other than those where the respondent has specifically requested the letter or email be withheld); and providing a summary of views on the Department's website. Ministerial colleagues and officials have also had meetings with a range of stakeholders on this issue.

Crop Areas

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether compensation will be paid by her Department to farmers affected by the over-estimation of the wheat area for this year's harvest; and if she will issue a formal apology to farmers. [143587]

Mr. Bradshaw: I regret that the error was made. Defra figures are only one of a number of sources of information available to the market and individual buyers and sellers have to use their own commercial judgment. Although there was an initial increase of approximately £5 per tonne immediately following publication of corrected figures, this had reduced by about half within a few days with the price back on trend. This reflects the UK's position as a price taker rather than a price maker in an international commodity market. UK production is only about 13 per cent. of EU production, and EU production is just over 20 per cent. of world production. On average, however, wheat prices this year are now some £50 per tonne higher than at the same period last year. They have risen steadily throughout the marketing season in response to serious reductions in supply elsewhere in Europe as a result of heat and drought in the summer. This has also coincided with a tighter global market which has seen world wheat prices at their highest levels in recent years. There was no discernable effect on prices when the provisional agricultural census results were published in the middle of September.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures are being taken by the Department to ensure that the estimation of crop areas is accurate; and what assessment has been made of the causes of the error in estimation this year. [143588]

Mr. Bradshaw: The error in the estimation of crop areas this year was caused by unintentional double counting of holdings during the process of combining IACS crop areas with June Census returns. The computer program that extracts the necessary data from the IACS returns has now been rewritten to ensure that this error will not be repeated. In addition, the existing procedures for checking results will be strengthened and a risk assessment process will be instituted to ensure that potential problems are identified. Figures derived from surveys are always subject to some uncertainty, particularly when provisional results are issued, but every attempt is made to minimise this.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures are in place to ensure that errors in estimation of the wheat area harvest are detected. [143589]

Mr. Bradshaw: The error in the estimation of crop areas this year was caused by unintentional double counting of holdings during the process of combining IACS crop areas with June Census returns. The computer program that extracts the necessary data from the IACS returns has now been rewritten to ensure that this error will not be repeated. In addition, the existing procedures for checking results will be strengthened and a risk assessment process will be instituted to ensure that potential problems are identified. Figures derived from surveys are always subject to some uncertainty, particularly when provisional results are issued, but every attempt is made to minimise this.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps her Department takes to ensure the correct estimate of each year's wheat harvest is made. [143668]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 11 December 2003]: Estimating the size of the annual wheat harvest depends on information from a number of different sources gathered over time. A provisional estimate of planted area is normally published in September based on a combination of census and IACS data. Provisional yield information in the form of a production estimate is normally published in October. Updated figures are normally published in November and January respectively.

A number of checks are in place to verify the information coming in from farmers, the processes and the credibility of the aggregate results. Unfortunately, the internal error in the calculation of this year's planted area figures was only discovered by Defra statisticians after the area results had been published, and a corrected Statistical Notice was therefore published on 1 December.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the help available to dairy farmers to increase innovation. [143654]

Mr. Bradshaw: Product innovation is, of course, for individual businesses to consider in line with the demands of the market. Nevertheless, Government can play a role in promoting innovation.

Under the auspices of the Dairy Supply Chain Forum, chaired by my Noble Friend Lord Whitty, the Milk Development Council has been working with other members to establish a Market Development and Innovation sub-group. The objective of this group is to stimulate and co-ordinate innovation for the development of British dairy products by creating a forum for the exchange of market information and ideas that anticipate consumer needs. The group will also consider how barriers to innovation might be addressed.

Furthermore, the Agriculture Development Scheme (ADS) offers grants for the various activities associated with the marketing of produce, including dairy products, and welcomes innovative applications. Support is also available under the England Rural Development Programme, which encourages the development of new products and markets through the Rural Enterprise Scheme and the Processing and Marketing Grant.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with the Office of Fair Trading to seek clarification of competition rules regarding the production, processing and retailing of milk. [143655]

Mr. Bradshaw: The application of competition rules in the milk sector was discussed between Ministers and officials in Defra, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Office of Fair Trading during 2002. These discussions were prompted by comments on the impact of competition rules on collaborative ventures made in the report of the Policy Commission on the Future of Farming and Food. The outcome of the discussions is reflected in the Government's Strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food and in its Response to the Report of the Policy Commission on the Future of Farming and Food, both of which can be found on Defra's website at: http://defraweb/farm/sustain/newstrategy/index.htm

Endangered Species

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many import permits her Department (a) granted and (b) refused for species listed on (i) Appendix I and (ii) Appendix II of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species in each year from 1997, broken down by species. [143756]

Mr. Morley: This Department issues over 5,000 import permits each year for a wide range of CITES controlled species. We do not keep precise statistics of the numbers refused but we believe that approximately 1 per cent. are refused on scientific grounds with a further 2 per cent. to 3 per cent. refused on administrative grounds (e.g. failure to supply outstanding information or refusal to pay the fee).

The breakdown between Appendix I and Appendix II species is not readily obtainable either. However, Annex A and Annex B of the relevant EC Regulation (338/97) broadly equate to CITES Appendices I and II. In recent years 11 per cent. of the permits issued have been for Annex A species and 89 per cent. for Annex B species.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much her Department charges for a permit to import species listed on (a) Appendix I and (b) Appendix II of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species. [143757]

Mr. Morley: The charges are as follows:

	Fee
Plants and Corals
Application for fewer than five genera where the import, export or re-export is for commercial purposes	£7 per genus
Application in respect of five or more genera where the import, export and re-export is for commercial purposes	£5 per genus
Application in respect of any number of genera where the import, export or re-export is not for commercial purposes	£5 per genus
Mammals, Birds, Reptiles and Others
Application for fewer than five genera where the import, export or re-export is for commercial purposes	£10 per species
Application in respect of five or more genera where the import, export and re-export is for commercial purposes	£8 per species
Application in respect of any number of genera where the import, export or re-export is not for commercial purposes	£5 per species

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many Article 10 certificates her Department granted for the sale of species listed on (a) Appendix I and (b) Appendix II of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species in each year from 1997. [143758]

Mr. Morley: Article 10 certificates are issued under EC Regulation 338/97, which lists all CITES species in Annexes which broadly equate to the CITES Appendices. Annex A is therefore broadly equivalent to CITES Appendix I and Annex B to Appendix II. The Regulation requires the issue of Article 10 certificates only for Annex A species. The numbers of certificates produced for the years in question have been:

	Number
1997	5,738
1998	16,838
1999	14,498
2000	14,308
2001	18,754
2002	16,230
2003	[1]16,150

[1] To date.

The 1997 figure is significantly lower than the others because the Regulation did not come into effect until 1 June in that year.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the development of new technologies to help reduce the demand for energy consumption. [142848]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Energy White Paper recognised the need to promote innovation to find new ways to save energy in the future. We agreed with the Chief Scientific Adviser's Energy Research Report that energy efficiency should be a priority area for investment in research and development and an inter-departmental high-level group, on which the Energy Saving Trust and The Carbon Trust are also represented, is co-ordinating work in this field.

The Carbon Trust has established the Low Carbon Innovation Programme, launched in 2002, which aims to accelerate the development of new and emerging low carbon and energy efficient technologies in the UK and provides funding across the low carbon innovation process—research, demonstration and development—by investing in projects and leveraging in further funding.

Environmental Regulations

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the cost and enforcement of EU environmental regulations in (a) the UK, (b) other EU countries and (c) applicant states. [143809]

Mr. Morley: In 1998, this Government announced that no proposal for legislation, which has a potential to impact on business, the voluntary sector or charities, should be considered by Ministers without a Regulatory Impact Assessment (RIA). Departments are required to undertake RIAs for all proposed regulations and policies, including environmental regulations, that impose a burden or realise a benefit to business, charities and the voluntary sector whether initiated by the UK or EU. The RIA includes an analysis of the costs of implementation and enforcement. It is an ex-ante appraisal and it is an explicit requirement that consideration is given to monitoring and review at the appraisal stage.

The RIA process will be strengthened further by the National Audit Office (NAO) taking on a new role as an independent evaluator of selected RIAs. The NAO will focus on the quality of analysis in the RIAs and the thoroughness with which the RIAs have been undertaken. The findings and recommendations of best practice will be fed back to Departments.

All RIAs published by Government Departments since January 2001 can be accessed via the Cabinet Office Regulatory Impact Unit website (http://www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/regulation/index.htm).

The responsibility for assessing the cost and enforcement of EU environmental regulations in other member states rests with individual member states.

In June 2002 the European Commission adopted an Action Plan for Better Regulation, in which it committed itself to the introduction of a two-stage impact assessment process, covering the economic, social and environmental impacts of policy proposals, the phased implementation of which started earlier in 2003. Impact assessment is to be applied to all proposals listed in the Annual Policy Strategy or Work Programme. All proposals will be subject to preliminary assessment, with some proposals being selected for extended assessment.

The European Commission produces an annual survey on the implementation and enforcement of environmental Community law within existing member states. The 4th edition, which covers 2002, is now available and can be accessed through the Europa server (http://europa.eu.int). Comparable data on the implementation and enforcement of EU legislation in the Accession States will also be compiled once they join the EU.

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether it is the policy of her Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on Departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142815]

Alun Michael: Yes. As explained by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 9 December 2002, Official Report, column 92W, the Government are committed to supporting ethical trading wherever possible within the boundaries set by Government's value for money policy and the EC procurement rules.

Defra's policy is to work with the department's catering service providers so that fair trade tea and coffee is available to staff as customers and can be served at official meetings and conferences when appropriate.

To date, Defra and its caterers have arranged for fair trade products to be available at nine of its 11 staff restaurants, including Defra's HQ and a number of regional offices in Guildford, York and Crewe. At each of these sites the teas and coffees served as official hospitality are fair trade products. Efforts to identify potential for serving more fair trade food products are continuing.

Farm Animal Welfare

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Government's plans to regulate farm animal welfare through Codes of Practice that have been recommended by the Farm Animal Welfare Council. [144533]

Mr. Bradshaw: Defra takes account of advice from the Farm Animal Welfare Council when formulating and revising Codes of Practice relating to farm animal welfare. We are in the process of revising Codes of Practice for the welfare of red meat and white meat animals at slaughter and killing. They will be published next year. We also hope to publish revised Codes of Recommendations for the welfare of ducks, goats and turkeys by next summer.

Farmer Subsidies

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average subsidy to eligible farmers in (a) England and Wales, (b) Yorkshire and The Humber, (c) the East Riding of Yorkshire and (d) North Lincolnshire is in 2003–04. [142778]

Mr. Bradshaw: The table shows direct payments to farmers under the Common Agricultural Policy in the European Agriculture Guidance and Guarantee Fund 2003 year (16 October 2002 to 15 October 2003). Some farmers may also have received market support payments, though these are available to traders as well. In addition, farmers benefited from the effect of the market regimes and import tariffs, which kept the price of many commodities in the EU higher than elsewhere. Questions regarding payment of direct grants and subsidies in Wales should be directed to the devolved authorities in Wales.

Area	Number of farmers receiving subsidy	Total subsidy (£)	Average subsidy per farmer (£)
(a) England	88,978	1,539,639,160	17,304
(b) Yorkshire and The Humber	10,506	191,985,666	18,274
(c) East Riding of Yorkshire	1,650	40,551,373	24,577
(d) North Lincolnshire	518	14,482,414	27,958

Fisheries

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs who will lead the UK delegation at the December Fisheries Council. [142726]

Mr. Bradshaw: I will lead the UK delegation at the discussions on fisheries at the December Agriculture and Fisheries Council together with Ross Finnie, Minister for Environment and Rural Development in the Scottish Executive and Ian Pearson, Minister for Agriculture and Rural Development in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will make a statement on the progress of trials of active acoustic deterrents; when the trials will be completed; and when she expects to make an assessment of their effectiveness; [143540]

(2) what type of fisheries will be covered by active acoustic deterrents deployment trials; over what timescale the trials will be conducted; and if she will make a statement. [143541]

Mr. Bradshaw: Defra is grant aiding a trial by the Sea Fish Industry Authority to assess the technical viability of using pingers on gill nets to prevent porpoise bycatch. The first phase has just been completed and the next phase with pingers modified to improve performance and to assess longer term durability is likely to start in February 2004. The timescale for this trial has not yet been fixed. The results will be presented in a Seafish Technical Report.

The findings to date of these trials have been reviewed at a meeting of interested parties, including pinger manufacturers, under the auspices of a Biodiversity Action Plan for the protection of small cetaceans. This review has helped to inform the next stage of the trials. The trials will also be useful in determining the next steps of the UK Small Cetacean Bycatch Response Strategy on which I hope to make an announcement early in the New Year, in consultation with the Devolved Administrations.

Flame Retardants

Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the review of Deca-BDE; and what advice she has received on potential alternatives. [144388]

Alun Michael: We have concluded the environmental risk assessment of deca-BDE carried out under the Existing Substances Regulation (EC) 793/93 and forwarded it to other Member States. Initial discussion has agreed that for the standard risk assessment, no further information nor risk management measures are needed. However, further data, not mandated by the Regulation, is available and this cannot be ignored. This information is of concern but it is not possible at this stage to conclude that there is a clear and unambiguous risk. It was therefore further agreed that the UK should recommend a monitoring programme, which will provide information as to the changing levels of deca-BDE in the environment. We are expecting levels to go down as industry controls its emissions more effectively. The environmental risk assessment is still being discussed within the European process and the final conclusion will ultimately be for the Community.

The examination of alternatives (looking at both efficacy and cost) is a standard part of the next step of this process when looking to see if any risk reduction measures are appropriate. In the case of deca-BDE, some of this work has already been carried out on a precautionary basis—at present a ready, safer alternative has not been identified.

Game Birds

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) whether she plans to introduce provisions on the use of bits and specs for game birds in the Animal Welfare Bill; [144529]

(2) what estimate she has made of the number of companies which use bits on game birds; [144531]

(3) if she will make a statement on the (a) costs and (b) benefits of employing specs on game birds to minimise bird-on-bird aggression and egg-eating. [144532]

Mr. Bradshaw: One of the opportunities provided by the proposed Animal Welfare Bill would be the possibility of introducing codes of practice, including a code on the rearing of gamebirds, which would be subject to parliamentary scrutiny. The codes would support a statutory duty to promote the welfare of animals kept by man. The code on gamebirds would better regulate the methods, including bits and specs, used in rearing. It is not known how many companies currently use bits and what the costs and benefits of employing specs are.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans the Government have to address mistreatment of game birds. [144530]

Mr. Bradshaw: Gamebirds are afforded protection under the Game (Scotland) Act 1772, the Game Act 1831, the Protection of Animals Act 1911, Protection of Animals Act (Scotland) 1912 and the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The proposed Animal Welfare Bill provides an opportunity to modernise the law as far as gamebird rearing in England and Wales is concerned.

Legislation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation sponsored by her Department in 2002–03 was introduced to implement EU requirements. [141135]

Mr. Bradshaw: The information is as follows:

(a) In 2002–03, 50 per cent. of primary legislation sponsored by the Department was introduced to implement EU requirements.

(b) During the same period, in the case of secondary legislation my Department was responsible for the making of 120 Statutory Instruments, of which, 57 per cent. were introduced to implement EU requirements.

Nitrogen Dioxide (Heathrow)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate her Department has made of the number of people who are exposed to nitrogen dioxide in the Heathrow area; and how many people she estimates will be exposed in (a) 2005 and (b) 2010. [144099]

Mr. Bradshaw: Defra has not carried out an assessment of the number of people exposed to nitrogen dioxide in the Heathrow area. Assessments have been carried out on the current and future concentrations of pollutants.

Assessments of air quality impacts in the vicinity of Heathrow have been undertaken by the local authorities and by BAA plc. Having declared Air Quality Management Areas in the Heathrow area, the local authorities are developing action plans to reduce emissions. Some work has been undertaken on future predictions, for example by the London Borough of Hillingdon in relation to 2005. These assessments focus upon pollutant concentrations relative to limit values rather than exposed population.

In the context of air quality work supporting decisions to be announced in the forthcoming Aviation White Paper, the Department for Transport has run air quality emissions scenarios out as far as 2020. I understand this work will be made public following the publication the Aviation White Paper.

Organophosphates

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she expects the database of government-funded projects examining ill health and organophosphates prepared by the Central Science Laboratory in York to be publicly available; and if she will make a statement on research progress relating to organophosphates. [141211]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 4 December 2003]: The database being prepared by the Central Science Laboratory (CSL) covers the whole range research into OPs, both Government sponsored and privately funded. This database can be accessed via the CSL website (www.csl.gov.uk/ops).

Up-to-date information on the Government sponsored research into possible health effects of exposure to OP, including the findings so far, is available on the Veterinary Medicines Directorate's website (www.vmd.gov.uk). Some of this research was delayed in starting by practical problems arising from the FMD outbreak. The full results of this research are now not expected until 2006/07. These will all be peer-reviewed as a quality check before publication.

The Veterinary Products Committee, the independent, expert advisory committee on the safety of veterinary medicines, has considered all of the results available to date and has concluded that none of these justify any additional regulatory action on the current authorisations for organophosphate sheep dips.

Over Thirty Month Scheme

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent assessment she has made of the options for the lifting of the Over Thirty Month scheme with regard to (a) biodiversity, (b) prime meat market prices, (c) the viability of the beef market, (d) the viability of British meat and meat products and (e) British meat exports and (f) Government finances. [142275]

Mr. Bradshaw: Ministers are still considering the FSA advice on replacing the OTM Rule with testing. No direct assessment has been made on the impact of possible changes to the OTM Scheme on biodiversity although it is recognised that the marketing of slower maturing native breeds suited to environmental management would be facilitated by any changes to the Scheme.

Defra has commissioned a study co-ordinated by the MLC (involving all sectors of the meat chain) to investigate the impact on the beef market of any changes to the OTM rule and OTMS exit. It is expected that the impact of a re-introduction of OTM beef would be reduced by import substitution and that the effect on prime beef prices would be minimal once the market adjusted. However the Government are investigating with the EU Commission the possibility of introducing an underpinning temporary market support measure to insure against any disruption to the market. British meat and meat products would be expected to benefit from the increased availability of competitively priced good quality lean beef, domestically produced.

EFSA is currently considering whether export controls on UK beef from cattle born after August 1996 could be reduced.

Packaging

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what initiatives her Department is promoting to minimise unnecessary packaging and use of wrapping paper during the Christmas period. [143514]

Mr. Morley: Minimisation of packaging needs tackling throughout the year not just at Christmas. The Advisory Committee on packaging has recently set up a new Task Force to look at the potential for further reductions in the amount of packaging used by businesses. The Committee will report its findings to Ministers early next year.

We would encourage people to recycle wrapping paper where possible.

Printer Cartridges

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on whether printer cartridges are included in the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive. [143954]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 15 December 2003]: The WEEE Directive applies to whole products placed onto the market and not to individual components, sub-assemblies or consumables, for example, computer memory chips and graphics cards. The Government believes that printer cartridges fall into this cadre of items and are not separately covered. The eco-design provisions of the WEEE Directive would therefore not apply to them. However, these kinds of item would be included when retained within whole products, like a printer, when these become waste and are separately collected for recovery and recycling.

Recycling (Christmas)

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the number of (a) Christmas cards and (b) Christmas trees that were recycled in 2003; what support she provides to local authorities with regard to the recycling of Christmas cards; and if she will make a statement. [144119]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 15 December 2003]: The Department does not collect separate data on either of these two recyclates.

Defra does support and take part in a Christmas Card Recycling Scheme run by the Woodland Trust that recycled 40 million Christmas cards (800 tonnes) in 2003. The charity Environ estimate that 750,000 Christmas trees were recycled during 2003 (approximately 12.5 per cent. of the total sold).

Defra also provides a range of support for local authorities to help improve their recycling rates for all types of household waste.

Set Aside

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the likely impact of the EC proposal to recommend that set aside rates be reduced. [143611]

Mr. Bradshaw: The European Commission has proposed that the rate of compulsory arable set-aside be reduced from 10 per cent. to 5 per cent. for the 2004–05 EU marketing year. The proposal has been made in order to try to restore a more normal balance of supply in response to serious reductions in this year's cereals harvest as a result of prolonged hot weather and drought in Central and Southern Europe in the summer.

The Commission estimates that the measure will increase the supply of cereals by around 7 million tonnes. It is not clear what the impact will be in the UK. There is normally around 400,000 hectares of land in compulsory set-aside each year, with a further and more variable area being set aside voluntarily. In theory, up to 200,000 hectares of additional land could be cropped in 2004 increasing UK cereal production by 1.4 million tonnes based on average yields. In practice, however, the additional output is likely to be significantly lower than this as the proposal has been made after many farmers have finalised their cropping plans for next season.

Reducing the rate of compulsory set-aside may also have some impact on the environmental benefits which can be derived from uncultivated land, though it is difficult to assess this without knowing what land may be put back into cropping.

Single Farm Payment Scheme

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will implement the Single Farm Payment Scheme; and if she will make a statement. [143562]

Mr. Bradshaw: We have already announced our intention to implement the new Single Payment Scheme in 2005, which is the earliest possible date provided for in the June CAP reform agreement. We are currently considering responses to a consultation exercise on how entitlements to payments under the scheme should be allocated.

Snowfall

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what historical data (a) her Department and (b) other publicly-funded bodies collate on snowfall; and what the predicted future annual number of days when there is snowfall are for (i) London and (ii) Edinburgh in (A) 2010, (B) 2020, (C) 2030 and (D) 2050. [144120]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 15 December 2003]: The Department does not collate historical data on snowfall. However, the Met Office, which is an agency of the Ministry of Defence, records daily snowfall frequency and amount at 80 stations in the UK. Most of these records go back to 1971.

In April 2002, the Department published new "Climate Change Scenarios for the UK". These scenarios include information on total winter snowfall amounts, but not number of snowfall days. The scenarios show that snowfall in the London and Edinburgh areas could be reduced by between 55 per cent. and 90 per cent. by the 2080s (compared to the 1961–1990 baseline), depending on the degree of future climate change. Scaling these figures back to the years in question gives the following estimates of the reduction in snowfall amount at both locations, depending on whether there is a low or high degree of climate change:

	Percentage reduction
2010	17–30
2020	22–38
2030	27–47
2050	37–65

These figures represent general trends, not predictions of the amount of snowfall in specific years, which will be greatly influenced by natural year-to-year variability, particularly in the first few decades of the century. Further information is available in the full report in the Libraries of both Houses.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent assessment she has made of the predicted changes in the frequency of the number of days when there is snowfall in the United Kingdom under future scenarios of climate change; and what regional variations were identified in that assessment. [144121]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 15 December 2003]: In April 2002, the Department published new "Climate Change Scenarios for the UK". The scenarios do not contain an analysis of the changes in the number of snowfall days, but show that climate change will cause the amount of snowfall to decline significantly throughout the UK in the future. By the 2080s, large areas of the UK are likely to experience quite long sequences of snowless winters. Coastal areas and the English lowlands are likely to show the largest percentage reductions (up to 90 per cent. or more by the 2080s compared to 1961–1990 baseline), while the Scottish Highlands and parts of Northern Ireland may experience smaller percentage reductions (50 per cent. or less).

In addition, in July 2003 the Met Office published climate change scenarios for small islands within the British-Irish Council region. These include the Channel Islands, Isle of Man, Western Isles, Orkney Islands, and Shetland Isles.

Both reports are in the Libraries of both Houses.

Sustainable Development Summit

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what follow-up action has been taken since the Sustainable Development summit in Johannesburg; and if she will make a statement. [142041]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 1 September 2003, Official Report, column 845W, which noted that the Government would be presenting an overview of progress against commitments made at the Johannesburg World Summit on Sustainable Development (WSSD). That progress report, which covers actions across Government, has now been published and is available at http://www.sustainable-development.gov.uk/eac-wssd/progress.htm

Turkey Farms

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) whether any cases of the liver disease blackhead have been detected in commercial turkey farms in the UK this year; [143612]

(2) what measures her Department has taken to protect commercial turkey farmers from the liver disease blackhead. [143665]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 11 December 2003]: Blackhead is not a notifiable disease so it is not possible to provide an accurate figure for the number of cases. Of the cases diagnosed by the Veterinary Laboratories Agency in 2003 most have been in back-yard turkey flocks of under 100 birds, with a very small number of turkey flocks of under 2,000 birds also affected. We are not aware of disease in any larger turkey flocks.

Following the recent withdrawal of the only remaining authorised medication for the treatment of birds infected with Blackhead, the UK is pressing the EU Commission to keep the disease situation under review with a view to adopting remedial measures if the disease risk increases significantly.

Good biosecurity is a key measure in the prevention of a number of poultry diseases including Blackhead. To reinforce this message, Defra has placed on its website guidance for poultry producers to minimise the risk of Blackhead. In addition VLA Regional Laboratories have circulated an update on blackhead including advice on control to veterinary practices.

Waste Management

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how she plans to reduce spending pressures on local government in respect of waste next year, as announced in the statement by the right hon. Member for Greenwich and Woolwich (Mr. Raynsford), Official Report, 19 November 2003, column 786. [143316]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 December 2003]: We have announced that we are putting back the start date of the Landfill Allowance Trading Scheme to 2005. This is consistent with the views expressed by local authorities in the recent consultation on the implementation of the scheme. It will reduce spending pressures by around £10m overall.

The Department is looking urgently at the options for meeting the remainder of its commitment to relieve spending pressures, and will be making an announcement shortly.

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what advice her Department gave his constituent, Mr. Ross Donovan, in relation to his company's compliance with Directive 2000/76/EC on the Incineration of Waste when he first contacted her Department; when this advice changed; and what advice her Department is currently able to give. [143854]

Mr. Morley: The Department's first contact with Mr. Donovan, (who is the hon. Member's constituent and not the Secretary of State's) and his company was on 19 September 2003. Mr. Donovan had previously had discussions with the Environment Agency and attended a meeting at the Agency's Huntingdon office on 24 July 2003. During that meeting, Mr. Donovan was advised that there was a possibility that his plant would be subject to the Waste Incineration Directive and the Pollution Prevention and Control (England and Wales) Regulations 2000 (the PPC Regulations). Following the meeting, this advice was confirmed in a letter to Mr. Donovan of 13 August 2003. The letter also stated that the plant may fall within the regulatory remit of the appropriate local authority in England and Wales or the Scottish Environmental Protection Agency (SEPA), depending on where the plant would be located.

Prior to transposition of the Waste Incineration Directive at the end of 2002 it was difficult for the Environment Agency to be able to provide firm advice to every operator on whether they would be subject to it However, my Department consulted on draft Regulations and Directions during the summer of 2002. The transposition of the Waste Incineration Directive and the publication by my Department of draft "Guidance on the Directive 2000/76/EC on the Incineration of Waste" was publicised through articles in the trade press and at a ministerial press conference in January 2003.

A group of my officials visited Mr. Donovan on 12 November 2003 to consider his case, at which time he was again advised that it was possible that his plant would be subject to the Waste Incineration Directive and the PPC Regulations. Following the visit and further consideration of Mr. Donovan's plant by my officials working with the Environment Agency, I will write to the hon. Member shortly with the outcome.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she is taking to ensure that the polluter pays principle applies to the (a) collection of and (b) management of municipal waste. [143281]

Mr. Morley: The Waste Framework Directive (75/442/EEC as amended by 91/156/EEC) sets out a range of measures on the management of waste—including its collection and disposal. These measures include Article 8 which requires that "any holder of waste has it handled by a private or public waste collector"; and Article 15 which provides that "In accordance with the 'polluter pays' principle, the cost of disposing of waste must be borne by the holder who has it handled by a waste collector."

The Government have put a range of measures in place under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the Controlled Waste Regulations 1992 and the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994 to comply with the Directive's requirements. These measures include the arrangements for the collection and disposal of household waste by waste collection and disposal authorities. The cost of collection and disposal under these arrangements is met through taxation and charges. Most commercial and industrial waste is collected and disposed of by the private sector under arrangements which comply with the Directive. The cost of collection and disposal under these arrangement is met through charges.

Municipal waste includes household waste and any other wastes collected by a waste collection authority or its agents under Part II of the 1990 Act (Waste Strategy 2000 page 198 (Cm 4693–2)).

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which 10 local authorities had the (a) highest and (b) lowest recycling rates in the last year for which figures are available. [143282]

Mr. Morley: The percentage of household waste recycled and composted by the 10 highest and lowest performing local authorities, for which the most recent data available are 2001–02, is presented in the following table.

Local authority	Percentage of household waste recycled and composted in 2001–02
Daventry District Council	43.7
Lichfield District Council	32.8
Eastleigh Borough Council	29.5
Forest Heath District Council	29.2

[1] Municipal Waste Management Survey 2001–02.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what high temperature incineration capacity she estimates the UK will require when provisions of the Landfill Directive relating to hazardous waste are implemented in the UK. [143283]

Mr. Morley: Current high temperature incineration capacity (HTI) in the UK is approximately 110,000 tonnes per annum. Work undertaken for the Hazardous Waste Forum suggests that the demand for HTI is likely to increase, but that the level of any increase is dependent on a number of factors, not least future arisings of hazardous waste. The Forum continues to keep these issues under review, in particular through the treatment and capacity task force.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what additional (a) recycling, (b) composting, (c) energy recovery and (d) hazardous waste treatment capacity will be required in England to achieve compliance with the Landfill Directive in (a) 2009, (b) 2013 and (c) 2020. [143284]

Mr. Morley: Waste Strategy 2000 provided five estimates of waste management options over the period 2000 to 2020. A 'base case' was modelled so that the additional cost of meeting the landfill targets for biodegradable waste and the waste strategy goals could be calculated. The other four models provided different mixes of recycling, composting and incineration and the additional capacity required for those facilities under each option.

Cases 3 and 4 (increasing levels of recycling and composting with some incineration with energy recovery) were designed to meet the waste strategy targets, as well as the requirements of the Landfill Directive.

The actual figures for additional capacity can be seen in annex C in Part Two of Waste Strategy 2000 (table C8 on page 194). A copy of the strategy is in the House of Common's Library and can also be accessed through the Defra website at: www.defra.gov.uk/environment/waste/strategy/cm4693/index.htm.

Future hazardous waste treatment capacity required under the Landfill Directive depends in part on future arisings of hazardous waste. Currently some 5 million tonnes of hazardous waste is consigned each year in England and Wales. Analysis in support of the Hazardous Waste Forum shows that future arisings of hazardous waste will be affected, among other matters, by future levels of waste minimisation balanced against changes to the hazardous waste list. Nevertheless, the Landfill Directive requires all hazardous waste to be treated prior to landfill or to be dealt with in an alternative treatment option altogether, such as high temperature incineration or co-incineration. It is clear that new treatment plants for hazardous waste will be required, for example to solidify waste, and to enable hazardous waste to meet the landfill waste acceptance criteria under the Directive. The Hazardous Waste Forum is considering these issues and requirements in detail through its treatment and capacity task force.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many tonnes of (a) glass, (b) paper, (c) wood, (d) plastic and (e) metal containers were recycled by community organisations in (i) 2000, (ii) 2001 and (iii) 2002; what the average cost per tonne was; and if she will make a statement on how their performance was audited. [143286]

Mr. Morley: As part of Defra's Municipal Waste Management Survey, local authorities are asked to submit any data on recycling carried out by community organisations in their area, that they are aware of. The responses for 2000–01 and 2001–02 are shown in the table. The data are not believed to be comprehensive.

	Voluntary/private collections
Material recycled in thousand tonnes	2000–01	2001–02
Paper and card	24	13
Glass	1	1
Compost	1	1
Scrap metal and white goods	0	0
Textiles	4	1
Cans	0	0
Plastics	0	0
Co-mingled	2	4
Other (inc. oils, batteries, aluminium foil, books and shoes)	4	14
Total	35	34

The Community Recycling Network, a national umbrella organisation for community and not-for-profit waste management groups claims that their members account for approximately 7 per cent. of the total material collected from households for recycling in the UK.

This Department does not collect the requested cost data nor does it audit the performance of community waste organisations.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions her Department has had with representatives of the waste management sector on incorporating combined heat and power in new developments. [143287]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Department recognises that CHP has a part to play in effective waste management, as demonstrated in the recent changes to the criteria applied to waste PFI projects. These were in direct response to the views of the market and the waste management sector will be invited to contribute to a wider review of the criteria which is now in train.

We also provide direct support to energy from waste projects through our Community Energy programme, delivering community heating mainly through the use of CHP. Meetings with the waste management sector have resulted in five energy from waste schemes receiving more than £2.5m or over 10 per cent. of the funding awarded.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much public money has been spent on collecting and managing municipal waste in the United Kingdom in each year since 1997, and how much on average it cost to collect and manage one tonne of municipal waste in the UK in each year since 1997. [143291]

Mr. Morley: Annual net current expenditure by English waste authorities for providing the services of collection and disposal of municipal waste are taken from annual ODPM Local Authority Revenue Outturn Returns. Annual municipal waste arisings are taken from the Defra Municipal Waste Management Survey.

The data are listed as follows are for the financial years 1997–98 to 2001–02 and are for English local authorities. An average net cost of managing one tonne of municipal waste has been estimated based on this data. Financial data exclude any capital charges.

Financial year	(a) Municipal waste arisings (thousand tonnes)	(b) Net current expenditure (£000)	(b/a) Cost to manage one tonne of municipal waste (£)
1997–98	25,711	1,198,880	46.63
1998–99	26,337	1,281,919	48.67
1999–2000	27,480	1,423,278	51.79
2000–01	28,057	1,521,338	54.22
2001–02	28,823	1,653,856	57.38

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs in what circumstances solid polychlorinated biphenyls can be (a) landfilled and (b) incinerated. [143506]

Mr. Morley: Wastes contaminated with polychlorinated biphenyls (RGBs) can only be landfilled where the authorisation allows it. Limit values apply to all deposits of PCB contaminated waste and are given in Government guidance (Waste Management Paper No 6—"Polychlorinated Biphenyls"). Additionally, implementation of the Landfill Directive will subject any solid PCB contaminated waste to the pre-treatment requirements and waste acceptance criteria.

Similarly, PCBs can be incinerated in hazardous waste incinerators which have been authorised to burn such wastes. These incinerators are required to meet the stringent emission limits specified in the Hazardous Waste Incineration Directive (94/67/EC).

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the rate of landfill tax is in other member states of the European Union where such a tax is levied. [143290]

Mr. Morley: The Strategy Unit Report 'Waste not, Want not' published in November 2002 contained the following table:

European Union state	Tax rates (£/tonne)
Austria	18–54
Belgium	3–14
Denmark	28
Finland	9
France	4
Germany	None
Greece	None
Ireland	None
Italy	0.6–16
Luxembourg	None
Netherlands	8–40
Portugal	None
Spain	None
Sweden	17
UK	2–13

Water Bills

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average household water bill was in (a) England and (b) each English region in each financial year since 1996–97. [142272]

Mr. Morley: Water bills and sewerage bills are set separately by each water and sewerage company and water company in England and Wales. The boundaries of these companies do not conform to the boundaries between England and Wales nor to the boundaries between English regions. It is therefore not possible to provide the information on exactly the basis sought.

The average household water and sewerage bills in England and Wales in each financial year since 1996–97 are set out as follows.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Give as You Earn Scheme

John Barrett: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission how many and what percentage of House of Commons staff contribute to a charity through the Give as You Earn scheme; how much money is donated to charity per month by staff through the scheme; and what steps the Commission is taking to encourage greater participation in the scheme by staff. [143909]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: 59 members of staff currently contribute to charity under the Give as You Earn scheme. This represents 3.6 per cent. of permanent staff on the payroll. The amount contributed in November was £1,467.13. The Board of Management encourages charitable giving, and details of how to contribute through GAYE are set out in the staff handbook. The last significant promotional activity was in 1999–2000 when the Charities Aid Foundation visited staff to encourage them to take up GAYE.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Equal Pay

John Barrett: To ask the Minister for Women what action she has taken to support women to challenge pay discrimination in the workplace; and if she will make a statement. [142610]

Ms Hewitt: The Government is taking action to make it easier for women who have been discriminated against to take up equal pay cases with their employers. This includes the introduction of a questionnaire procedure that will help resolve matters in the workplace and measures to simplify and speed up equal pay tribunal procedures. The equal pay questionnaire came into effect on 6 April 2003 and enables individuals to request key information from their employers right at the start when they are deciding whether to bring a case. The frequent lack of transparency on pay has helped perpetuate the gender pay gap. The questionnaire will help individuals, often women, to establish whether they actually are being paid less than their comparators and, if so, why. Establishing the key facts quickly could encourage the issues to be settled without resort to tribunal, benefiting both employers and employees. We are looking at further ways to speed up and simplify complex equal value cases and will be consulting on proposals shortly. The Government also believes that carrying out an equal pay review should be good business practice for every employer and has developed a number of initiatives to help them, including funding the Equal Opportunities Commission to develop equal pay tool kits.

John Barrett: To ask the Minister for Women what discussions she has had with trade unions regarding the formulation of a development plan to tackle gender pay discrimination in the workplace. [142611]

Ms Hewitt: As a Government, we are committed to working in partnership with the trade union movement and others to tackle the barriers facing women in the workplace and reduce the gender pay gap. We provided additional funding of £151,867 (on top of an initial £145,000) to trade unions, for training representatives in equal pay issues in the workplace. The trade unions were fully consulted on the pay reviews of Civil Service Departments and supported the comprehensive guidance issued by the Cabinet Office. The Cabinet Office continues to have an open dialogue with the trades unions on progress across the Civil Service. We have a target that the Government will work with businesses and trade unions, the Equal Opportunities Commission and Opportunity Now towards ensuring that 35 per cent of large organisations have done pay reviews by 2006. We have provided the EOC with funds to take a sectoral approach to promoting equal pay reviews. We are also promoting pay reviews through the Castle Awards, now incorporated in the 100 Best Companies To Work For, to recognise steps taken by employers of all sizes and in all sectors to promote equality of opportunity between men and women and to address the issues of pay inequality.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Business Investment

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to what she attributes the percentage change in business investment during 2002. [143426]

Ms Hewitt: Business investment fell by 3.5 per cent. in 2002, following a combined 32 per cent. rise between 1997 and 2001. A number of investments planned for 2002 were deferred. The unexpected severity of the global economic slowdown in 2001 and added uncertainty in 2002 impacted on investment and business confidence across industrialised countries.

Business investment is forecast to have grown by ¾ per cent. in 2003, with growth accelerating to be at least 3 per cent. in 2004 and 5½ per cent. in 2005.

Call Centres

Colin Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many call centre jobs have been lost in the UK in the last six months. [143372]

Ms Hewitt: I refer to the answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Chorley (Mr. Hoyle) on 20 November, Official Report, column 1438W. The Government does not have statistics on the numbers of jobs outsourced abroad. Importantly, estimates such jobs take no account of the inflows of jobs created through the UK's success in international markets.

Companies (Annual Earnings)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many companies were required to restate their annual earnings in (a) 2002 and (b) 2003; [144183]

(2) what her Department's policy is on companies with a trading presence in the UK who restate their earnings in the US. [144185]

Jacqui Smith: The Financial Reporting Review Panel (FRRP) considers whether the annual accounts of UK public companies and large private companies comply with the requirements of the Companies Act 1985. To date it has acted in response to complaints or other concerns and has always been able to resolve issues without the need to use its formal powers, which are to apply to the courts for an order requiring a company to restate its accounts.

The FRRP would consider in the usual way any complaint made to it about a UK company which had restated its earnings in the US. The FRRP is also introducing a pro-active element into its work—that is it will select a number of accounts for review on the basis of a risk assessment. It would be a matter for the FRRP to consider whether to look at the accounts of any UK company which restates its earnings in the US.

Crown Estate

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how the Energy Bill will change the role of the Crown Estate with regard to (a) seabed control, (b) taxation of marine renewables and (c) planning control of marine renewables. [144898]

Mr. Timms: The Energy Bill when enacted will enable The Crown Estate to licence areas of the seabed in the Renewable Energy Zone for the purpose of exploring and exploiting the UK's wind, wave and tidal resources for the production of energy. The Renewable Energy Zone will be established around the UK, adjacent to the territorial sea, in accordance with the provisions of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea.

Any financial consideration which The Crown Estate may charge for the use of the seabed is a matter for that organisation, in accordance with the Crown Estate Act 1961.

Planning control of marine renewables is a matter for Government Departments.

Departmental Staff

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the levels of sick leave in her Department as reported in 'Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service 2002'. [143989]

Ms Hewitt: I welcome my Department's reduction in sick absence shown in the report. Reduction of sick absence continues to be a priority in the delivery of the DTI's Business Plan.

Entrepreneurs

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people (a) entered self-employment and (b) were considering going into business on the latest month for which figures are available, broken down by (i) region and (ii) local authority area. [143133]

Nigel Griffiths: The Office for National Statistics' Labour Force Survey estimates the stock of self-employed people in the UK, and in Summer 2003, there were 3.4 million self-employed people in the UK. Regional estimates are also available (see Table 1).

New VAT registrations are the best guide to new business activity (start-ups) in the UK and are available for regions and local/unitary authorities are set out in Table 3 which I have placed in the Libraries of the House.

In 2001, 12 per cent. of working age adults in England were considering going into business (or becoming self-employed). Data for the nine regions in England are shown in Table 2.

Table 1: Self-employed people in the UK and regions, summer 2003

ONS Labour Force Survey, Summer 2003. Due to slight methodological differences between the way the national and regional LFS estimates have been interim adjusted for the 2001 Census, there may be slight differences between the UK total and the sum of the regional components

Environmental Liability Directive

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the impact that the proposed environmental liability directive will have on small businesses in the UK. [144208]

Nigel Griffiths: The proposed environmental liability Directive is still subject to the outcome of EU negotiations.

The UK is working together with other Member States to ensure that the final version of the Directive does not stipulate compulsory financial security as this measure would be extremely costly and place a disproportionate burden on small businesses.

European Legislation

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what grant assistance is available to trade associations to help them meet the costs of consultation and representation associated with European legislation; and if she will make a statement. [144872]

Jacqui Smith: DTI values the important input that trade associations make to the development of robust policy in the UK and in Europe. Trade associations in sectors covered by DTI work closely with DTI sector units, which will, from time to time, co-sponsor joint projects.

Flexible Working

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment the Government have made of the demand for flexible working practices. [144513]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Evidence demonstrates that the demand for flexible working by employees is high.

The Spring 2003 Labour Force Survey indicates that 22 per cent. of employees (5.5 million) presently work some form of flexible working arrangement. The preliminary findings of the 2003 DTI Work-Life Balance survey of employees shows that there is substantial demand for flexible working patterns amongst those who do not work in each of these ways; 49 per cent. wanting to work flexitime, 34 per cent. a compressed working week, 32 per cent. work term time only and 29 per cent. expressing a desire to regularly work from home. The full report is to be published early in 2004.

This is supported by the findings of the CIPD/Lovells October 2003 research into the impact of the new flexible working law, which indicates that over a quarter (28 per cent.) of employers have seen an increase in the total number of requests for flexible working since the law was introduced in April 2003. The Government's Work-Life Balance Campaign continues to support demand by encouraging employers to follow best practice and providing flexible working opportunities across the workplace that meet the needs of the business.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information she has collected on (a) the number of requests which have been received by businesses for flexible working and (b) the number of such requests which have been granted. [144514]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The DTI is collecting evidence from a number of sources to build up a clear picture of the demand for, and uptake of, flexible working:

The second Work-Life Balance study of employers (fieldwork Dec 02-Apr 03) showed that:

> In the previous year, less than a fifth (17 per cent.) of employers had received a request, from an employee, to change their working pattern for a sustained period of time;
> Of those employees who made a request, over three-quarters (77 per cent.) said their request had been agreed.

To provide a direct comparison over time, it is planned that the WLB survey will be repeated in 2005.

A recent survey by the Chartered Institute of Personnel Development and Lovells (fieldwork Sept 2003) on the use of the new right to request flexible working in the first six months showed that:

> Over a quarter of employers (28 per cent.) have seen an increase in the total number of requests for flexible working since April 2003;
> Of those organisations that have received statutory requests since the right was introduced in April, nearly two thirds (62 per cent.) have approved at least half of all such requests, either in the form submitted by the employee or in modified form.

The Department have also commissioned questions on flexible working which currently appear in the Office of National Statistics Omnibus survey. The results of these will be available in Spring 2004.

We continue to work with key intermediaries, such as Working Families and Maternity Alliance, who are collating data through member/supporter surveys.

Industrial Tribunals

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the total cost to UK businesses was of industrial tribunal cases concerned with (a) disability, (b) sex and (c) race discrimination in each of the last five years. [143831]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Department does not hold statistics on the costs to employers of having an Employment Tribunal claim made against them under the main jurisdictions of disability, sex and race discrimination in each of the last five years.

However, the estimated average cost per Employment Tribunal application to employers for all jurisdictions, including legal fees, management time and other staff time, is about £2,000. Not all applications registered will lead to a Tribunal hearing. The table below shows the number of claims each year by the main jurisdictions of disability, sex and race discrimination, each multiplied by £2,000 to give the estimated costs to employers, rounded to two significant figures.

£ million

	1998-99	1999-2000	2000-01	2001-02	2002-03
Disability discrimination	2.9	3.5	4.2	5.2	5.4
Sex discrimination	12	9.9	34	20	16
Race discrimination	5.5	6.5	6.9	6.4	6.1

These estimates will be on the low side since discrimination applications tend to be more complicated and hence require more staff time and higher legal fees than the average application.

Iraq

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on her assessment of the likely role of UK small businesses in rebuilding Iraq. [142845]

Ms Hewitt: Although most of the main reconstruction work in Iraq will be done by large contractors, there will be opportunities for small businesses in the supply chain, sub-contracting, and in the provision of equipment and specialist services. My Department is helping UK firms make the necessary contacts in Iraq through networking events in neighbouring countries and the provision of project information.

MG Rover

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much public assistance has been given to MG Rover since it was sold to the Phoenix venture capital group. [140519]

Jacqui Smith: MG Rover Group was sold in May 2000 to Techtronic (2000) Ltd. This company was later acquired by Phoenix Venture Holdings Ltd. Since May 2000, MG Rover has been offered public assistance of up to £9 million towards the cost of employee training and development. As of 1 December 2003, MG Rover had drawn down £3,512,211 which represents 39.7 per cent. of the total sum spent by the company under this programme.

MG Rover has received one offer of grant for £62,500 under the Foresight Vehicle LINK programme, to fund collaborative research.

Note:

A consortium led by MG Rover has been successful in the Low Carbon Car Challenge, offered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. No funding has yet been given under this programme. The final amount that will be payable is the subject of some discussion between the company and officials from the Department for Transport.

Miners' Compensation

Jeff Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many full and final settlements have been made to former miners suffering from (a) chronic bronchitis emphysema and (b) vibration white finger which total less than £2,143. [142194]

Nigel Griffiths: The number of claims settled by payment of less than 2,143 are:

	Number of claims settled by full and final payment of less than £2,143 as of 7 December 2003
Respiratory disease	40,538
Vibration White Finger	4,617
Total	45,155

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if her Department will examine the cases of chronic obstructive pulmonary disease and vibration white finger claimants who entered into conditional fee agreements with solicitors prior to the April 2000 law change and have recently been charged success fees that reflect 25 per cent. of their awards; and what steps she is taking to ensure that solicitors do not double-charge by claiming success fees from both the defendant and the claimant. [143628]

Nigel Griffiths: Officials from the DTI met with officials from the Department for Constitutional Affairs and the Law Society on 11 December to discuss what action should be taken to address the concerns raised regarding agreements signed by claimants under the coal health compensation schemes. The Law Society have agreed to refer the matter to the next meeting of the their Compliance Board on 13 January. In the meantime I have written to all the solicitors and claims handlers who are processing claims under the health schemes asking them to re-pay any money taken from claimants' compensation on top of the costs paid by the DTI.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps her Department is taking in relation to (a) solicitors who additionally charge their clients for undertaking their chronic obstructive pulmonary disease and vibration white finger claims and (b) the recovery of money paid by such claimants to their solicitors. [143807]

Nigel Griffiths: I believe that 100 per cent. of compensation should go to the claimants and I am writing all the solicitors and claims handlers who are processing claims under the health schemes asking them to re-pay any money taken from claimants' compensation on top of the costs paid by the DTI.

Miners Pensions

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what investments have been made using the Miners' Pension Fund surplus; and if she will make a statement. [143677]

Mr. Timms: Under the terms of the Government's Guarantee arrangements for the Mineworkers' Pension Scheme and the British Coal Staff Superannuation Scheme, 50 per cent. of past investment surpluses were available for the Trustees to distribute to members as improved benefits. This has meant members now receive bonuses totalling around 30 per cent. on top of their guaranteed benefits.

The remaining 50 per cent. went to the Guarantor's fund within the schemes and is payable to the Consolidated Fund in instalments over 10 year periods.

Ministerial Visits

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to visit India. [144266]

Ms Hewitt: I have no plans to visit India in the near future. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Trade, Investment and Foreign Affairs, is planning to visit India in the new year.

National Environment Research Council

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria the Natural Environment Research Council uses to allocate funding to universities. [142998]

Ms Hewitt: NERC allocates research funding after assessment of individual project proposals received from institutions eligible for funding. Their three-stage review process consists of: an Initial Review by the Peer Review College; an External Review by independent peer reviewers; and a final review and grading by a Moderating Panel.

At each stage, project proposals are assessed for Excellence; Fit to NERC Priorities; balance of Risk-Reward; and Cost Effectiveness. Details of the review process, assessment criteria and how they are applied to various categories of research proposals are set out on NERC's website at http://www.nerc.ac.uk/funding/preaward/criteria.shtml. Allocations are not made on a simple university basis.

NERC determines the allocation of postgraduate studentships given to a department on the basis of NERC grant income and fellowships received by that department, provided the RAE rating of the department is not lower than 3b.

MSc studentship allocations are reviewed every five years to assess the quality of the course, how it fits with NERC priorities and the overall balance within the NERC portfolio, and the relevance and/or benefits to end-users.

Fellowships are awarded after assessment against criteria which consider primarily the excellence of the science and the track record and potential of the individual. The assessors also consider the availability of required facilities at the proposed department of tenure.

Network Reinvention Programme (North Yorkshire)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact of the Network Reinvention Programme on the Post Office network in North Yorkshire. [144607]

Mr. Timms: The aim of the programme is a viable network of urban sub post offices, able to thrive commercially and to meet the needs of all parts of our communities.

Post Office Ltd. (POL) is committed to ensuring that at the end of the programme nationally 95 per cent. of the urban population will still live within a mile of their nearest post office and the majority within half a mile.

Oil-fired Appliances

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland which undertake (i) installation and (ii) maintenance of oil-fired domestic central heating systems are registered with the Oil Firing Technical Association. [143070]

Ms Hewitt: There are many companies within the UK which undertake installation and maintenance of oil-fired central heating systems registered with the Oil Firing Technical Association (OFTEC) and I would refer my colleague to OFTECs own website—http://www.oftec.org/—which gives access to a comprehensive list of these companies.

Personnel Administration

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will provide the information referred to in her answer to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham of 18 September, Official Report, column 880W, on personnel administration. [144159]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 16 December 2003]: I have nothing to add to the letter which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary for Small Business and Enterprise sent the hon. Member on 30 September.

Post Offices

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the proposed closure of the post office at 69–71 City Way, Rochester, Kent. [143561]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 17 December 2003]: Decisions on post office closures and relocations are an operational matter for Post Office Ltd. In accordance with the Code of Practice on Post Office Closures and Relocations—agreed between Post Office Ltd. and Postwatch, the consumer watchdog for postal services—the company enters into consultation on all proposed closures.

Postwatch are consulted on every post office closure proposal before a decision is made and there is every opportunity for those affected by a proposal, and the local MP, to make representations to the company or to Postwatch.

Pre-Budget Report

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are contained in the pre-Budget report to encourage investment in the (a) manufacturing and (b) service sector. [143424]

Ms Hewitt: The pre-Budget report contained a number of measures and announcements that will encourage investment across the manufacturing and service sectors :

Doubling the amount of investment qualifying for the 40 per cent. plant and machinery first year allowances and a £400 million cash flow boost to smaller businesses over the next three years. Resulting from the increase in Company Law thresholds for small and medium-sized businesses in line with the new EU maxima;

A new, clearer and more accessible R&D tax credit definition and extension of the scope of qualifying costs, to further promote the development of science and innovation;

Reform of the way public sector engages with suppliers to provide greater clarity and certainty. Alan Wood of Siemens will be reviewing how we can improve the ability of UK firms to compete for public procurement contracts in the EU;

Reforms to reduce the regulatory burden on enterprise;

An extension of Employer Training Pilots for a third year to cover over a third of England;

Measures to support fast growing innovative firms by reducing barriers to raising finance for small business, including a pathfinder round of Enterprise Capital Funds and proposed enhancements to Venture Capital Trusts and the Enterprise Investment Scheme;

Launching an independent review of the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme, to ensure its effectiveness;

Measures to support regional growth, including details of the Local Authority Business Growth Incentives scheme, which will boost the role of local authorities in business growth, and, in Enterprise Areas, a Business Premises Renovation Allowance;

Measures to promote a step change in the UK's enterprise culture, including supporting a national campaign by Enterprise Insight;

Improvements to the VAT flat-rate scheme, including new lower rates, to ensure more businesses can benefit fully from compliance savings.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are contained in the pre-Budget report to encourage private sector investment. [143437]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 11 December 2003]: The pre-Budget report contained a number of measures that will encourage private sector investment including:

Reforms to reduce the regulatory burden on enterprise;

Measures to overcome barriers to raising finance for small business, including a pathfinder round of Enterprise Capital Funds and proposed enhancements to Venture Capital Trusts and the Enterprise Investment Scheme;

A new, clearer and more accessible R&D tax credit definition and extension of the scope of qualifying costs, to further promote the development of science and innovation;

An extension of Employer Training Pilots for a third year to cover over a third of England.

In addition pre-Budget report announced:

Launching an independent review of the Small Firms Loan Guarantee, to ensure its effectiveness;

Consulting on the most appropriate structure for a tax transparent property investment trust, as recommended in the interim report of the Barker Review.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what funding allocations have been made by each of the regional development agencies for the promotion of (a) tourism and (b) the arts in (i) 2003–04 and (ii) 2004–05; and if she will make a statement. [144671]

Jacqui Smith: I am advised that the following sums have been allocated by England's Regional Development Agencies from their single programme budgets to the promotion of tourism and the arts in the specified years. However, the figures should be treated as estimates because there is no generally accepted definition of the arts and because they will not include projects funded by the RDAs, such as regeneration activity, where tourism or arts are fundamental to the project but are not the main consideration. Furthermore, as the RDAs do not have a specific responsibility to promote the arts, some RDAs do not record spend against a dedicated budget heading. Proposals for RDA funding to promote tourism and the arts are considered against the priorities set out in the region's Regional Economic Strategy.

Second Charge Life Mortgages

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what discussions she has had with consumer groups about whether second charge life mortgages should continue to be regulated via the Consumer Credit Act 1974; [144337]

(2) what plans she has to regulate the sale of second charge life mortgages over £25,000. [144338]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Department have had no discussions with consumer groups about whether second charge life mortgages should continue to be regulated via the Consumer Credit Act 1974.

However, my Department have had a number of discussions with key stakeholders—business, consumer groups and enforcement agencies, regarding the removal of the £25,000 financial limit for consumer borrowing. This will ensure that in the case of second charge mortgages, all consumer borrowing will be captured by the Consumer Credit Act.

Small Businesses

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the start up rate was for small businesses in (a) each London borough, (b) London and (c) England in each year since 1997. [144172]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 15 December 2003]: Value added tax (VAT) registrations and de-registrations are the best official guide to the pattern of start-ups and closures. These cover businesses of all sizes.

The rates of businesses registering for VAT in each calendar year from 1997 to 2002 in each London borough, London, and England, are set out as follows.

However, changes since 1997 have given the UK the highest VAT threshold in the EU and removed up to 700,000 businesses from the requirement to register for VAT.

The Accident Group

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will appoint independent investigators to examine fees charged by receivers at the Accident Group. [144187]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Accident Group is in administration. The Secretary of State has no power to intervene in the fees charged by the administrators, which have been determined in this case by the creditors' committee.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Anti-Social Behaviour Orders

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refusals to grant Anti-Social Behaviour Orders there have been in each magistrate area, listed in descending order of number of refusals. [144831]

Ms Blears: A total of 35 notifications have been received by the Home Office, up to 30 June 2003 (latest available), of applications for Anti-Social Behaviour Orders (ASBOs) which have been refused. This represents a total of 3 per cent. of the total number of applications made to magistrates acting in their civil capacity.

Correspondence

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will write to the hon. Member for Mole Valley with a substantive answer to his question, reference 138047. [142036]

Paul Goggins: I wrote to the hon. Member for Mole Valley (Sir Paul Beresford) on 11 December.

Drug Action Team (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been in drug rehabilitation schemes in the area covered by the Portsmouth Drug Action Team, in each year since 2001–02. [144499]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not collected centrally. The most recent statistics from the National Drug Treatment Monitoring System estimated that there were 140,900 drug misuses in treatment during 2002–03, an increase of 10 per cent. on the previous year of 2001–02.

Drug Arrests

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug arrests have been made in the Hampshire police force area in each year since 2000–01. [144500]

Ms Blears: Available data on the number of persons arrested for drug offences within the Hampshire police force area are given in the table.

Miss Eulisa De Freitas

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the hon. Member for Totnes to discuss the application for the renewal of the United Kingdom passport of Miss Eulisa De Freitas. [142868]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 11 December 2003]: I wrote to the hon. Member on 26 November 2003 and will place a copy of my letter in the Library. I hope he will agree that a meeting would serve no useful purpose as there is nothing more I can add to that letter which sets out fully the issues in this case and the reasons why I have no power to issue a UK passport for Miss Freitas.

Special Constables

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special constables have been in post, in each half year, since September 2001. [144498]

Ms Blears: Home Office figures on police strength moved to an annual cycle from March 2002 and are available in the House Library, as are previous publications. The number of Special Constables in post in England and Wales for each half year available since September 2001 are set out as follows:

	Number
September 2001	12,068
March 2002	11,598
March 2003	11,037

We are working with stakeholders to increase the size and effectiveness of the Special Constabulary. In particular, we are rolling out Home Office/Association of Chief Police Officers 'Good Practice Guidance'; we are also holding a 2nd National Specials Weekend on 28–29 February 2004 to help raise the profile of Specials and the invaluable work they do; and we have recently announced grants of up to £70,000 to assist forces to boost their capacity to recruit and manage Specials effectively.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Children's Centres

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children's centres there are; what the locations are of (a) existing and (b) planned children's centres; and how many of each are in deprived areas. [144707]

Margaret Hodge: There are now 61 children's centres in England, all of which are based in disadvantaged areas (see following table for details). We are currently considering proposals from local authorities for the wider roll out of this programme, and will announce locations from early 2004 as new centres are designated. All children's centres will be based in the 20 per cent. most disadvantaged wards in England, or in pockets of disadvantage outside of these wards.

Children's Commissioner

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the (a) role and (b) powers of the proposed Children's Commissioner will be. [142151]

Margaret Hodge: The Children's Commissioner as proposed in the Green Paper will be an independent children's champion who will be a voice for children and young people, especially the disadvantaged and vulnerable. The Commissioner will play a crucial role in raising the profile of the issues that affect children, working with a wide range of bodies, such as local and national government, service providers, business, media and the voluntary sector, to ensure that children and young people are involved in the policy making process.

The Green Paper proposes that the Commissioner should work at a strategic level and would not investigate individual cases—except where they have wider implications for all children as directed by the Secretary of State. Nor will the Commissioner have a complaints or specific advocacy function—this will remain the responsibility of others. The Commissioner would work with the relevant Ombudsmen and statutory bodies to promote good practice and ensure that complaints procedures work and are quick and easy for children to access and follow.

The Commissioner would have a duty to report annually to Parliament on progress against the key outcomes set out in 'Every Child Matters', reflecting what children and young people have been saying.

Further details on the role and powers of the Commissioner are being developed in the light of the consultation which ended on 1 December, and legislation will be introduced to Parliament at the earliest opportunity.

Higher and Further Education

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the (a) higher education and (b) further education courses for which fee costs are paid by public sector employers. [144281]

Alan Johnson: For higher education courses, the Department for Education and Skills pays the fee costs of students attending post graduate initial teacher training courses. Information for other Departments and public sector bodies are not held centrally.

For further education courses, we expect all adults, or their employers, in further education to contribute towards the cost of their learning. Those on low incomes or on basic skills courses do not pay tuition fees. There is no general provision of learning or special fee arrangements specifically for public sector employers. Individual colleges or other post-16 providers may have locally organised arrangements with individual employers. No information is held centrally about such arrangements.

Higher Education

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what expenditure his Department proposes to allocate to (a) advertising campaigns and (b) publicity campaigns relating to higher education in each year from 2002–03 to the end of the current expenditure plan. [143277]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 10 December 2003]: The Department has run a number of campaigns in relation to higher education. These include:

> The 'Aimhigher' campaign, which has been running for three years, aims to raise the aspirations of young people and their parents by promoting the benefits of higher education;
> A campaign to raise awareness of foundation degrees among employers and potential students;
> An information campaign, run annually, aimed at potential higher education students and their parents informing them of the financial support available and how to apply for it;

Following the publication of the Higher Education White Paper in January 2003, the Department ran a campaign informing potential and existing higher education students and their parents that changes were being proposed and signposting them to sources of further information.

In 2002–03 the Department spent £8 million on higher education publicity campaigns of which £3.2 million was spent on advertising. In 2003–04 we expect to spend £13.8 million of which £6.08 million would be spent on advertising. Plans and budgets for the Department's communications activity for 2004–05, including campaigns relating to higher education, have not yet been developed so it is not possible to give the information requested.

All costs exclude VAT.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what advertising campaigns his Department is introducing on the proposed changes to higher education funding; and what the level of funding allocated to each campaign is. [142651]

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much has been spent in 2003 on advertising campaigns regarding student tuition fees; and what media have been used. [144146]

Alan Johnson: The Department regularly runs advertising campaigns to explain to potential students and their parents what financial support is available to those undertaking higher education courses. The current 2003 campaign, (for those applying for September 2004 and which runs to the end of February 2004) is closely linked to the Government's wider Aimhigher campaign, designed to encourage young people from non-traditional backgrounds to apply for university. The total cost of advertising is £682,000 which covers radio and poster advertising, and paid editorials.

In addition, following the publication of the Higher Education White Paper in January 2003, the Department ran a further information campaign to explain what was being proposed and to signpost further information. The total cost of advertising was £605,000. All costs are exclusive of VAT.

Mental Health

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many referrals there have been to the Child and Family Mental Health Services of families with children up to the age of five years in England and Wales in each year since 1997; and who initiated the referrals. [144135]

Dr. Ladyman: I have been asked to reply.

Information is not available in the form requested. The following table shows the number of referrals to child and adolescent psychiatry in England from general practitioners and others.

Number of adolescent referrals to child and psychiatry: England

	Referral type
	GP	Other
1997–98	41,834	28,007
1998–99	37,356	27,965
1999–2000	36,263	26,892
2000–01	34,231	24,004
2001–02	31,506	24,875
2002–03	26,346	20,228

Pre-school Sector

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what funds he will make available to the boards of pre-schools to meet possible staff redundancies; [142509]

(2) what additional financial resources he will provide to the pre-school sector to enable staff better to comply with Ofsted inspections; [142506]

(3) what plans his Department has fully to fund (a) pre-schools and (b) the Appletree pre-school in Sidmouth. [142510]

Margaret Hodge: Funding for pre-school settings is rightly a matter for local determination in the light of local needs and circumstances. From April 2003, we have increased local flexibility and autonomy by consolidating the resources to enable local authorities to meet their statutory responsibilities to provide free nursery education for three and four year olds through the under-fives sub-block of their Education Formula Spending Share (EFSS)—the main source of funding for education. In the current financial year, Devon's overall under fives sub-block is worth nearly £30 million. We calculate that more than £6 million of additional ring-fenced funding is available to providers in Devon through a variety of Sure Start funding streams administered by the local authority.

Royal National Institute of the Blind

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the minimum level of funding was for trainees on the residential training for disabled adults course at the Royal National Institute of the Blind's Loughborough College in each year since 1995. [142960]

Maria Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

The Residential Training Unit contracts with 14 national training providers, including Royal National Institute for the Blind's (RNIB) Loughborough College, to deliver specialist residential training for people with disabilities who are unable to train in their home area because local providers cannot offer the specialist help they need.

Each provider is contracted with separately, and fees vary for each provider. Each trainee is funded separately depending on their own unique set of circumstances. Providers are paid a one-off fee for each trainee that starts a course; these start at £1,000 per trainee, rising to £2,000 when the provider passes a pre-set threshold. Weekly fees are also paid for each trainee.

Additionally, providers are paid outcome payments; these are on a sliding scale ranging from £4,000 for a job outcome within 40 weeks of starting training to £1,000 for a job outcome after 12 months of finishing a training programme. Additional fees are also payable for specific support such as child care, tools, equipment, interpreters, readers, travel and special support for those with mental health problems.

The standard weekly fees paid for trainees at RNIB's Loughborough College are in the table.

Weekly fees for trainees at RNIB's Loughborough College

Year	Residential fee	Day fee
1995–96	391	315
1996–97	391/362	315
1997–98	362	315
1998–99	338	299
1999–00	345	299
2000–01	380	299
2001–02	392	300
2002–03	404	300
2003–04	414	308

Note: The fees changed in 1996/97 due to a renegotiation of the contract.

Public Services (Ethnicity)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the effect of a person's ethnicity on their access to public services within the responsibilities of his Department. [143572]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department's Race Equality Scheme, first published in 2002 and revised in August 2003, incorporates our action plan for equality, which assesses the impact of all the Department's policies on ethnic minorities. The Race Equality Scheme can be found on our internet site and is available in hard copy.

Standard Attainment Tests

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he will publish the findings of the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority investigation into the standard attainment tests at age seven, 11 and 14. [141797]

Mr. Miliband: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority published a report yesterday entitled "Comparability of National Tests overtime: Key Stage Test Standards between 1996 and 2001". A copy of the report is available on the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority website at: www.qca.org.uk

Sure Start

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on Sure Start funding mechanisms. [144715]

Margaret Hodge: Grants are allocated to local authorities to support Sure Start initiatives. The Sure Start Unit is continually simplifying funding arrangements. Six separate funding streams for early years and child care have already been brought together in one simplified grant for 2003–04 and the number of ring-fenced funds has been halved. Strategic Guidance issued to local authorities in July 2003 has confirmed that they will have greater flexibility in setting local priorities and use of funding. A new performance management system with a set of streamlined targets will be introduced from April 2004.

Funding for Sure Start local programmes is paid to the organisation nominated by the local partnership as the 'accountable body'. Annual revenue funding is approved by the Sure Start Unit, based on the programme's delivery plan. Capital funding is approved by the Sure Start Unit from submission of capital project plans. Payments for both capital and revenue funding are made on submission of quarterly funding claims.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on how the national curriculum promotes awareness of sustainable development. [144710]

Mr. Miliband: Education for Sustainable Development (ESD) is a statutory part of the programmes of study for Science, Geography, Design and Technology and Citizenship within the National Curriculum. The Department and the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) also encourage schools to consider sustainable development issues within the teaching of all subjects. Since 2001, the Department has funded QCA to provide on-line guidance for teachers.

Top-up Fees

Mr. David Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, how much money has been spent in the last six months on advertisements to promote and explain top-up fees; how many advertisements have been broadcast; and what the total planned spending is on this campaign. (142642)

Alan Johnson [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 2003, c. 359–60W]: Advertising about the student finance package will in fact cost a total of £682,000 (excluding VAT).

The Department has not spent any money on advertisements to promote top-up fees. We are, however, running advertising to inform those considering applying now for a higher education course in September 2004 about the student support package available to them and how to apply.

Tuition Fees

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much has been budgeted for the advertising campaign on university tuition fees; which media are being used; and when the campaign will finish. [144033]

Alan Johnson: The Department has no budget for an advertising campaign on proposed university tuition fees.

The Department regularly runs advertising campaigns to explain to potential students and their parents what financial support is available to those undertaking higher education courses. The current 2003 campaign, (for those applying for September 2004 and which runs to the end of February 2004) is closely linked to the Government's wider Aimhigher campaign, designed to encourage young people from non traditional backgrounds to apply for university. The total cost of advertising is £682,000 which covers radio and poster advertising, and paid editorials.

In addition, following the publication of the Higher Education White Paper in January 2003, the Department ran a further information campaign to explain what was being proposed and to signpost further information. The total cost of advertising was 605,000. All costs are exclusive of VAT.

University Bursaries

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the proportion of the proposed top-up fee income which will be required to be applied for in bursaries. [144852]

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the cost to universities of administering the proposed bursaries; and if he will make a statement. [144711]

Alan Johnson: We are considering and discussing the contents of access agreements and the duties of the Office for Fair Access, and will make a statement in due course.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces (Christmas Post)

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures have been put in place by his Department to cope with the increased demand on postal services for troops serving in the Gulf this Christmas; and if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the current arrangements for the sending of parcels to troops serving in the Gulf over the Christmas period. [143819]

Mr. Ingram: A full airmail service for letters and packets up to 2 kg is in place, and no charge is made for these items addressed to named personnel in the Gulf. In anticipation of increased volumes of mail for personnel in the Gulf over the Christmas period, arrangements have been made for appropriate space to be allocated on RAF flights to the region. The current arrangements are very effective, and a high quality of service is being achieved.

Armed Forces Recruitment

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are being taken to increase the numbers joining the armed forces; and what measures he is taking to increase recruitment into the armed forces from Commonwealth countries. [144797]

Mr. Caplin: All three Services undertake numerous and varied initiatives, both at national and local level, aimed at increasing the level of recruitment to the armed forces. Included amongst the many current initiatives are:

The use of multi-media advertising campaigns.

Services' Recruiting Teams' attendance at schools, careers fairs and Graduate Recruitment Seminars, road shows, exhibitions, youth clubs and organisations.

Work experience placements within Service Establishments.

Personal Development Courses and Look at Life Courses for young people who express an interest in the armed forces.

Taster Day visits to HM Ships and Service Establishments. A dedicated careers website for each of the Services.

An Army 'on-line' recruiting office, with plans for this to be replicated by the other Services.

Specialist Ethnic Minority Recruiting and Diversity Action Teams aimed at promoting Armed Forces careers amongst the United Kingdom's ethnic minority and faith communities.

A Partnership with the 'Jobcentre Plus', making use of its network (totalling in excess of 1,100) of local outlets.

Although Commonwealth citizens are entitled, on nationality eligibility grounds, to serve in the UK Armed Forces, the Services do not actively market armed forces careers in Commonwealth countries. Selection and recruitment team visits to Commonwealth countries are limited to those locations where numbers of expected applicants justify the effort and where an invitation to conduct visits has been received from the respective Government. Nevertheless, the Services do process applications from Commonwealth citizens who have travelled to the UK at their own volition for such a purpose.

Armed Forces Staffing Levels

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his Answer of 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 271W, on Armed Forces Staffing Levels, when he expects to announce the final conclusions of the End to End review. [143953]

Mr. Ingram: Following my announcement on the 10 September 2003, Official Report, columns 26–27WS, I placed a summary of the conclusions from the End to End (E2E) Review in the Library of the House. The review was wide-ranging and work is now being undertaken to determine how best to achieve the E2E objectives. This includes a Demonstration Phase designed to test the conclusions of the Review. It is too early to predict what the final outcome of this work will be. I shall keep the House informed of progress as this work continues.

Arms Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions he has raised (a) the waiver for United Kingdom companies from the United States International Traffic in Arms Regulations and (b) the fast track for United Kingdom defence export permits with the US Administration; and when he expects these issues to be resolved. [144853]

Mr. Hoon: I, and other members of the Government have raised the issue of improved defence trade cooperation with the US Administration on several occasions this year. The Government are seeking a United Kingdom waiver from the United States International Traffic in Arms Regulations, which will better meet the needs of UK industry than an agreement about processing times for the licensing of US items for export to the UK. The joint statement the Prime Minister issued with President Bush on 20 November affirmed that they both consider it a high priority to implement a licensing exemption that will facilitate defence trade between our countries.

We hope that the waiver will come into effect next year, subject to congressional and parliamentary approval, and after the necessary implementing regulations and administrative procedures have been put in place.

Army (Merging Regiments)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on plans to merge regiments in the Army. [144799]

Mr. Caplin: There are currently no plans to merge Army regiments. The Defence White Paper, published last week, sets out the context for shaping the structure of the Armed Forces for many years ahead. Work is still to be done with regard to the details of individual systems and units within that overall structure, but at present no decisions have been taken.

Attitude Surveys

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the 10 most cited reasons for leaving or considering leaving the Royal Navy/Royal

Marines given by respondents to the last assessed Royal Navy/Royal Marine Continuous Attitude Survey; and if he will make a statement. [143627]

Mr. Caplin: The information requested is drawn from the May 2003 edition of the Continuous Attitude Survey.

Main reasons for leaving Naval Service:
Royal Navy

Ability to plan your own life—long term
Your pay in relation to the hours worked
Ability to plan your own life—short term
The level of job satisfaction you expect in the future
Your enjoyment of Service life
The degree of recognition and reward (other than pay) for long working hours
Amount of separation from family and friends
The amount of 'fun' in the Service
The desire to live at home
Your pay in general

Royal Marines

Ability to plan your own life—long term
Your pay in general
Ability to plan your own life—short term
The extent to which you are doing the job for which you are trained
Opportunities for promotion/advancement
Pay in relation to hours worked
Pay in relation to the responsibilities of your job
Opportunities for educational activities of your choice for personal/professional development
Amount of separation from family and friends
The desire to live at home

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason Royal Navy and Royal Marines personnel are not asked about nationality in the current edition of the Continuous Attitude Survey; whether nationality was listed as a question in previous editions; and if he will make a statement. [143631]

Mr. Caplin: There has been no requirement to collect information about nationality through the current or previous editions of the Continuous Attitude Survey.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Royal Navy/Royal Marine Continuous Attitude Survey last included questions on (a) overstretch and (b) privatisation and contractualisation; for what reason those questions are not included in the latest edition of the Royal Navy/Royal Marine Continuous Attitude Survey; and if he will make a statement. [143636]

Mr. Caplin: No requirement has been identified to collect information about (a) overstretch or (b) privatisation and contractualisation through the Continuous Attitude Survey. The impact on personnel of the high level of operational commitment by the Royal Navy and Royal Marines will be addressed in the future.

Battle of Trafalgar

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to commemorate the 200th anniversary of the Battle of Trafalgar. [143366]

Mr. Caplin: While no final decisions have yet been made, it is anticipated that there will be a series of national and international events 'the Trafalgar Festival' co-ordinated by the Official Nelson Commemoration Committee which will include an International Fleet Review in the Solent.

Further announcements will be made to the House in due course.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much funding has been allocated by his Department for celebrations to mark the bicentenary of the Battle of Trafalgar in 2005; what form he expects the celebrations to take; which countries have been invited to take part; and if he will make a statement. [143567]

Mr. Caplin: Funding to mark the Bicentenary of the Battle of Trafalgar in 2005 is still under discussion and no final decisions have been made.

Defence Science and Technology Laboratory

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many formal grievances have been raised by the staff of the Defence Science and Technology Laboratory since its formation; and how many relate to staff who are on secondment to, or have returned from, secondment to his Department. [143701]

Mr. Caplin: Records indicate that a total of 12 formal grievances have been raised by staff since the formation of Dstl. Of these, two were raised by staff that had been on secondment to main Ministry of Defence posts.

Iraq

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Christmas trees his Department has (a) shipped to Iraq and (b) procured in Iraq for the purpose of celebrations among personnel; and if he will make a statement. [144470]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 17 December 2003]: Fifty Christmas trees were being sent to Iraq by the Expeditionary Forces Institute to be purchased locally by units deployed there. In addition, a number of units have made their own arrangements to import trees.

Joint Strike Fighter

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Joint Strike Fighter. [143548]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 16 May 2003, Official Report, column 453W.

Michael Morgan

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will re-open the investigation into the death of Michael Morgan, an employee of the Ministry of Defence in the sovereign base areas of Cyprus on 17 May 2001. [144461]

Mr. Caplin: No new information has come to light to cast doubt on the Coroner's original verdict. We therefore have no plans to re-open the investigation into Mr. Morgan's death.

Procurement (Risk Assessment)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria are used in evaluating the cost of risk assessed as attaching to bids to supply goods and services to the MoD; and whether bidders are informed of (a) such criteria and (b) their effect on their bids. [142613]

Mr. Ingram: In evaluating bids for the supply of goods and services the Ministry of Defence will assess risk in terms of likely Performance against the requirement; Timeliness of delivery and Cost. MOD employs various tools for bid evaluation including risk questionnaires and Three-Point Estimating.

In line with the Codes of Best Practice agreed between MOD and the Defence Industry it is now standard practice for the MOD to make available to bidders the criteria and weightings used in the tender evaluation process.

Secondments

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures are in place to monitor secondments from his Department to other governments; and if he will make a statement. [143443]

Mr. Caplin: It is a management function of the sponsoring unit within MOD to monitor the effectiveness of individual secondments against the objectives for which they were established. There is no central control or monitoring of these management activities, and this information could therefore be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Warships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what changes have been agreed since Main Gate approval to (a) specifications, (b) build quality and (c) delivery dates of the Landing Ship Dock (Auxiliary) vessels being constructed by Swan Hunter; [143311]

(2) what cost overruns have been notified to his Department on the construction of Landing Ship Dock (Auxiliary) vessels by Swan Hunter; [143312]

(3) what the expected commissioning date is of Landing Ship Dock (Auxiliary) vessels being built by (a) Swan Hunter and (b) BAE Systems Marine. [143313]

(4) what claims for compensation from Swan Hunter have been made by BAE Systems Marine in respect of delays in the construction of two Landing Ship Dock (Auxiliary) vessels at Govan. [143314]

Mr. Ingram: Since Main Gate approval, a small number of enhancements have been made to the Landing Ship Dock (Auxiliary (LSD(A)) programme to ensure that each vessel complies with the latest statutory safety requirements. There have been no changes to the build quality of the vessels.

Swan Hunter has recently announced delays to its build programme. We are currently reviewing the impact this will have on the In-Service Dates of all four LSD(A)s. Provisional dates supplied by both companies suggest that the First of Class LSD(A) will now enter service in autumn 2005 with the final vessel entering service in summer 2006.

The Department has a Firm Price contract with Swan Hunter and any contractual discussions that arise are commercially sensitive. I am, therefore, withholding this information under Exemption 7a of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which relates to the effective management and operations of the public service.

BAE SYSTEMS Marine's LSD(A) contract is not with Swan Hunter but with the Ministry of Defence. Claims for compensation have been made by BAE SYSTEMS Marine as a consequence of delays to its build programme at Govan. These too are commercially sensitive, and I am also withholding this information in accordance with Exemption 7a of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Disabled Civil Servants

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many senior civil servants in her Department are disabled, expressed in (a) numbers and (b) as a percentage of whole-time equivalents. [144983]

Mr. Caborn: The Department collects data on disability on a voluntary self-declaration basis. There are currently no members of the Department's senior civil service who have declared a disability.

Funding for Children's Play

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she intends to publish the report commissioned by the right hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on funding from the New Opportunities Fund for children's play. [144668]

Estelle Morris: I expect the report commissioned from the right hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras to be published early in the New Year.

Identity Cards

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the implications of the introduction of compulsory identity cards for her Department. [144342]

Mr. Caborn: The Home Office has lead responsibility for developing the national identity cards scheme, which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 11 November 2003. My Department stands ready to take part in any on-going discussions, as appropriate.

Intellectual Property (Performers)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what further action she plans to implement the provisions of the World Intellectual Property Organisation Performances and Phonograms Treaty in respect of the rights of performers. [144478]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

UK law does not at present grant performers the moral rights required by the WIPO Performances and Phonograms Treaty, and we are planning to introduce these rights during the course of next year.

Lottery Grants

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the total amount of Lottery grants given to (a) the richest 100 wards in the UK and (b) the poorest 100 wards in the UK was (i) from the inception of the Lottery to 1 May 1997 and (ii) from 2 May 1997 to date. [144837]

Estelle Morris: The information requested is being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The information cannot be provided in the exact format requested. Changes to ward boundaries in some of these wards make such comparisons impossible. Where boundaries have remained constant, the information requested is shown in the tables which are produced from data provided by the Lottery distributors. The tables are based on the Index of Multiple Deprivation for England only—no UK wide measure is available.

Tourism (North-East)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions she has had with representatives of One North East regarding (a) the tourism industry and (b) the Northumbria Tourist Board. [144962]

Mr. Caborn: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State have had recent discussions with representatives of One North East regarding (a) the tourism industry and (b) the Northumbria Tourist Board. However, officials from my Department's Tourism Division and from the Government Office for the North East have been in regular contact with One North East as they have taken on their strategic responsibility for tourism in the region and have had discussions with representatives of the Northumbria Tourist Board. I have asked One North East and the other English Regional Development Agencies to work with their tourist boards and the industry to decide upon the best support structure for the tourism industry in their particular region. I understand that One North East is working towards the introduction of a new structure for the delivery of tourism in the North East. My officials continue to work with the RDAs to help ensure a planned and smooth transition to any new arrangements.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether it is the policy of his Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on Departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142813]

Yvette Cooper: The purchasing policy of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister reflects the Government's value for money policy and the EC procurement rules, which require the procurement of goods and services to be based on value for money and acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary, and the objectives of the Office.

Fair trade products are widely available in our offices. The restaurants sell fair trade products including coffee, tea and chocolate bars. The catering menus include options that allow for fair trade tea and coffee to be provided, on request, for official meetings and conferences.

Landfill Directive

Sue Doughty: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 343W, if he will make a statement on the outcome of discussions within Government and with industry on the implications of the implementation of the Landfill Directive for regeneration of brownfield sites, including (a) potential obstacles identified and (b) agreed action. [144959]

Keith Hill: Discussions are continuing but have not yet reached the stage where we are able to report on outcomes. A further meeting of Government and industry representatives is to take place in January 2004.

Local Authority Funding

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what level of grant from all Government sources St. Helens borough council has received in each year since 1996. [144325]

Mr. Raynsford: Tabled are details of revenue grants received by St. Helen's metropolitan borough council as part of gross Aggregate External Finance (AEF) between 1996–97 to 2004–05.

£000

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04	2004–05
Revenue Support Grant	69,460	65,703	72,305	75,574	74,395	78,789	74,672	91,122	102,243
National Non- Domestic Rates	42,108	39,269	40,857	44,154	49,674	48,615	53,162	51,772	49,369
Specific Grants within AEF[1]	5,774	4,548	6,457	6,988	12,834	18,546	21,523	24,891	[2]—

[1] Information on specific grants up until 2002–03 is taken from local authority outturn returns. From 2003–04, where outturn information is not yet available this is based on local authority budget returns.

[2] Data not available until spring 2004 when they will be reported by local authorities on their RA and RA(SG) returns.

Note:

The grants are on an unadjusted basis and may not be comparable between years, because transfers of function may have taken place.

Councillors

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his policy is on golden goodbyes for long-serving councillors; and how the scheme is financed. [144100]

Mr. Raynsford: There is no provision for long-serving councillors in England to be provided with any form of severance payment. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to change this position.

Pupil Mobility

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans his Department has to take into account levels of pupil mobility between schools when measuring education, skills and training deprivation in revised indices of deprivation. [143571]

Yvette Cooper: During the initial phase of work to update the Indices of Deprivation 2000 (ID 2000), the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister considered the issue of pupil mobility and investigated various avenues for constructing such an indicator. This investigation showed that, at present, there is no centrally held database on pupil mobility. As one of the criteria for inclusion of an indicator in the ID 2000 is that it must be nationally available at a small area level, we were unable to pursue this issue in the current update.

Regional Assemblies

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what target has been set for the turnout in the referendums on regional assemblies; [144874]

(2) what budget has been agreed within the three Government Offices for the Regions to increase turnout in referendums on regional assemblies; and what organisational changes are planned in the three Government offices to help increase the turnout in the referenda on regional assemblies; [144875]

(3) what guidance he has given to Government Offices for the Regions on increasing the turnout in the referendums on elected regional assemblies. [144876]

Mr. Raynsford: None—there is no turnout target.

However, the Regional Assemblies (Preparations) Act 2003 (Chapter 10) gives the Electoral Commission the power to > "do anything they think necessary or expedient for the purpose of encouraging voting" at these referendums.

Tenancy Deposit Scheme

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of whether the number of disputes requiring adjudication under a tenancy deposit scheme would differ from the current rate of alleged unreasonable withholding of deposits; and if he will make a statement. [144858]

Keith Hill: No reliable assessment has been made of the number of disputes requiring adjudication under a tenancy deposit scheme. But it is expected that the number of disputes will fall as and when well thought out arrangements for tenancy deposit protection are introduced. The Government are currently exploring with the key stakeholders how best that might be achieved.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when the outcome of the Government's consultation on a possible tenancy deposit scheme will be announced; and if he will make a statement. [145272]

Keith Hill: Following a consultation the Government will in the new year be considering options for legislative proposals for the safeguarding of tenancy deposits. We will then announce the outcome of our consultations and our legislative proposals.

PRIME MINISTER

22 July Briefing

Richard Ottaway: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether copies of the transcript prepared by Radio Technical Services of the briefing given by him en route to Hong Kong on 22 July 2003 have been made available to the Press; [145062]

(2) if he will publish the transcript prepared by Radio Technical Services of the briefing given by him en route to Hong Kong on 22 July 2003. [145063]

The Prime Minister: Any comments I made en route to Hong Kong on 22 July 2003 were made on the record and were fully reported by the media at the time in the same way as any briefings I make on visits like this.

Canada

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to meet the new Prime Minister of Canada; and if he will discuss with him parliamentary reform in Canada, with particular reference to the greater use of free votes. [145200]

The Prime Minister: I have spoken and written to the new Prime Minister of Canada, Paul Martin, to congratulate him on his appointment. I have no current plans to meet him, but look forward to doing so in the future.

Honours

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 15 December 2003, Official Report, column 657W, on honours, how many honours have been returned since 1 January 1997, broken down by type. [145058]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to my previous answer.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 15 December 2003, Official Report, column 657W, on honours, how many people returning honours gave a reason for returning the honour. [145059]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to my previous answer.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will bring forward proposals for changing the system for awarding honours. [145066]

The Prime Minister: The honours system is kept under continuous review.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what the procedure is for returning an honour; and if he will make a statement. [145072]

The Prime Minister: There is no formal procedure for the returning of honours. Those wishing to do so would normally write to my office or the Central Chancery of the Orders of Knighthood.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many people in each year since 1997 refused an honour, broken down by type of honour. [145073]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 15 December 2003, Official Report, column 657W.

Imad Hage

Adam Price: To ask the Prime Minister what meetings his officials have held during 2003 with Mr. Imad Hage. [145214]

The Prime Minister: Officials have meetings with a wide range of organisations and individuals. As with previous Administrations, it is not the Government's practice to provide details of all such meetings under Exemptions 2, 7 and 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Adam Price: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received during the last 12 months from Mr. Imad Hage. [145216]

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, I have not received any representations from Mr. Imad Hage.

Iraq

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister whether the work of the Iraq Survey group will be suspended pending the receipt of information from Saddam Hussein on the location of weapons of mass destruction; and if he will make a statement. [145199]

The Prime Minister: No. The work of the Iraq Survey Group will continue.

Kyoto Protocol

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library copies of his letters to President Putin, referred to in his answer of 10 November 2003, Official Report, column 3W; and if he will make a statement on when he expects the Kyoto Protocol to come into force. [145195]

The Prime Minister: The Kyoto Protocol must be ratified by a minimum of 55 countries, including developed countries representing 55 per cent. of developed countries' carbon dioxide emissions in 1990 before it enters into force. We understand that the Russian Federation is currently completing its assessment of the Protocol. We look forward to an early decision so that the Protocol can enter into force as soon as possible.

The Government believe that the Kyoto Protocol is the only existing international framework for tackling climate change and takes every opportunity to urge all countries that have not yet ratified it to do so as soon as possible.

It is not the normal practice to release letters from the Prime Minister to another Head of Government under Exemption 1*(b)* of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

People's Peers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister when he will invite the House of Lords Appointments Commission to submit its recommendations for the second round of people's peers. [145196]

The Prime Minister: I hope to do so shortly.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Airports

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement on the proposed runway extension at City of Derry Airport; [144215]

(2) if he will conduct a full public consultation before a decision is made on the proposed runway extension at City of Derry Airport. [144401]

Mr. Spellar: Derry City Council have made a funding application to both the Northern Ireland and Republic of Ireland authorities in relation to its proposal to further develop the City of Derry Airport. Details of the proposed phasing and cost estimates for the project are expected shortly. A decision on the council's application will depend on the outcome of technical and economic appraisals and on policy and budgetary considerations. I will be happy to receive and consider any representations from persons interested in these matters.

It will be necessary for the council to apply separately to the Planning Service of the Department of the Environment for planning permission for the proposed runway extension. As part of that process, the application will be advertised and a period of four weeks will be allowed for receipt of comments on the planning issues.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will assess the feasibility of constructing (a) a rail link to Belfast International Airport and (b) a new railway station at Belfast City Airport. [144278]

Mr. Spellar: Previous studies have shown that to construct a rail link to Belfast International Airport and a new railway station at Belfast City Airport would both involve considerable costs which could not be justified by the anticipated level of passenger demand.

Antisocial Behaviour

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he is taking to address anti-social behaviour on public transport in Northern Ireland. [144229]

Mr. Spellar: Translink has advised that it has a dedicated internal working group to improve security on buses and trains. Translink operates a widely promoted scheme under which it offers rewards of up to £1,000 for information on attacks which lead to prosecutions. Translink staff liase closely with community representatives and the PSNI in an attempt to reduce attacks and general anti-social behaviour on public transport.

Translink has also advised that security features within the Translink bus fleet include CCTV, driver protection screens, specially strengthened windows in the driver's cab area and double glazing over the rest of the vehicle. Communication systems also enable bus and train drivers to liase with Central Control staff regarding potential and actual incidents. Driver and passenger security have also been taken into account in the design of the new trains currently being built for NIR.

Arrhythmia

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland are diagnosed with arrhythmia; what steps he is taking to raise awareness of this condition in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [145070]

Angela Smith: Figures are collected only on the number of patients admitted to hospital for the treatment of arrhythmia, not the total number diagnosed with the condition. There were 190 people admitted with cardiac arrhythmia conditions from April 2002 to March 2003.

Following a Review of Cardiology Services undertaken by the Department, an action plan containing a number of recommendations to improve these services was issued in April 2003. I have asked my Department to monitor progress closely.

Cannabis Reclassification

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the cannabis reclassification awareness raising campaign will begin; how long it will last; what format it will take; and if he will make a statement. [143568]

Mr. Spellar: The reclassification of cannabis will take effect in Northern Ireland from 29 January 2004 in line with other parts of the UK. The Government are conscious of the need to ensure the public have appropriate and accurate information so that everyone is aware about what this change means and not least to remind the public that the possession and consumption of cannabis will remain illegal and that the drug itself is harmful. To that end, my officials have been in contact with the Home Office to ensure that the campaign in Northern Ireland is in line with and will be as effective as, that planned elsewhere, while having a distinct local emphasis.

I will make a public statement giving details of the campaign in Northern Ireland closer to the 29 January.

Childhood Obesity

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are in place to tackle the rise in childhood obesity. [145307]

Angela Smith: We have strategies for food and nutrition and physical activity in place together with initiatives such as "Fresh Fruit in Schools" and the "Health Promoting Schools" project which promote healthy eating and physical activity. In addition the Health Promotion Agency has developed a community based nutrition programme entitled "Cook it", a new nutrition information booklet for parents called "Getting a good start—healthy eating from one to five", and launched a pilot scheme to encourage short physical activity sessions in primary schools.

Cycling

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to improve facilities for cyclists; and what measures he is taking to encourage greater usage of Northern Ireland's cycling network. [144230]

Mr. Spellar: I have asked the Chief Executive of Roads Service to write to the hon. Gentleman in response to this question. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Fishing Industry

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to complete the Strategic Review of the Fishing Industry. [144616]

Mr. Pearson: Following publication of the report of the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit on the medium to long-term prospects for the UK fishing industry, I intend to recommence the Strategic Review of the Northern Ireland fishing industry.

Further Education

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the (a) financial and (b) operating (i) deficits and (ii) surpluses for each Northern Ireland further education college in each of the last five years. [144217]

Jane Kennedy: Northern Ireland Further Education Colleges became incorporated bodies on the 1 April 1998. The 2002–03 figures are the fifth set of accounts for colleges as incorporated bodies and cover a 12 month period from 1 August 2002–31 July 2003

The annual accounts are prepared in accordance with the statement of recommended practice (SORP): Accounting for Further and Higher Education. The form and content of the annual college accounts are set out in the Accounts Direction for the Governing Bodies of Further Education Colleges in August 1998 and updated subsequently in August 2002.

The operating surplus/(deficit) and historic surplus/(deficit) results for each individual further education college over the last five years has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the financial recovery plans of Northern Ireland's further education colleges. [144218]

Jane Kennedy: Since Incorporation on 1 April 1998, six further education colleges have developed financial recovery plans:

Castlereagh College of Further and Higher Education
East Antrim Institute of Further and Higher Education
Limavady College of Further and Higher Education
Lisburn Institute of Further and Higher Education
North West Institute of Further and Higher Education
Omagh College of Further and Higher Education.

North East Institute of Further and Higher Education is currently developing a financial recovery plan.

The position of these colleges for the 2002–03 financial year is as follows:

£000

Colleges	Total income	Total expenditure	Operating Surplus (deficit)	Historic cost surplus (deficit)	General reserve
Castlereagh	8,064	7,277	787	[illegible]	324
East Antrim	10,267	10,302	(35)	192	[illegible]
Limavady	5,800	5,266	534	580	1,732
Lisburn	8,532	8,391	141	395	188
North East	14,432	15,004	(572)	(151)	(980)
North West	25,438	24,730	708	971	(745)
Omagh	6,582	6,220	362	523	1,302

In April 2003 the Department for Employment and Learning issued a document entitled "Guidance on Colleges in Recovery" to the FE sector. This document, which is based on best practice, sets out comprehensive guidance about the operation of the financial recovery process.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the review of Northern Ireland's further education colleges will be published; and if he will make a statement. [144219]

Jane Kennedy: The review by the Department for Employment and Learning of its strategy for statutory further education in Northern Ireland is nearing completion. It is intended that the review will be published for consultation early in 2004.

Give as You Earn Scheme

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of staff in his Department contribute to a charity through the Give as You Earn scheme; how much money is donated to charity per month by staff in his Department through the scheme; and what steps he is taking to encourage greater participation in the scheme by staff in his Department. [143899]

Mr. Pearson: Current figures show that 4,407 (14.8 per cent.) members of staff in the Northern Ireland Civil Service, and the Northern Ireland Office, contribute to charity through the Give As You Earn scheme, although this is unlikely to fully reflect the charitable activity of employees.

The current monthly amount, in total, paid over through the scheme, via payroll, is £34,814.

Since 2000, a promotion company, "Sharing The Caring", has had the operational responsibility for promoting the Give As You Earn scheme within the Northern Ireland Civil Service and Northern Ireland Office. Through Sharing The Caring, staff can contribute to any charity they choose, provided it is a registered charity. Sharing The Caring representatives follow an on-going programme of visits to civil service buildings/locations during which they engage with staff to encourage them to sign up to the scheme. Since 2000, 308 such visits have been carried out.

Northern Ireland Civil Service

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the strike action undertaken by the Northern Ireland Civil Service. [144672]

Mr. Pearson: Best available estimates indicate that just over 11,000 staff were absent without authority on 11 December 2003, equivalent to around 40 per cent. of the total non-industrial workforce. There was some disruption to a number of services including, for example, social security, child support, and driver and vehicle licensing and testing. On the whole, however, departments' contingency plans served to minimise inconvenience to the public.

Palliative Care

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to increase the number of palliative care beds in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [144451]

Angela Smith: In March 2003 the Department asked Health and Social Services Boards to undertake an assessment of need for additional capacity in inpatient palliative care. This work is expected to be completed by autumn 2004. In addition, the Regional Cancer Services Framework Steering Group, chaired by the Chief Medical Officer, will be considering, among other things, the future development of palliative care, including the level of inpatient palliative care.

Ports

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total tonnage of cargo brought into (a) Larne and (b) Belfast ports was, including both bulk and unit loads, in each of the last five years. [144237]

Mr. Pearson: The information sought is set out in the following table.

Tonnage of goods through Larne and Belfast Ports 1998–2002
Inward traffic

Thousand tonnes

	Larne	Belfast
1998	2,902	9,168
1999	3,074	9,740

A new EC Maritime Statistics Directive (Council Directive 95/64/EC on statistical returns in respect of the carriage of goods and passengers by sea) has recently been implemented in the UK (1 January 2000). This required a complete overhaul of data collection methods. It should be noted that the different collection system for freight traffic has resulted in some discontinuities in data series between 2000, 2001, 2002 and previous years.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the weight of cargo leaving (a) Larne and (b) Belfast ports was in each of the last five years; and what the percentage change was in each year. [144238]

Mr. Pearson: The information sought is set out in the following table.

Tonnage of goods through Larne and Belfast ports 1998—2002: Outward traffic

Thousand tonnes

	Larne	Belfast	Larne % change	Belfast % change
1998	2,296	3,066

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of (a) inward and (b) outward traffic at Northern Ireland's ports comprised foreign unit load cargo in each of the last five years. [144239]

Mr. Pearson: The information sought is set out in the following table.

Percentage of inward and outward traffic at Northern Ireland's ports comprised of Foreign unit load cargo 1998–02

Inward traffic
1998	2.9
1999	2.9

Public Transport

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the average age is of (a) Ulsterbus and (b) Citybus vehicle stock. [144225]

Mr. Spellar: Translink has advised that at 15 December 2003 the average age of the Ulsterbus fleet was 11.95 years and the average age of the Citybus fleet was 8.46 years.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to (a) improve access to public transport and (b) encourage the use of public transport by older people. [144231]

Mr. Spellar: The Department for Regional Development is funding the purchase by Northern Ireland Railways of 23 new trains which will comply with the requirements of the Rail Vehicles Accessibility Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2001. The Department is also providing grant aid to assist Translink to purchase 190 new buses which meet the requirements of the Public Service Vehicles Accessibility Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003. All new developments at bus and railway stations include any necessary work to improve access for people with disabilities. Older people are encouraged to use public transport by the provision of Senior Smartpasses, which enable those over 65 to travel free.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are in place to support the provision of park and ride facilities outside Greater Belfast; what plans he has to develop secure interchange sites at Trooperslane and Corrs Corner; and if he will make a statement. [144276]

Mr. Spellar: I have asked the Chief Executive of Roads Service to write to the hon. Gentleman in response to this question. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to develop bus lanes and quality bus corridors outside Greater Belfast. [144277]

Mr. Spellar: I have asked the Chief Executive of Roads Service to write to the hon. Gentleman in response to this question. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to promote the development of park and ride facilities; and if he will make a statement. [144402]

Mr. Spellar: I have asked the Chief Executive of Roads Service to write to the hon. Gentleman in response to this question. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Rail Freight

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many tonnes of rail freight were carried from Northern Ireland to (a) Great Britain, (b) the Republic of Ireland and (c) other European destinations in each of the last five years. [144216]

Mr. Spellar: Translink has advised that all rail freight carried from Northern Ireland in the last five years went to the Republic of Ireland. The quantities carried in each of the last five years were as follows:

	Tonnes
1998	52,300
1999	72,200
2000	48,700
2001	43,900
2002	26,500

Remicade

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland are waiting for treatment with Remicade; and how many of these people have been waiting (a) less than six months, (b) between six and 12 months, (c) between 12 and 18 months, (d) between 18 and 24 months and (e) longer than 24 months. [144387]

Angela Smith: Remicade is one of the specialist medicines, known as biologic therapies, used for the treatment of severe rheumatoid arthritis. Information in relation to the number of people waiting for all biologic therapy treatment and the length of time they have been waiting is as follows:

Rheumatoid Arthritis	Number
Less than six months	89
Between six and 12 months	91
Between 12 and 18 months	77
Between 18 and 24 months	79
Longer than 24 months	53

The decision as to whether to prescribe Remicade or another medicine for the treatment of an individual patient is a matter for clinical judgment and is the individual responsibility of the prescriber at the time when treatment is to commence.

Road Accidents

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) fatal and (b) non-fatal road accidents there were on the A2 Bangor to Belfast road in each of the past five years; and what steps he is taking to reduce such accidents. [143586]

Mr. Spellar: I have asked the Chief Executive of Roads Service to write to the hon. Lady in response to this question. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Road Congestion

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce tolls on roads in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the steps he is taking to tackle road congestion in Northern Ireland. [143818]

Mr. Spellar: The Regional Transportation Strategy (RTS) for NI 2002–2012, whose strategic direction and underlying principles were endorsed by the Assembly in July 2002, contains no proposals to introduce tolling in NI. It does, however, contain a commitment to monitor the impacts of fiscal demand management measures, such as road user charging.

In the meantime, the issue of road congestion is being addressed as part of the wider transportation picture set out in the RTS. The RTS proposes that congestion be tackled through selected highway improvements and measures designed to encourage greater use of public transport, walking and cycling facilities. Overall it envisages £427 million in strategic highway improvements, £250 million on rail services, £98 million on bus services and "park and ride" in Belfast and almost £40 million on making it easier to walk or cycle. The actual level of resources invested in transportation will, however, depend on the normal budgetary processes, satisfactory economic appraisals and satisfactory progress through statutory processes (where relevant).

The RTS will be progressed through three Transport Plans—the Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan, the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan and the Sub-Regional Transport Plan. The first two plans have reached an advanced stage with 'Emerging Plans' being subject to separate working conferences earlier this year. Both plans are expected to be published in the first half of 2004.

Road Haulage Industry

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many tonnes of freight were transported by road within Northern Ireland by goods vehicles over 3.5 tonnes in each of the last five years. [144221]

Mr. Spellar: Figures for the Continuing Survey of Road Goods Transport are as follows:

Year	Tonnes
1998	4,1232
1999	4,5519
2000	4,5692
2001	3,5089
2002	4,8116

WORK AND PENSIONS

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what discussions he has had with private landlords regarding proposals to pay housing benefit directly to tenants; and what the outcome of those discussions was. [145297]

Mr. Pond: The Department consulted both formally and informally on the Government's proposals for a Local Housing Allowance (LHA), which is now in operation or about to go-live in 9 "Pathfinder" local authorities.

The formal consultation exercise was, as is customary, conducted through the Social Security Advisory Committee (SSAC). The Committee received 73 responses from both individuals and organisations with an interest in the LHA reforms, including representative bodies of landlords. SSAC made a number of recommendations, to which the Government responded. The relevant Command Paper, 5955 was presented to Parliament on 24 September 2003 and is available in the Library.

Additionally, Ministers and officials have received numerous informal representations about the Allowance. Many have been from landlords who have concerns about our decision to remove routine direct payments to them. We welcome this feedback and we are now encouraging it routinely in newsletters that the Department issues to landlords and welfare groups in the Pathfinder areas. We remain committed to the idea of making payment of Benefit to the tenant where possible in order to encourage them to take more personal responsibility for managing their affairs.

Discussions are ongoing and the views and experiences of landlords will form an important part of the Department's evaluation of the Local Housing Allowance.

Interest Rates

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to bring calculations of claimants' notional rates of interest on savings into line with current average building society and bank deposit account interest rates. [142297]

Mr. Pond: The tariff income rules, whereby money is deducted from benefit in respect of capital, are not intended to represent any rate of return that could be obtained from investing that capital.

The capital rules within the income related benefits exist to ensure that help is targeted on those with least resources while not completely denying help for those who have moderate amounts of capital. Where customers have substantial capital, current rules ensure that some of those funds are used for their maintenance before their needs can be met from public funds. The tariff income rules are designed to avoid a "cliff edge" effect which would occur if there was a simple capital limit beyond which benefit is completely withdrawn.

We have made it clear that we will keep the treatment of capital in the income related benefits under review so that they strike a reasonable balance between providing targeted support for those who need it and not penalising those who have acted responsibly by saving.

Pensioner Poverty

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what time-frame he has set for ending pensioner poverty. [145110]

Malcolm Wicks: One of the Government's key priorities is to tackle pensioner poverty. We want all pensioners to have a secure income in retirement and to share in the rising prosperity of the country.

Our strategy is already working. Compared with the 1997 system, as a result of Government measures, from April 2004, on average pensioner households will be £1,250 a year better off in real terms. Our target is, that by 2006, Pension Credit should be in payment to at least 3 million pensioner households.

In addition, we also recognise the need for long-term solutions. Our proposals in Action on Occupational Pensions—Working and Saving for Retirement contain measures for reform to address the issues faced by an ageing population.

Age Discrimination

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many employers have adopted the voluntary Code of Practice on Age Diversity in Employment; [143855]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of companies which have had a recruitment policy which is disposed against the employment of older workers, in each year since 1997. [143882]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is not available. However, research shows that in the 18 months after the introduction of the code in June 1999 that awareness of the code rose from 14 per cent. to 37 per cent. of employers, and the proportion of employers who reported that age was considered as a selection criterion when recruiting fell from 27 per cent. to 13 per cent. We will be commissioning further research with employers in the coming year.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps his Department is taking to persuade employers of the economic benefits of having an age-diverse workforce. [145108]

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps the Government are taking to promote the Age Positive campaign among (a) employers and (b) older people. [143937]

Malcolm Wicks: The Government are committed to extending opportunities for older workers and to introducing age discrimination legislation in 2006. Under the legislation, compulsory retirement ages are likely to be unlawful unless employers can show that they are objectively justified.

In the meantime, our Age Positive campaign is encouraging employers to adopt non-ageist employment practises. Through Age Positive, we are promoting the business benefits of an age diverse workforce by encouraging employers to adopt the voluntary Code of Practice, "Age Diversity at Work, A Practical Guide For Business". Over 750,000 copies of the Age Positive Code have been issued to employers and individuals and it is available on the Age Positive website, which has 75,000 visits per month.

The Age Positive campaign is widely promoted to employers and individuals through advertising, the website and press features in national, local and specialist publications and at exhibitions and workshops for employers. Age Positive awards help to further publicise the achievements of businesses and individuals who conquer age prejudice.

Age Positive also works closely with organisations such the Federation of Small Businesses, Employers Forum on Age, Institute of Directors, TUC, CBI and Age Concern.

Bank and Post Office Card Accounts

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what advice he has offered to those using Jobcentres in the use of bank accounts and Post Office Card Accounts for their payments. [144289]

Mr. Pond: The purpose of the information campaign supporting the move to Direct Payment is to ensure that customers choose the account option that best meets their needs and circumstances.

In the case of Jobseekers, we believe they will be better prepared for employment if they already have a current or basic bank account into which their employer can pay their wages, which the Post Office card account does not allow.

Benefit and Pensions Payment

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether those customers invited to transfer to direct payment who (a) do not reply and (b) reply and decline a direct payment option will be automatically transferred to the exceptions service; and if he will make a statement. [143087]

Mr. Pond: We will be further contacting customers who continue to be paid by order book. Any customers who cannot open or operate a bank account, or fail to respond to our mailing will continue to be paid by their current method of payment.

Our plan is to design an exceptions method of payment to properly meet the needs of those customers who are unable to operate an account. Detailed arrangements for this method of payment are not finalised yet, but it is anticipated that it will be a cheque-based solution. Payment outlets will include Post Office branches. We are in the process of discussing the design of the exceptions method of payment with the representative bodies most directly affected.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what priorities he has set in relation to increasing direct payment of benefits and pensions. [143208]

Mr. Pond: The Department has a published Public Service Agreement target that by 2005, 85 per cent. of customers will have their benefits paid by Direct Payment.

The move to Direct Payment is progressing well. Key figures on the progress of conversion to Direct Payment are available in the Library updated every four weeks.

Benefit Claims

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to improve the operation of procedures for claiming (a) incapacity benefit and (b) disability living allowance. [142276]

Maria Eagle: We keep all of our procedures for claiming benefits under review and make changes where appropriate to existing processes and claim forms to ensure that all our customers receive the best possible service.

The Disability and Carers Service has embarked upon a major programme of process simplification and re-engineering, including substantially modernised information technology, which aims to produce a much improved service to its customers over the next three years. It is presently trialling an improved claim form for disability living allowance customers and expects to introduce an internet based claim form in 2004.

Benefit Payments

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether individuals are permitted to cash giros at post offices after 2 pm. [144971]

Mr. Pond: Individuals are permitted to cash a valid, uncrossed Girocheque at any time when a post office is open for business.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what evaluation he has made of the social benefits to (a) individuals and (b) local communities of direct payment of benefits and pensions through (i) Post Office accounts and (ii) bank accounts; [143203]

(2) what assessment he has made of the relative (a) availability and (b) accessibility of (i) banks and (ii) post offices in relation to the payment of benefits and pensions; [143204]

(3) what assessment he has made of the effect on (a) urban and (b) rural regeneration of the policy on direct payment of benefits and pensions. [143205]

Mr. Pond: The move to Direct Payment and the introduction of universal banking services has resulted in a number of benefits for individuals and the communities in which they live, particularly in terms of increasing customer choice, helping to address financial exclusion and improving access to banking for all.

The new arrangements ensure a more modern, efficient and reliable service that increases customer choice, provides better value for the taxpayer, cuts fraud, and boosts financial inclusion. More customers are now paid into an account than by order book or girocheque.

Customers have more choice about where and when they collect their money and there are a range of accounts that people can access at Post Office branches. There are a number of advantages to having a bank or building society account and over 85 per cent. of DWP customers already have access to a suitable account with the figure rising to 90 per cent. for pensioners. But this currently leaves around 3.5 million adults in the UK without access to a bank account and not able to take advantage of, for example, the savings to utility bills that come through making payments by Direct Debit from an account. Direct Payment will help spread financial inclusion by increasing the number of people who have bank accounts and giving them opportunities to benefit—this includes the new easy to operate basic bank accounts.

New banking services, including the introduction of the Post Office card account, are central to the Post Office management's strategy for the network. For example, 20 million bank customers can now access their current accounts electronically in Post Office branches. Banking at Post Offices has enabled banking to return to many rural areas where the last bank branch was closed many years ago. It has also introduced banking services into many deprived urban areas for the first time.

The Government are providing significant investment for the Post Office network—some £2 billion in total during the five year period from April 2003, including £450 million to support the rural network until 2006. In addition the Government have instructed the Post Office to prevent avoidable closures in the rural Post Office network.

Bereavement Benefit

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people were refused bereavement benefit in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03; and what the reasons given were for refusal, broken down by (i) numbers and (ii) percentages. [145225]

Mr. Pond: The information is not available.

Child Support

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) when the new system for calculating child maintenance will be implemented with regard to existing cases; [144849]

(2) what steps he is taking to remove differences in treatment of child support assessments between existing and new cases. [144857]

Mr. Pond: We will make a decision on the transfer of old scheme cases once we are sure that the new scheme is working well.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in what order the process of moving Child Support Agency maintenance cases onto the new system of assessment will be introduced in the regions. [144850]

Mr. Pond: I refer the hon. Member to the Written Answer I gave the hon. Member for Wycombe (Paul Goodman) on 3 December 2003, Official Report, column 83W.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what estimate he has made of the number of people paying child support under the new scheme who will be overpaying for (a) a year, (b) two years, (c) three years, (d) four years and (e) five years as a result of phasing in; [143519]

(2) what estimate he has made of the average amount per year which people paying child support under the new scheme will be overpaying as a result of phasing in. [143522]

Mr. Pond: No one will overpay as a result of phasing. The phasing provisions are set in legislation. They give parents who have existing child support assessments time to adjust to the new amounts.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what estimate he has made of the loss incurred by each parent each month whose Child Support Agency case is not transferred from the old to the new scheme; [143520]

(2) whether parents who are incurring losses as a result of Child Support Agency cases not being transferred to the new scheme are entitled to compensation; and if he will make a statement. [143521]

Mr. Pond: Until the new scheme legislation is commenced for the bulk of the old scheme caseload, old scheme cases remain subject to the old rules, and so the question of loss does not arise.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, (1) if he will make a statement on the work involved in transferring old Child Support Agency cases to the new scheme; [140878]

(2) what plans he has to change the rules which detect anomalies, inaccuracies and incomplete data in the Child Support Agency's new scheme; and if he will make a statement; [140900]

(3) what percentage of the Child Support Agency cases waiting to be transferred from the old to the new scheme contain anomalies, inaccuracies and incomplete data; [140880]

(4) how many anomalies, inaccuracies and pieces of incomplete data are contained in the Child Support Agency records of the cases waiting to be transferred from the old to the new scheme; [140882]

(5) how long he expects the work needed to bring records of Child Support Agency cases up to a standard acceptable for transfer to the new scheme to take; and if he will make a statement; [140899]

(6) what proportion of the anomalies, inaccuracies and incomplete data contained in the Child Support Agency records of the cases waiting to be transferred from the old to the new scheme require human intervention; and if he will make a statement. [140879]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr Paul Goodman, dated 18 December 2003:

In replying to your recent Parliamentary questions about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked about the work involved in transferring old Child Support Agency cases to the new scheme. You also asked a number of related questions as follows:

> What proportion of the anomalies, inaccuracies or incomplete data contained in the Child Support Agency records of cases waiting to be transferred from the old to the new scheme require human intervention.
> What percentage of the Child Support Agency cases waiting to be transferred from the old to the new scheme contain anomalies, inaccuracies or incomplete data.
> How many anomalies, inaccuracies or incomplete data are contained in the Child Support Agency records of the cases waiting to be transferred from the old to the new scheme.
> How long will it take to do the work needed to bring records of Child Support Agency cases up to a standard acceptable for transfer to the new scheme.

and

What plans the Secretary of State has to change the rules which detect anomalies, inaccuracies or incomplete data in the Child Support Agency's new scheme; and if he will make a statement.

The existing computer system contains little validation around data entry and we have been progressively working through certain fields to ensure that apparent anomalies, inaccuracies or incomplete data are corrected. In designing and developing computer support for the new Child Support arrangements we created a series of 'business rules' designed to ensure the accuracy of data flowing from one system to the other. We have not yet finalised our data migration strategy or the timetable for that work. In doing so we will need to establish what business rules are applied at the point of migration and what data cleanse activity might sensibly be deferred until later in the process. In making this judgement our prime aim will be to ensure that clients gain the most accurate possible calculation and have a clear and responsive channel open to them to challenge and/or correct any errors. It is not possible to provide the further detail you require in advance of finalising our migration plans.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether it is the policy of his Department that officials of the Child Support Agency should seek to discourage their dissatisfied customers from seeking redress through their hon. Member; and if he will make a statement. [141516]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Christopher Chope:

In replying to your recent Parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked whether it is the policy of the Department for Work and Pensions that officials of the Child Support Agency seek to discourage their dissatisfied customers from seeking redress through their honourable Member.

The Child Support Agency certainly does not have a policy of seeking to discourage their dissatisfied customers from seeking redress through their Member of Parliament. Instead it has a policy of providing customers with the necessary information to enable them to make a complaint effectively. To this end the Agency has published a leaflet "How to complain about the Child Support Agency" advising customers of their rights and procedure to follow if they have a complaint about the service it provides. This leaflet is freely available from any local office of the Department or by contacting the National Enquiry Line; it is also available via the Agency's web site on the Internet.

The leaflet includes guidance about contacting Members of Parliament for advice. It also describes the circumstances under which the Agency would consider making a special payment and signposts the customer to the "Financial Redress for Maladministration" booklet published by the Department.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to transfer the old CSA caseload to the new system; and if a new application will be required. [143089]

Mr. Pond: We will make a decision on the transfer of old scheme cases once we are sure that the new scheme is working well. A new application will not be required.

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement about the performance of the Child Support Agency; and if he will cause replies to be made to Mrs. Samantha Mucklow of Solihull. [143491]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. John Taylor:

In replying to your recent Parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, if he will make a statement about the performance of the Child Support Agency; and if he will cause replies to be made to Mrs Samantha Mucklow of Solihull.

A report on the performance of the Child Support Agency was placed in the Library on the 18th November 2003.

As individual cases are confidential I will write to you privately concerning Mrs Mucklow, when I reply to your letter of 28th November 2003.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he estimates that Child Support Agency cases existing prior to 3 March will be transferred to the new scheme. [145159]

Mr. Pond: We will make a decision on the transfer of old scheme cases once we are sure that the new scheme is working well.

Child Trust Fund

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether the beneficiary of a Child Trust Fund will have the savings in the fund taken into consideration when an assessment is made for Jobseeker's Allowance. [141705]

Mr. Pond: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 15 December 2003, Official Report, columns 686–87W.

Correspondence

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he expects to reply to the letters from the honourable Member for Tatton to the Minister for Pensions of 12 March and 25 April. [145132]

Malcolm Wicks: I regret we have no record of having received the hon. Member's letters. If he would forward copies I will arrange for them to be considered urgently.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in Blackpool received council tax benefit in the last year for which figures are available. [141340]

Mr. Pond: The number of households where the recipient and/or their partner was aged 60 or over, and was in receipt of council tax benefit from Blackpool Borough Council at August 2003, is 7,700.

Notes:

1. The data refer to households claiming housing benefit, which may be a single person, a couple or a family.
2. The figure is rounded to the nearest hundred.
3. Figures exclude any Second Adult Rebate cases.

Source:

Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit Management Information System Quarterly 100 per cent. caseload stock-counts.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent discussions his Department has had with (a) other Government Departments, (b) voluntary sector organisations and (c) local authorities on measures to improve take-up of council tax benefit among pensioners. [141363]

Mr. Pond: There have been a number of discussions between officials of this Department, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and representatives of the Local Authority Associations. In addition, Ministers have met with the Local Government Association and with Help the Aged, following their report on "The impact of council tax on older people's income".

On Monday 15 December 2003, we announced a campaign to further support local authorities in their statutory duty to promote take-up of council tax benefit. On the same day, departmental officials wrote about the campaign to the National Assembly for Wales and the Wales Office; the Scottish Executive and the Scotland Office; voluntary sector organisations and other advisory groups with an interest in take-up such as Help the Aged, Age Concern and Shelter; and Local Authority Associations.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what representations he has received regarding council tax benefit restrictions; and if he will make a statement. [143859]

Mr. Pond: We have received several representations from local government and voluntary agencies, such as Help the Aged, regarding the council tax benefit restriction.

As we announced on 15 December 2003, Official Report, columns 125–26WS, we have decided to abolish the council tax benefit restriction from April 2004.

Departmental Hospitality

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his Department's hospitality budget was for (a) 2003–04 and (b) each of the last six years; and if he will provide a breakdown of the expenditure by main budget heading. [141524]

Mr. Browne: Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the following table.

All expenditure on official hospitality is made in accordance with published departmental guidance on financial procedures and propriety, based on the principles set out in Government Accounting. It is typically incurred by the various DWP Businesses to mark the launch of significant initiatives—for example: the introduction of New Deal 50+; the national introduction of New Deal for Partners; launching call centres for jobseekers; implementation of Employment Zones; and launch of ONE pilots in conjunction with local authorities and the private and voluntary sectors.

The Department does not allocate specific budgets for official hospitality and it is not possible to provide expenditure information back to 1997–98 for the Department for Work and Pensions, which has existed only since 1 April 2001. The figures for 2001–02 and 2002–03 therefore are the only expenditure figures relating to the Department for Work and Pensions.

In order to provide figures which are reasonably comparable, information for the earlier years has been provided by combining expenditure on "official hospitality" by the former Department of Social Security (DSS), and on "official entertainment" by the former Employment Service (ES) which, together with relatively small numbers of staff from the Employment Policy Divisions of the former Department for Education and Employment (DFEE), combined to form the new Department for Work and Pensions. However, the expenditure incurred by the Employment Policy Divisions of DFEE is not separately identifiable.

Estimated expenditure[1] on official hospitality on this basis is as follows:

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest £000.

1997–98	46,000	DSS + ES
1998–99	86,000	DSS + ES
1999–2000	327,000	DSS + ES
2000–01	127,000	DSS + ES
2001–02	155,000	DWP
2002–03	250,000	DWP

Note:

Outturn figures for 2003–04 will be available in spring 2004.

Disability Living Allowance Fraud

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what checks the Government have in place continually to assess a person's eligibility for the disability living allowance in order to protect the system against fraudulent claims. [141960]

Mr. Pond: The DLA Periodic Enquiry has introduced checks of Disability Living Allowance awards to ensure that those entitled to the benefit receive, and continue to receive, their correct entitlement, although it is not regarded primarily as an anti fraud measure.

The process involves gathering up-to-date evidence about the customer's care and mobility needs, and making adjustments to the award of the benefit where appropriate. Changes in awards may be appropriate for example where the customer's condition improves or worsens, or where they adapt to their disability and therefore have fewer needs. Since the inception of Periodic Enquiry, 70 per cent. of the cases examined have resulted in no change to entitlement. Of the 30 per cent. of cases where the level of entitlement changed, two thirds resulted in entitlement to a higher level of award and in the remaining one third of cases entitlement either reduced or was extinguished altogether.

E-mail

Linda Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many inquiries his Department have received from pensioners by e-mail in each of the last three years. [143525]

Malcolm Wicks: From December 2002 to November 2003 a total of 21,806 emails were received from pensioners through our website. This figure does not include emails sent directly to The Pension Service Chief Executive's office, Ministers'offices, or other departmental email addresses that pensioners may have obtained through sources other than our website. Figures fore-mail correspondence are unavailable before December 2002.

Employment Retention and Advancement Project

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the (a) status of and (b) timescale for completion of the Employment Retention and Advancement Project is. [145117]

Mr. Browne: The Employment Retention and Advancement Project went live on 27 October 2003 in the following Jobcentre Plus districts:

South East Wales;
North East London;
Renfrewshire, Inverclyde, Argyll and Bute;
Gateshead and South Tyneside;
Derbyshire.

Manchester will begin delivering the programme on 5 January 2004.

The Employment Retention and Advancement Scheme will recruit customers for one year and the programme will run for three years. The programme will end in July 2007 except in Manchester where it will end in September 2007.

Exceptions Service

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether claimants who have failed to respond to the Government's Direct Payment invitation letter before 2005 will be automatically transferred to the exceptions service; and what criteria will need to be met to qualify for the exceptions service. [144113]

Mr. Pond: We will be further contacting customers who continue to be paid by orderbook.

We have always recognised that there will be a small number of people who we cannot pay directly into an account. Our plan is to design an exceptions method of payment to properly meet the needs of customers in these circumstances. It is anticipated that it will be a cheque-based solution. Payment outlets will include Post Office branches. We are in the process of discussing the design of the exceptions method of payment with the representative bodies most directly affected.

Fair Trade Products

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether it is the policy of his Department to use fair trade products, as a matter of course, in (a) sales on Departmental premises and (b) receptions and meetings involving staff and visitors. [142801]

Maria Eagle: The Government are committed to supporting the Fairtrade Foundation's efforts in promoting the supply and marketing of Fairtrade products. Where practicable, the Department aims to purchase sustainable goods for sale on departmental premises and for receptions and meetings.

We are currently discussing with our estates partner, LandSecurities Trillium, the feasibility of introducing a target to increase the supply of Fairtrade goods. However, in offices that do not have catering facilities, this is wholly dependent on the availability of Fairtrade goods through small local suppliers.

Financial Services Industry

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what discussions he has had with representatives of the UK financial services industry regarding the transfer of jobs abroad; and if he will make a statement. [142838]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

I am in regular contact with the financial services industry, as with many other sectors. In relation to the transfer of jobs abroad, we need to understand better what is happening, and to this end we have launched a consultation document inviting views from businesses—including those from the financial services industry, employees and their unions, and consumer groups. We will also be holding a round-table seminar in the New Year, to help inform the debate on the impacts of offshoring. The Government are also an observer on the Scottish Financial Services Strategy Group, recently set up by the Scottish Executive, which has a remit to boost financial services in Scotland and is also considering the impacts of outsourcing.

Guaranteed Minimum Pension

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans the Government have to re-instate the full guaranteed minimum pension for members of final salary schemes where the assets of the scheme are insufficient to buy the full amount of guaranteed minimum pension when the scheme is wound-up. [144076]

Malcolm Wicks: Members of contracted-out occupational pension schemes can already, in certain circumstances, have some or all of their state scheme rights restored for the period they were contracted-out.

Deemed buyback—the mechanism for restoring members' guaranteed minimum pensions—was introduced as part of the Pensions Act 1995. Deemed buyback can be applied when the date the scheme started to wind up is on or after 6 April 1997. It is dependant on the scheme meeting certain conditions.

Where deemed buyback applies, the Inland Revenue can accept a lower amount from underfunded schemes than it would normally cost to restore the individual's rights in the state scheme. The actual transfer value held for each scheme member for whom deemed buyback applies is paid to the Inland Revenue, with the result of either the remainder being "deemed", or the member's rights being partially instead of fully restored, thereby extinguishing the scheme's liability to provide the member with contracted-out benefits.

The final decision to buyback into the state scheme will be taken by the individual scheme member.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what estimate the Government have made of the (a) proportion and (b) number of people who are entitled to a guaranteed minimum pension from their contracted-out final salary pension schemes who will not receive their full entitlement due to the winding up of their employer's final salary pension scheme; [144077]

(2) what estimate the Government have made of the number of people who are entitled to a guaranteed minimum pension from final salary pension schemes that (a) have been wound up and (b) are being wound up by (i) solvent and (ii) insolvent employers. [144081]

Malcolm Wicks: It is not possible to provide accurate estimates of the number of people entitled to a guaranteed minimum pension or those who might not receive their full entitlement in these circumstances. In order to produce such estimates, data on individual schemes' funding positions would be required. However, detailed information on this area is not available from existing data sources. Funding position information is particularly hard to obtain, given that it is highly sensitive to investment decisions and conditions in financial markets.

The Pensions Schemes Registry (PSR), administered by the Occupational Pension Schemes Regulatory Authority (OPRA), holds information on the number of final salary schemes which are currently in the winding-up process and the number of schemes which have entered and completed winding-up. The registry database is, however, limited in a number of ways as described in the following footnote. Consequently, it does not provide a continuous record of the status of schemes, though it nevertheless remains the most comprehensive source of information available on the aggregate number of pension schemes in the UK.

Note:

The Pension Schemes Registry (PSR) is not designed or intended to provide a comprehensive or continuous statistical record of the status of schemes. The PSR registers schemes for tracing purposes and collects the levy from pension schemes, including those in the process of winding-up. New scheme data are being reported to the PSR on a continuous basis. Therefore, the figures are subject to continuous revision. When a scheme has changed status, the previous status of the scheme is not recorded on the registry. Schemes have up to 12 months to notify OPRA of any status change.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions [pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne East and Wallsend, of 1 December, Official Report, column 14W], what plans he has to invite (a) private companies and (b) voluntary organisations to pilot incapacity benefit programmes. [144602]

Maria Eagle: Plans for the Incapacity Benefit Reforms pilots have already been put in place and the first three began operations on 27 October; planning for the next four pilot areas is well-advanced and operations will commence in April 2004. The pilots are managed and run by Jobcentre Plus. From January 2004 one key element of the reforms, the condition management programmes, will be delivered in collaboration with NHS Primary Care Trusts (local health boards, in Wales). In some pilot areas the NHS may decide to contract with local providers from the private/voluntary sector in order to meet service demands.

The New Deal for Disabled People continues to support people on incapacity benefits into employment with a national network of Job Brokers. Organisations offering Job Broker services come from the public, private and voluntary sectors.

National Employment Panel

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will publish the recommendations of the National Employment Panel for helping those on inactivity benefits back to work. [144934]

Mr. Browne: The National Employment Panel published their recommendations for increasing the numbers of lone parent who get, stay and progress in work in April this year in the report "Work Works". A copy has been placed in the Library.

New Deal

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions for how long participants of the New Deal programme are tracked following completion of the programmes; and what independent assessment of the effectiveness of the timescale for tracking participants has been undertaken. [144596]

Mr. Browne: The tracking period for recording information on the destinations of leavers from New Deal programmes is 13 weeks. An independent assessment of the effectiveness of this tracking period has not been conducted, although research on the New Deal programme has been conducted by independent organisations, including that undertaken by the Policy Studies Institute and British Market Research Bureau (ESR67, March 2001), which is available in the Library.

On the 16 December 2003, we announced the launch of the Work and Pensions Longitudinal Study which will link benefit and programme information held by this Department with employment records from the Inland Revenue. This work will improve our understanding of what happens in the longer term to people who leave our programmes, including the New Deal. We are also conducting a study to provide further information on New Deal unknown destinations and expect to publish the report on this survey next year.

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average cost per place was in the last 12 months of participants on (a) the New Deal for Young People, (b) the New Deal for Lone Parents and (c) the New Deal for Disabled People. [144597]

Mr. Browne: The New Deals are designed to ensure that individuals get the help they need by offering a tailored package of provision. There is, therefore, no such thing as an average participant, thus data is not collected on the average cost per place.

However, as part of our evaluation of the New Deal programmes, average cost per additional job figures are available for New Deal for Young People participants; in 2000, we estimated that the average cost of a young person moving into work through the New Deal for Young People was around £4,000 per additional job.

In addition, cost benefit analysis published in June 2003 found that running the New Deal for Lone Parents in 2000–01 resulted in a net exchequer saving of £1,600 for each Lone Parent moving into work.

Equivalent estimates of cost per job are not available for the other New Deal programmes.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the merits of reducing the time a person must be unemployed before being given New Deal 50 plus support. [145107]

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make the help and advice offered by New Deal 50 plus available immediately rather than after a period of six months unemployment. [145126]

Mr. Browne: Currently around 75 per cent. of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance aged 50 and over leave the benefit within the first six months. Therefore, New Deal 50 plus eligibility is set at six months to target help on those people who are in need of extra support to move into work.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people have (a) applied for and (b) received the £1,500 in-work training grant offered by the New Deal 50 Plus. [143938]

Mr. Browne: Between April 2000 and March 2003 5,520 people applied for and received the in-work training grant offered by the New Deal 50 plus. Jobcentre plus Personal Advisers discuss and agree training plans with eligible clients before the training is undertaken, therefore all those making an application will receive a grant.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer of 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 325W, on New Deal for Young People, how many New Deal for Young People leavers moved into employment in each month between January 1998 and January 2003; and what his assessment is of the trend in the percentage of New Deal leavers moving into employment during that period. [144008]

Mr. Browne: The information has been placed in the Library.

New Deal for Young People has been successful in helping more than 460,000 young people into work. It has helped reduce youth unemployment to around its lowest level since the mid 1970s, and, together with our other welfare to work policies, has been instrumental in virtually eradicating long-term youth unemployment.

The percentage of people leaving New Deal for Young People for sustained employment may be distorted by the trend in leavers to unknown destinations, which has been steadily increasing since 1998. However, research undertaken on the destination of people leaving New Deal suggests that leavers to unknown destinations are just as likely to move into jobs as people leaving to known destinations i.e. 57 per cent.

On 16 December, we announced the launch of the Work and Pensions Longitudinal Study which will link benefit and programme information held by this Department with employment records from the Inland Revenue. This work will improve our understanding of what happens in the longer term to people who leave our programmes, including the New Deal. We are also conducting a study to provide further information on New Deal unknown destinations and expect to publish the report on this survey next year.

Payment Modernisation Project

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the document, Payment Modernisation Project, sent to field directors on 7 October by Mr. Alan Linton of Jobcentre Plus; [141420]

(2) what advice has been given to field directors on encouraging more Jobcentre Plus customers to move to direct payment. [141421]

Mr. Pond: The document has already been widely circulated to hon. Members-it is now placed in the Library as requested.

The Department has a published PSA target that by 2005 85 per cent. of customers will have their benefits paid by Direct Payment.

The primary purpose of this document was to act as a reminder to staff of the need to ensure that new Jobcentre Plus customers are paid by Direct Payment from the outset of their claim. The document was designed to equip staff with the factual information they need to provide to customers, in order for customers themselves to choose the account which best meets their needs and circumstances.

Pension Credit

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many of those in receipt of pension credit were not formerly receiving pensioners minimum income guarantee. [143361]

Malcolm Wicks: As at 30 November 2003 there were 302,000 Pension Credit households in Great Britain who were not formerly receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee.

Notes:

1. This figure was produced using data from the Generalised Matching Service (CMS), extracted at the week ending 14 November 2003 and up-rated to give an estimated figure at the end of November. Using end of November CMS data does not change the figure when rounding to the nearest thousand.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent estimate he has made of the number of individuals who are eligible for pension credit; how many individuals receive pension credit in each region; and if he will make a statement. [143377]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested. Information available as at the end of November, 2003 is set out in the following table.

Numbers eligible and receipt of pension credit by region

Government Office Region	Estimated number of households eligible for pension credit	Pension credit recipients
North East	250,000	125,000
North West	500,000	281,000
Yorkshire and the Humber	350,000	200,000
East Midlands	300,000	141,000
West Midlands	350,000	213,000
East	300,000	149,000
London	450,000	231,000
South East	350,000	205,000
South West	300,000	174,000
Wales	250,000	120,000
Scotland	400,000	217,000

Notes:

1. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

2. Figures are based on Generalised Matching Service (CMS) data.

3. Figures extracted weekend of 14/11/03 but rated up to give an estimated figure at end-November. Using end-November GMS data does not change the figures when rounding to the nearest thousand.

4. Figures are for geographic Government Office Region (GOR) which is consistent with the Family Resource Survey, i.e. recipients have been assigned to a GOR according to where they live.

5. Regional figures released in the December Progress Report published on 10 December are based on operational GORs.

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what estimate he has made of how much (a) single pensioners aged between 60 and 64, (b) single pensioners aged over 65, (c) pensioner couples aged between 60 and 65 and (d) pensioner couples aged over 65 will (i) receive and (ii) gain on average each week under the pension credit in each (A) constituency and (B) local authority area in Scotland. [143717]

Malcolm Wicks: The information has been placed in the Library.

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what change there will be in the number of pensioner households and individuals who will qualify for pension credit in April 2004 as a result of the minimum income guarantee being increased in line with earnings while the savings threshold rises in line with prices. [144778]

Malcolm Wicks: We estimate that around 50,000 households will become newly entitled to pension credit in April 2004 following the increase in the pension credit guarantee credit and savings credit threshold.

Notes:

1. The figure is based on the Department's Policy Simulation Model, which makes use of 2001/2 Family Resources Survey data, projected forward to reflect changes in incomes, taxes and benefit rates to 2003/4, to estimate the extent of entitlement to pension credit for each benefit unit on the survey.

2. The estimate is subject to a significant margin of error and given the likely inaccuracy it has been rounded up to the nearest 50,000.

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what he estimates (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples will on average receive each week from pension credit in Stoke-on-Trent in 2003-04. [143878]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Weekly average amount of pension credit in payment at the end of November 2003

Pension Rights (Business Transfer)

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will include in the forthcoming Bill on company pensions proposals to assist employees whose pensions are affected by company take-over. [144969]

Malcolm Wicks: The Pensions Bill will include proposals to protect employees' on-going pension rights when affected by business transfer.

TUPE Regulations do not currently provide any protection for employees' on-going occupational pension rights when businesses transfer. However, proposed legislation will require transferee employers to provide transferred employees, who were in an occupational pension scheme with the transferor employer, with either a defined benefit, defined contribution or stakeholder pension scheme. In addition, if the transferee employer sets up a defined contribution or stakeholder scheme, they must match employees' contributions up to 6 per cent. with more from either party at their discretion.

The proposed debt on the employer regulations, published on 11 June 2003, will improve protection of employees' accrued rights if their scheme is wound up when their company is solvent. Legislation currently provides that, when a defined-benefit occupational pension scheme winds up, a deficiency in the pension fund becomes a debt on the employer. The proposed regulations will strengthen this protection by requiring that debt be calculated on the basis that a scheme wound up when the sponsoring employer is solvent should be able to meet the full costs of the rights accrued by scheme members.

Progress2Work

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much Progress2Work has cost to date. [143751]

Mr. Browne [holding answer 15 December 2003]: Progress2work is one of a number of initiatives we are introducing to provide more help to those who face the greatest barriers to employment. The programme is being implemented in three stages from April 2002: the third and final stage of awarding contracts will be completed by March 2004.

To the end of November 2003, £9 million had been spent on contracted provision for Progress2work. This figure excludes departmental administrative costs, which are not separately identified from other departmental running costs.

Rent Service (Correspondence)

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will place in the Library (a) copies of his Department's correspondence since November 2001 with the Chief Executive of the Rent Service and (b) copies of the Chief Executive of the Rent Service's correspondence with the Rent Service's area manager for London. [143723]

Mr. Pond: Correspondence between the Department for Work and Pensions and the Rent Service is exempt from disclosure under the code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Correspondence is largely of a confidential nature, under Part 2 paragraph 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, and to identify that correspondence which is not confidential would incur disproportionate cost.

Correspondence between the Chief Executive of the Rent Service's and the Rent Service's area manager for London is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister as the Rent Service is an executive agency of his Department.

Retirement

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to implement flexible retirement ages. [145127]

Malcolm Wicks: We are committed to extending opportunities for older workers. Our Green Paper 'Simplicity, Security and Choice: Working and Saving for Retirement', December 2002, outlined a number of incentives to help implement flexible retirement ages.

From 2005, we propose changing the tax rules to allow people to continue working for the sponsoring employer while drawing their occupational pension . We intend to introduce more generous increases for deferral of state pensions including the option of a lump sum payment.

From October 2006, we will implement age legislation covering employment and vocational training. This will include making compulsory retirement ages unlawful except in those cases where employers can show they are objectively justified. We will work with employers and representative groups to develop best practice and ensure that occupational pension rules do not discourage flexible working.

In addition to this our Age Positive Campaign will continue to work closely with employers promoting and building on the known business benefits of recruiting and retaining older workers as part of an age diverse workforce.

This is all part of our aim to encourage a flexible approach to retirement and reverse the 'cliff edge' by providing choice and opportunity for people to stay in work longer.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what representations he has received on (a) a flexible retirement age, (b) full employment for over 65s who wish to remain in work and (c) the operation of New Deal 50 plus to make support available immediately rather than after six months. [145130]

Malcolm Wicks: Our Green Paper 'Simplicity security and choice: Working and saving for retirement', in December 2002 set out our proposals for supporting flexible retirement and greater choice and opportunity for people to work up to and beyond state pension age where they wish.

In response there was widespread support for flexible approaches to retirement, where that is based on individual choice and enables employers to retain experience and skills. Over 90 per cent. of respondents agreed with the proposal for individuals to be able to draw their occupational pension and continue working for the sponsor employer, with support coming from employers, individuals and representative organisations.

Through our Age Positive campaign employers are increasingly expressing their support for removing compulsory retirement ages. However, some employers feel that retirement ages should be retained; the Department for Trade and Industry has been consulting on proposals for age legislation covering employment and are currently assessing the responses to inform a further consultation in 2004 on draft regulations.

We have received a number of representations from organisations about the eligibility period for New Deal 50 plus. Currently, around 75 per cent. of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance aged 50 or over leave the benefit within the first six months; New Deal 50 plus eligibility is set at six months to specifically help those people who are in need of extra support to move into work.

Social Fund

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assistance the Government is providing to lone parents who are living below benefit levels as a result of loan repayments to the Social Fund. [144486]

Mr. Pond: The Social Fund is a vital source of support for people on low incomes, including lone parents.

The Budgeting Loan scheme provides interest-free loans, available to those receiving income support or income-based jobseeker's allowance for at least 26 weeks and who satisfy the qualifying conditions. In addition, Crisis Loans are made to people who are suffering an emergency or disaster where there is no other means of preventing a serious risk to the health of the applicant or a member of their family.

Repayment rates are set after taking account of deductions from benefit and all other debt repayment; where people find difficulty in meeting their loan repayments, they can apply to have their repayment terms reconsidered.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans the Government has to replace the system of Social Fund loans with a grant system. [144487]

Mr. Pond: We are considering the case for further reform of the Social Fund. However, interest-free loans allow efficient use of available resources to help large numbers of people, and have proven to be an effective way of enabling those on low incomes to cope with budgeting needs or short-term emergencies.

In certain circumstances, non-repayable grants are available from the Social Fund. Community Care Grants are available for vulnerable people in a variety of circumstances. In addition the Social Fund provides grants to assist people with the costs associated with life events such as childbirth and bereavement.

Student Incomes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the number of full-time students in households where (a) Income Support and (b) disability benefits are paid; and in how many cases in each year since 1997–98 the attribution of the value of loans, grants and bursaries has occurred. [142326]

Mr. Pond: No information is available for disability benefits. However, Disability Living Allowance is not an income related benefit, and is therefore payable to anyone who meets the criteria, including students.

The figures for numbers of students on income support are not available. The available information for students in receipt of a student loan and income support is in the table.

Great Britain, Income Support benefit units with income recorded from a student loan at May each year from 2000–03

	Number of benefit units
2000	500
2001	1,000
2002	1,000
2003	1,400

Notes:

1. Figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred.
2. Based on 5 per cent. sample and therefore subject to sampling variation.
3. Benefit units refers to cases with either the claimants and/or partner (if they have one) receiving income from a student loan.
4. Information is not available prior to 2000.

IAD Information Centre, 5 per cent sample.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what changes he proposes to make to the social security rules compelling full-time students in households reliant on benefits to take out or be deducted the full value of grants, loans and bursaries, in the light of the Government's proposals for higher education funding. [142331]

Mr. Pond: The benefit rules are regularly updated in order to take account of changes to the student support system. We will continue to ensure that any payments in respect of fees and course-related expenses are disregarded in assessing benefits while ensuring that the benefits and student support systems do not duplicate each other in providing for maintenance costs.

Triplex Peterborough

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the pension fund prospects for employees at Triplex Peterborough. [144968]

Malcolm Wicks: The Government is aware of the situation of the employees at Triplex Peterborough, but has not made an assessment of the pension fund prospects in question. However, we have great sympathy for the uncertainties they, and other workers in similar circumstances, are facing in regard to their pensions.

Winter Fuel Payment

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many winter fuel payment claim forms have been issued in 2003 in each constituency in Scotland other than Perth; and how many such forms have been submitted. [142655]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not readily available in the format requested but will be provided to the hon. Member and placed in the Library when it becomes available. However for all the constituencies in Scotland, excluding Perth, 3,337 claim forms have been issued so far for this winter and of those 2,504 have been returned.

We are publicising the availability of Winter Fuel Payments and how to obtain a claim form. Those who need to claim for this winter have until 30 March 2004 to do so.

Notes:

Information to identify those likely to be entitled was extracted from the Departmental Central Index based on post codes.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many winter fuel payment claim forms have been issued in 2003; and how many claim forms were submitted before 19 September 2003 in order for people to receive their payment before Christmas, broken down by (a) region and (b) constituency. [143081]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not readily available in the format requested but will be provided to the hon. Member and placed in the Library when it becomes available. However, the number of claim forms issued so far to people in Great Britain likely to become entitled for the first time to a Winter Fuel Payment is 302,353 and 171,547 claim forms were returned before 19 September 2003.

We are publicising the availability of Winter Fuel Payments and how to obtain a claim form. Those who need to claim for this winter have until 30 March 2004 to do so.

Notes:

Information to identify those likely to be entitled was extracted from the Departmental Central Index based on post codes.

Work and Pensions Projects (St. Helens)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions which projects have been (a) wholly and (b) partly funded by his Department in St. Helens since 1997; when each project was announced; when it started or was expected to start; what funding was provided by (i) Government and (ii) a third party; what third party provided funding; what the target group of the project was; what the projected outcome of the project was; and what the name of the project was. [141274]

Mr. Browne: Action Teams for Jobs, which were announced in May 2000, aim to help jobless people in the most employment deprived areas of the country find and remain in work. The St. Helens Action Team for Jobs was started in October 2000; it is wholly funded by the Department for Work and Pensions, receiving an annual budget of £400,000.

St. Helens Action Team for Jobs is targeted at people in the following wards: Blackbrook; Sutton and Bold; Broad Oak; West Sutton; Parr and Hardshaw; and Queen's Park. The projected outcome was that the Action Team would find jobs for 280 people from the target group every year; so far the project has exceeded this target in each year. In the first nine months of 2003–04, the Action Team has helped 315 people into jobs.

The Department also spends money on many other regional and national projects which also benefit those living in St. Helens.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will reply to the letter to him dated 10 November 2003 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mrs. M. Sam. [144639]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary replied to my right hon. friend's letter of 10 November 2003 on 16 December 2003.

European Constitution

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Ms Stuart) to discuss the European consititution. [144226]

Mr. MacShane: During the period of the Convention on the Future of Europe, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary had several meetings with my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Gisela Stuart). Since the start of the Intergovernmental Conference, however, there have been no official meetings. I have had several conversations on Europe with my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Estonian Government concerning prospects for a referendum in Estonia on the European Constitution; and if he will make a statement. [144676]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not discussed formally with the Estonian Government prospects for a referendum on the draft EU Constitutional Treaty. Our Embassy in Tallinn follows Estonian Government policy on this and other issues. The Estonian Government have said that it has no plans for a referendum.

Food Supplements Directive

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information has been given to the British embassies in each of the Member and Candidate States of the European Union about the practical implications for the UK health food sector of the provisions of the Food Supplements Directive; what action each embassy has been instructed to undertake to support the achievement of UK policy objectives in relation to the setting of maximum permitted levels for nutrients in food supplements; and if he will make a statement. [144873]

Mr. MacShane: The Food Supplements Directive 2002 lays out a framework for the future setting of the maximum permitted levels of vitamins and minerals in food supplements. Following this, the European Commission has to make a proposal listing EU maximum permitted levels for vitamins and minerals in food supplements. It has not yet done so and we do not expect it to do so for another 2–3 years.

The UK continues to press its view—with the Commission and our EU partners—that maximum levels should be set on a safety basis. Our overseas posts have been kept informed of the follow-up to the Directive and have been asked to echo our general line with their own contacts.

Give as You Earn Scheme

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many and what percentage of staff in his Department contribute to a charity through the Give as You Earn scheme; how much money is donated to charity per month by staff in his Department through the scheme; and what steps he is taking to encourage greater participation in the scheme by staff in his Department. [143902]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The answer is as follows:

225 (3.8 per cent.) Foreign and Commonwealth Office staff contribute to a charity through the Give as You Earn scheme. The average total contribution is about £6,710 a month. In addition, many staff overseas give their time and money generously to local charities. We encourage staff to support their chosen charities through this scheme and have recently taken a number of steps to give it a greater profile, including information on the FCO intranet, a mail shot to all posts and dissemination of publicity posters.

Guantanamo Bay

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Attorney-General on sending Crown Prosecutors to Guantanamo Bay to consider what charges might be brought against the British detainees. [144838]

Mr. Mullin: None. Any prosecution of the detainees in the UK would be a matter for the police and the Crown Prosecution Service.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contingency arrangements have been made for the transport of British detainees in Guantanamo Bay to the United Kingdom to stand trial. [144839]

Mr. Mullin: None. Discussions between the Government and the US Administration on the position of all the British nationals detained at Guantanamo Bay continue. We have discussed, and are discussing, a range of options with the US, including the possibility of repatriation. The question of whether there will be a prosecution in the UK is a matter for the police and Crown Prosecution Service.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in the cases of the British prisoners held in Guantanamo Bay. [144331]

Mr. Mullin: Discussions between the Government and the US administration on the position of all the British nationals detained at Guantanamo Bay continue. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said during Prime Minister's questions on 22 October (Official Report, Columns 632–633), " . . . there are two alternatives: either sufficient undertakings will be given about the form of trial that the detainees will have under a military commission, or they will be returned to the United Kingdom". We hope to resolve the situation soon.

Iraq

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Iraq Survey Group is expected to make its (a) next report and (b) final report. [144031]

Mr. MacShane: There is no set timetable for reporting by the Iraq Survey Group.

Mrs. Heather Saunders

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met Mrs. Heather Saunders. [144227]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last met Mrs. Heather Saunders on 10 November 2003.

Northern Cyprus

[illegible]. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the elections for the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus Parliament on 14 December. [144878]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary issued a press statement the day after the elections in northern Cyprus. A copy of the statement is available on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office website: www.fco.gov.uk/policy/news/foreign-secretary.

We remain committed to seeking a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement in Cyprus on the basis of the UN plan. We urge all concerned to seize the opportunity presented by this election outcome. What is now required is a clear demonstration of political willingness to build on this result and to resume substantive settlement negotiations on the basis of the UN Secretary General's proposals as soon as possible.

Olympic Games

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his policy is on the proposals by Greece for an Olympic Truce during the Olympic games in the summer of 2004; and if he will make a statement. [144877]

Mr. Mullin: The UK supports the idea of the Olympic Truce. It was pleased to co-sponsor the United Nations General Assembly resolution presented by Greece this year on 'Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal', which included the concept of the Olympic Truce. Additionally, as a member of the European council, the UK agreed the presidency conclusions in Brussels on 12 December 2003, that "The European Council supports the idea of an Olympic Truce".

Pitcairn Island

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Pitcairn Island criminal cases which are to be tried in New Zealand are expected to be heard; what discussions his Department have held with the Pitcairn (a) Chief Justice and (b) Supreme Court on this matter; and if he will list those who occupy the positions of (i) Lord Chief Justice and (ii) judges of the Pitcairn Supreme Court. [144117]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No date has yet been fixed for the trials, and no discussions have taken place between the Governor and the Chief Justice on their timing. It would be inappropriate to do so at present since the Supreme Court is still hearing preliminary arguments.

The Chief Justice of the Pitcairn Supreme Court is Judge Charles Blackie. The other two Supreme Court judges are Judge Jane Lovell-Smith and Judge Russell Johnson.

Roger Short

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to honour the memory of Consul-General Roger Short. [142935]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A memorial service was held in Istanbul this week for Roger Short, and services for all those who lost their lives will be held in Istanbul early in the new year. We are discussing separately with Mr. Short's family and the families of the other members of staff who were killed what other forms of commemoration would be appropriate.

Student Visas

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 8 December 2003, Official Report, column 239W, on student visas, what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the reasons for the increased number of (i) applications for student visas and (ii) refusals; and if he will make a statement. [143952]

Mr. Mullin: The Government have not directly commissioned any research into the increase in student applications. However, the British Council, which is partly funded by the FCO, has recently carried out research on the results of the Prime Minister's Initiative for international student recruitment which was launched in June 1999. Current indications are that the increases in the number of foreign student visa applications result from the success of the PMI marketing campaign aimed at attracting foreign nationals to study in the United Kingdom.

In 2000 there were 125,139 student applications of which 16.1 per cent. fell for refusal.

In 2002–03 there were 181,905 student applications of which 28.9 per cent. fell for refusal.

All visa applications are assessed individually on their own merits so it is not possible to draw any general conclusions for the rise in the refusal rate. Possible factors might include the abolition of pre-assessment by UK visas (under which applicants who were unlikely to be successful were given the option to withdraw before the application was formally made) and improved methods of detecting forged documents.

UN Declaration of Human Rights

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list countries which he considers to be in breach of Article 18 of the UN Declaration of Human Rights; in which respects each country is in breach; and if he will make a statement. [143192]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We condemn instances where individuals or groups are persecuted because of their religion or belief. Where we believe a state to be in breach of its obligations in international human rights law, such as the obligation in Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to ensure the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, we take action, either alone or with our EU partners, on a case by case basis. Through our biannual Freedom of Religion Panel we work closely with NGOs and representatives of religious groups to identify countries and cases of particular concern. Our Annual Report on Human Rights highlights states which we believe to be the worst violators of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This list is by no means exhaustive, but we do not believe that a league-table approach to human rights violations would add value to the important work already undertaken by NGOs in this field. A copy of our Annual Report on Human Rights has been placed in the Library of the House.

Yemen

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's policy is on the readmission of Yemen to the Commonwealth. [144228]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Yemen has never been a member of the modern Commonwealth. At their Meeting in Edinburgh in 1997, Commonwealth Heads of Government considered an application from Yemen. They agreed it would be kept under review in the light of the criteria endorsed by the Commonwealth Heads of Government. We welcome Yemen's wish to meet the obligations which would be entailed by Commonwealth membership.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs pursuant to his Answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 457W, on the Census (1911), what powers the Lord Chancellor has under the Public Records Act 1958 to release details from the 1911 census before 2011; and what conditions concerning confidentiality were agreed to by those who participated in this census. [144889]

Mr. Leslie: Section 5(1) of the 1958 Public Records Act provided for the general release of records after 50 years, and this was reduced in 1967 to 30 years. This section of the Public Records Act gives the Lord Chancellor the power to vary the normal closure period in relation to specific classes of records with the approval, or at the request, of the relevant minister.

In 1966 the Lord Chancellor approved Instrument No.12, which sanctioned the closure of Decennial records for 100 years on the grounds that the information supplied by householders was given in strict confidence. The Open Government White paper (Cm 2290) of July 1993 recommended the retention of the 100 year closure period.

The conditions quoted on the 1911 Census Householder's Schedule give the following assurance of confidentiality: "The contents of the Schedule will be treated as confidential. Strict care will be taken that no information is disclosed with regard to individual persons. The returns are not to be used for proof of age, as in connection with Old Age Pensions, or for any other purpose than the preparation of Statistical Tables".

Call Centres

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that British data protection requirements apply to customer information used by call centres outside this country operated by (a) UK banks and (b) other UK financial institutions. [144890]

Mr. Leslie: Where a company established in the UK either processes personal data itself in another country or has personal data processed on its behalf under contract by a company in another country, the UK company retains full responsibility for ensuring that the processing complies with the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1998.

Compensation Orders

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what (a) the total number and (b) the total value of compensation orders awarded by (i) magistrates' courts and (ii) Crown courts was in each criminal justice area in 2002. [144584]

Mr. Leslie: Information on the total number or the value of compensation orders awarded by magistrates' courts is not collected centrally by my Department.

The total number and the value of compensation orders made by the Crown court in each criminal justice area for 2002 is given in the following table entitled 'Compensation Orders made and total amount, by LCJB, 2002'.

In addition, attached the Home Office Criminal Statistics Publication (Table SI, 6(A)), which shows that in 2002, a total of 106,881 offenders were ordered to pay compensation at magistrates courts (excluding summary motoring offences).

Correspondence

David Winnick: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs when the hon. Member for Walsall North will receive a reply to his letter of 13 November to Lord Filkin on the release of the 1911 Census records. [144856]

Mr. Leslie: I refer the hon. Member to my official's letter of 24 November in which we state that a reply will be sent by 22 December 2003.

Departmental Identity Cards

Mr. Webb: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications of the introduction of compulsory identity cards for the Department. [144341]

Mr. Leslie: My Department is continuing to discuss with the Home Office and others the programme of work announced by the Home Secretary on 11 November.

Electoral Commission

Denzil Davies: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs pursuant to his Answer of 8 December, Official Report, columns 350–51W, on the Electoral Commission, how potential applicants for the position of Chair and/or member of the Electoral Commission were informed that an open competition would be held; and how many applicants indicated that they wished to be considered for the position of Chair. [144895]

Mr. Leslie: The selection process for appointments for the position of Chair and/or member of the Electoral Commission began in April 2000 with publication in the press of advertisements inviting applications to fill the posts.

Due to the confidential nature of application forms it is not possible to state how many applicants indicated that they wished to be considered for the position of Chair.

Denzil Davies: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs pursuant to his Answer of 8 December 2003, Official Report, columns 350–51W, on the Electoral Commission, if he will list the members of the selection panel which decided who should become Chair of the Electoral Commission. [144896]

Mr. Leslie: The members of the selection panel which decided who should become Chair of the Electoral Commission were: Elizabeth Filkin, the then Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards; Sylvia Denman, an academic lawyer specialising in equal opportunity issues; and Nigel Varney, the then Head of the Home Office Party Funding Unit. Sir David Omand, as the then Permanent Secretary at the Home Office chaired the panel.

Give as You Earn Scheme

John Barrett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many and what percentage of staff in his Department contribute to a charity through the Give as You Earn scheme; how much money is donated to charity per month by staff in his Department through the scheme; and what steps he is taking to encourage greater participation in the scheme by staff in his Department. [143897]

Mr. Lammy: Currently, 534 members of staff in the Department for Constitutional Affairs contribute to charity via the Give as You Earn scheme. This represents a little over 4 per cent. of total staff in the Department. In November 2003 contributions to charity under the scheme totalled £4,839. My Department has had discussions with "The Giving Campaign" to determine what more can be done to encourage contributing to charity through payroll, and as a first step we are planning in co-operation with them to promote the present arrangements in the Department's staff magazine early in the New Year.

Legal Aid

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for private practice in criminal work of the consolidation of the number of solicitors' firms to be supported under the legal aid franchise. [144882]

Mr. Lammy: The Legal Services Commission manages contracts with solicitors' offices which provide a comprehensive national network of quality assured legal services. The Commission is obliged by statute to ensure it achieves value for money and has therefore recently announced its intention to further develop its approach to contracting CDS services. In major urban areas, where services are often supplied through a multiplicity of relatively small contracted offices, this is likely to result in a reduction in the number of contracted offices, each undertaking greater volumes of work, but no reduction in the overall availability of services to the public. Outside the major urban areas, and particularly in rural areas, the Commission will be looking to provide arrangements which support and encourage supply in ways which recognise the need for access to quality services and the particular challenges facing solicitors in these areas.

Mental Incapacity Bill

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what account is being taken in the Draft Mental Incapacity Bill of measures to improve support for people with learning disabilities requiring help to reach decisions affecting their future health needs. [144958]

Mr. Leslie: The Draft Mental Incapacity Bill will greatly improve decision making for people with learning disabilities by setting out the key principles that everyone must be assumed to have capacity and that 'all practicable steps' must be taken to help people make their own decisions. This will provide empowerment for people with learning difficulties in all decision making.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what his plans are for the draft Bill on mental incapacity; and what his policy is on the timing of that draft Bill in relation to the revised Mental Health Bill. [142111]

Mr. Leslie: A draft Mental Incapacity Bill was scrutinised by a Joint Committee during the summer and their report was published on 28 November. My Department is working together with the Department of Health and stakeholders to consider the Committee's recommendations. We will seek to introduce the Bill in the current session of Parliament. With regard to the revised Mental Health Bill, there is no relationship between the timings of the two Bills, but I am aware that the Mental Health Bill will be subject to pre-legislative scrutiny early next week. My Department continues to work closely with the Department of Health to ensure that the proposals are consistent with each other.

Public Defender Service

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in expanding the role of the Public Defender Service. [144881]

Mr. Lammy: The Legal Services Commission opened two further Public Defender Service offices in 2003, making a total of eight offices. There are no current plans to open further offices before the end of the four-year pilot in 2005. But the Government and the LSC have always said that the PDS provides a flexible option to deliver criminal defence services where existing provision is low, or of poor quality. We will review the future role of the PDS in the provision of criminal defence services, taking into consideration the researchers' evaluations of the PDS.

HEALTH

Aphasia

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps are being taken to develop and produce accurate measures of aphasia; [144525]

(2) what steps are being taken to improve the quality of services available to people with aphasia; [144526]

(3) what steps are being taken to support services development for people with aphasia based on accurate measures of need and performance; [144527]

(4) what steps are being taken to improve access to speech and language therapy for aphasic people. [144535]

Mr. Hutton: Primary care trusts have the responsibility of improving the health of the community, securing the provision of high quality services, and integrating health and social care locally. They have the resources to commission services, and to identify the number of professional staff that they need to deliver those services. This process provides the means for addressing local health needs within the community including the provision of speech and language therapy. No steps are being taken centrally to develop or produce measures of either the severity of aphasia or treatment outcomes.

Chemotherapy-induced Anaemia

Mr. Havard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients received blood transfusions for chemotherapy-induced anaemia in each year since 1997. [144494]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information on the number of patients who receive blood transfusions for chemotherapy induced anaemia is not collected centrally.

Mr. Havard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to inform cancer patients about the alternatives to blood transfusion for chemotherapy-induced anaemia. [144495]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There is a national patient information leaflet produced by the National Blood Service for patients who may receive a blood transfusion. The leaflet includes a section on alternatives to blood transfusions—although this is directed principally at surgical rather than cancer patients. When the leaflet is next reviewed consideration will be given to providing more information on other possible alternatives to blood transfusion. In addition, guidance on information provision for cancer patients will be included in the supportive and palliative care guidance currently being produced by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence for publication next year.

Community Paediatric Service

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many referrals of children up to the age of five years there were to the Community Paediatric Service in England and Wales in each year since 1997; and who initiated the referrals. [144137]

Dr. Ladyman: Information is not available in the form requested.

Data about new episodes of care with the community paediatric nursing services in England are published in "Patient Care in the Community, NHS Specialist Care Nursing, Summary information for 2002–03, England"—available at http://www.doh.gov.uk/kc590203.

The data collected do not include the age of the children involved or source of referral. The table shows numbers of new episodes in the financial years 1997–98 to 2002–03.

Initial contacts with community paediatric nurses, England, 1997–98 to 2002–03

	Number of initial contacts
1997–98	33,200
1998–99	36,000
1999–2000	37,100
2000–01	40,200
2001–02	41,100
2002–03	43,600

Note:

Referrals to community paediatric nurses are not necessarily the same as referrals to community paediatric services—which usually relate to medical services and a different client mix.

Correspondence

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter of 10 November 2003 from the hon. Member for Walsall, North, on the Royal Commission on Long Term Care, transferred to his Department from the Department for Work and Pensions. [144855]

Dr. Ladyman: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 15 December 2003.

Delayed Discharges (Suffolk)

Mr. David Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the number of delayed discharge patients awaiting a domiciliary care package in Suffolk on the latest date for which figures are available; [143526]

(2) what percentage of delayed discharge patients in (a) England and (b) Suffolk West had been waiting over 28 days for a transfer of care on (i) 1 September 2003 and (ii) 1 September 2002. [143644]

Dr. Ladyman: There were nine patients in Suffolk who were delayed in hospital awaiting a domiciliary care package in their own homes at the beginning of December 2003.

In September 2003 in England, 26.3 per cent. of patients who experienced a delayed transfer of care from hospital for a period of 28 days or over, and in Suffolk West Primary Care Trust the figure was 38.89 per cent. This compares to 34.2 per cent. in England and 46.4 per cent. in Suffolk West PCT in September 2002.

Departmental Job Losses

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the results were of the Executive Agency review of job losses in his Department; and what the cost of the review was. [143054]

Ms Rosie Winterton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, announced at the Health Select Committee on 30 October that he intends to undertake a review in 2004 of the Department's arm's length bodies. This review will embrace executive non-departmental public bodies and special health authorities as well as executive agencies.

Electronic Care Record System

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase the number of doctors in practice to make up any shortfall in the NHS as the integrated care record system is introduced. [142705]

Mr. Hutton: There will not be a need to increase the number of doctors in practice in the National Health Service as a consequence of the introduction of the integrated care record system. The system will in fact produce efficiency savings for clinicians across the NHS. For example, summaries of records will be available across the whole of the NHS along with the necessary information to support clinical decisions.

Some of the areas where doctors will save time include:

Summarising records which are transferred by post between general practitioner practices;

Having to read through large quantities of unsorted information prior to conducting consultations;

Waiting for paper based information including results to be transferred around hospitals and between trusts to facilitate clinical decisions;

Re-typing and re-entering information which has already been captured electronically elsewhere in the NHS.

Five-a-Day Programme

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the participants are being selected for the FACET; and what its projected total cost is. [144561]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The impact of fruit and vegetable consumption in the 66 primary care trusts (PCTs) running Five-a-Day community initiatives is being evaluated using the Five-a-Day Consumption Evaluation Tool (FACET). The participants are being selected randomly from the electoral register for the 66 PCTS and control areas matched for multiple deprivation index. The total cost of the evaluation is estimated to be £330,000.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department has spent on the (a) logo development and (b) communications programme for the National Five-a-Day Programme. [144572]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Five-a-Day logo is part of a wider educational programme to provide clear and consistent information on the benefits of eating at least five portions of a variety of fruit and vegetables a day. The cost to date of developing the Five-a-Day logo and related communications, including materials for use in primary care settings throughout the national health service, has been £549,000.

Food Standards Agency

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many times in each of the last five years representatives of (a) the farming sector, (b) the food manufacturing sector, (c) the food retail sector, (d) consumer organisations, (e) academia and (f) other sectors have made presentations to the Food Standards Agency Board that are not recorded in the agency's board papers; [144025]

(2) how many briefing sessions not included in the agency's board papers have been held before the board of the Food Standards Agency. [144026]

Miss Melanie Johnson: A total of 42 informal briefing sessions have been arranged for the board of the Food Standards Agency (FSA) since it established on 1 April 2000, as shown in the table.

Total number of informal briefing sessions

It is normal practice for informal briefing sessions to include a range of stakeholders or individuals with different views or perspectives on an issue. Details of the total number of informal briefing sessions organised for the board of the FSA since it was established on 1 April 2000 are shown in the table. Also indicated is the number of times specific sectors have participated in these informal briefing sessions. The figures for other sectors include participation by Government Departments, chairs or members of expert/advisory committees, enforcement organisations, professional associations and individuals.

	2000	2001	2002	2003
Total number of informal briefing sessions	9	10	8	15
Including participation by the following groups:
Farming sector	—	—	—	1
Food manufacturing sector	—	—	—	1
Food retail sector	—	2	—	1
Consumer organisations	2	3	1	4
Academia	2	1	—	2
Other sectors	15	18	12	20

The board of the FSA has recently agreed to publish the topics of, and (subject to their agreement) the groups invited to participate in, future informal board briefing sessions. This information will be published with papers put to open board meetings, beginning with the board's next open meeting on 12 February 2004.

Fraud

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the amount of fraud in the NHS; and what research his Department has commissioned to estimate the level of unidentified fraud in the NHS. [144591]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service Counter Fraud and Security Management Service (NHS CFSMS) has an on-going programme of highly accurate risk measurement exercises—accurate to plus or minus 1 per cent.—designed to reveal levels of losses and, through repeated exercises, reductions in such losses, where they take place.

Phase one of these exercises concentrated on patient fraud. The tables show the results.

£ million

Year data selected	Fraud losses
Pharmaceutical patient fraud
1998–99	117
1999–2000	69
Dental patient fraud
1999–2000	40.3
2000–01	30
Optical patient fraud
1999–2000	13.25
2001–02	10.17

A statistically valid sample of those prescriptions prescribed during March 2003 has been taken and a further measurement exercise has been completed. Further reductions in pharmaceutical patient fraud are anticipated and figures will be produced later this month.

Phase two of the programme is now focussing on contractor fraud within the NHS. As the measurement programme extends, it will enable NHS CFSMS to accurately assess the totality of NHS fraud.

Total patient fraud losses have reduced from approximately £170 million to £109.17 million per year, a reduction of 36 per cent. since the creation of NHS CFSin 1998.

Fraud in the NHS is not acceptable. It deprives the NHS of the resources needed for the delivery of patient care and the continuing improvement of frontline services.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work the NHS counter-fraud unit is undertaking on the use of agency staff in the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [144595]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service Counter Fraud Service, now Counter Fraud and Security Management Service (CFSMS), was created in 1998 with a remit to tackle fraud and corruption within the NHS. So far, it has produced a financial benefit to the NHS of more than £295 million. It works with more than 400 professionally trained and accredited local counter fraud specialists covering every health body in England and Wales.

NHS bank and agency staff are an integral part of the NHS work force, but there is, unfortunately, a small minority of these staff who take advantage of the NHS and its resources. CFSMS have identified bank and agency timesheet fraud as a significant area of fraud and investigations, to date, have resulted in 33 criminal prosecutions. Some of the individuals involved have received terms of imprisonment ranging from nine to 21 months. Criminal prosecution is not the only action taken and CFSMS pursues a parallel sanctions policy, seeking to combine appropriate disciplinary procedures with civil action to freeze and recover assets.

The CFMS is engaged in a national proactive exercise aimed at highlighting system and policy weaknesses in the NHS. As a result, information will be sent to the whole of the NHS in England and Wales on how to improve systems, stop the fraudulent practices that put resources at risk and prevent bank and agency staff fraud in the future. Local counter fraud specialists in NHS organisations that use bank and agency staff have been required to check agency staff records, including timesheets, uncover incidents of fraud, assess systems used to monitor agency staff and deliver fraud awareness presentations to agency staff.

This is the first of several exercises to be developed by CFSMS that will see NHS counter fraud specialists proactively detect and investigate fraud and where necessary apply tough sanctions.

General Practitioners

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of general practitioner involvement in community hospitals over the past three years; and what assessment he has made of how such involvement is likely to change in the next five years. [144400]

Mr. Hutton: We do not collect information centrally on the level of general practitioner involvement in community hospitals.

Following the "Choice and Opportunity consultation", we are committed to undertaking a review of the arrangements for medical staff other than consultants employed in secondary and community care environments. Details of the scope of such a review will be considered in the light of the "Choice and Opportunity" consultation.

Health Authority Staff

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are employed within each strategic health authority in England broken down by staff group. [141916]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of staff employed within each strategic health authority area in England broken down by staff group as at September 2002 has been placed in the Library.

Health Protection Agency

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what improvements in (a) fighting infection and (b) dealing with chemical and radiological health issues have resulted from the replacement of the Public Health Laboratory Service with the Health Protection Agency. [144142]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Health Protection Agency (HPA) has integrated into one organisation expertise which was previously located in a number of different bodies and published its first business and corporate plan in August, which identifies a wide range of key targets for its first five years.

Since it was created, on 1 April 2003, the HPA has set up nine regional and 36 health protection teams across the country to bring a consistent approach to public health threats, and it has provided active management or assistance in a number of health protection activities. These include: an effective contribution to the international management of severe acute respiratory syndrome; leading the investigation of and assisting in the management of a national outbreak of salmonella infection; and providing expert advice in respect of a number of chemical incidents.

Healthy Living Centres

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total funding being made available for Healthy Living centres is. [144564]

Miss Melanie Johnson: In total, £300 million was made available by the New Opportunities Fund for healthy living centres across the United Kingdom, of which £233 million was for England.

To date, 257 awards, worth £204 million, have been made in England.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding is being made available for Healthy Living centres with a focus on tackling obesity. [144567]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is as follows:

114 healthy living centres (167 in the United Kingdom) are providing activities covering diet and nutrition and 207 healthy living centres (282 in the UK) are offering physical and sporting activities, which contribute to tackling obesity and which support other significant preventive health objectives such as reducing the risk of cancer and type- two diabetes.

Mental Health

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking in conjunction with his counterparts in the Department for Education and Skills to promote awareness of links between physical and mental health in young people. [144842]

Dr. Ladyman: The children's national service framework (NSF) will provide an integrated view across all aspects of child health and development including the promotion of good physical and mental health of young people in schools and elsewhere. The Department for Education and Skills and the Department of Health are working jointly on the development of the NSF.

Ministers in the Department of Health and the Department for Education and Skills have many regular meetings in which they have discussed health promotion and emotional well-being. In addition, officials at both Departments meet frequently to discuss services for children.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time for an appointment in mental health for patients under the age of 18 in (a) England and (b) each strategic health authority was in each of the last six years. [143711]

Mr. Hutton: The tables show the average (median) waiting times for first consultant out-patient appoint following general practitioner referral for the specialty child and adolescent psychiatry. As strategic health authorities have only been in existence since April 2002, it has only been possible to provide figures for one year.

Average (median) waiting times for 1st consultant out-patient appointment following GP referral: child & adolescent psychiatry: England

	Median waiting times (weeks)
1997–98	6.4
1998–99	6.1

Microbiologists

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many consultant microbiologist posts are vacant in the NHS, broken down by region; [144372]

(2) how many new consultant microbiologist posts have been created in England in each of the last six years; [144373]

(3) how many training posts in microbiology (a) have been filled and (b) were available in each of the last six years. [144374]

Mr. Hutton: Vacancy data are collected by the Department of Health as three-month vacancies as at 31 March each year. These are vacancies which trusts are actively trying to fill, which have lasted for three months or more.

The table shows the number of three-month microbiology and virology consultant vacancies as at 31 March 2003, by strategic health authority.

Notes:

1. Staff in post data are from the Medical and Dental Census, March 2003.
2. Staff in post data exclude staff employed by Health Authorities, as vacancy information was only collected from Trusts, PCTs and Special Health Authorities.
3. Vacancy and staff in post numbers are rounded to the nearest whole number.
4. Calculating the vacancy rates using the above data may not equal the actual vacancy rates.

The Department does not collect data on the number of newly appointed consultants in microbiology and virology. Workforce data are collected through the annual Department of Health medical workforce census. Thecensus is a snapshot of data as at 30 September in the appropriate year. The information in the table shows the net increase in the number of microbiology and virology consultants since 1997:

The drop in the number of consultants between March and June 2003 is due to the re-categorisation of consultants to other specialties.

Information on the number of training posts filled and available is not collected. The table shows the number of doctors in training in the specialty between September 1997 and September 2002. Numbers increased by 29 per cent. during this period.

In 2003–03, central funding has been provided to support the implementation of eight additional specialist registrar (SpR) posts in microbiology and virology. Trusts also have the opportunity to locally fund up to 10 SpR training opportunities.

Midwives

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many midwives (a) left and (b) entered the profession in each of the last six years in (a) London and (b) each region; what the turnover rate was in each case; and what the average age of a practising midwife was in each case; [144202]

(2) what the average period was that a midwife had worked in the profession before leaving in each of the last six years, (a) in London and (b) in each region; [144210]

(3) what the average overtime worked by a midwife was in each of the last six years, broken down by region; [144211]

(4) what the three-month midwifery vacancy rates were in each of the last six years in each (a) strategic health authority and (b) Government region area; and how many staff were in post in each case, broken down by (i) whole-time equivalent and (ii) headcount; [144246]

(5) how many and what percentage of midwives working in the NHS were (a) full-time and (b) part-time in each of the last six years. [144287]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 15 December 2003]: Information on the number of midwives leaving and entering the profession, the average period that a midwife has worked in the profession before leaving, and the average overtime worked by a midwife is not collected centrally.

Information on the average age of a practising midwife in London and each region and the number and percentage of midwives working in the National Health Service who were full-time and part-time in each of the last six years has been placed in the Library.

Information on the rate of vacancies for midwives lasting three months or more since 1999 by Government Office for the Region, and since 2002, the first year the data was collected by strategic health authority, and a breakdown of staff in post in each case, broken down by whole-time equivalent and headcount has also been placed in the Library.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether student midwives will continue to have their liability for tuition fees met on their behalf by the NHS, without means testing, regardless of any increase in the level of fee. [144127]

Mr. Hutton: Existing contracts for midwifery training between strategic health authorities and higher education institutions cover the full cost of training, including the personal tuition fee. The consultation document, "Funding Learning and Development for the Healthcare Workforce", sets out our proposal for a national model contract. It is intended that this contract for national health service-funded pre-registration courses, to be introduced from 1 April 2004, will specifically prohibit the charging of top-up fees to students. If, under the proposed top-up fee arrangements, the existing tuition fee continues to be levied on students, then it will continue to be met by the NHS without means testing.

National Health Statistics

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list all the National Health statistics which the Government has decided no longer to (a) collect and (b) publish during the last three years; [143795]

(2) if he will publish, for each of the last six years for which figures were available, each set of national statistics which the Government has decided not to collect during the last three years; [143796]

(3) if he will publish, for each of the last six years for which figures are available, each set of statistics which the Government is considering no longer collecting; [143797]

(4) if he will list the national health statistics which the Government is considering no longer collecting or publishing; and which of these are undergoing a consultation process at present to assess the value of continuing to collect them. [143798]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 15 December 2003]: The Department is committed to minimising the burden on national health service and social care staff of collecting information while ensuring that information required to monitor performance and measure activity within health and social care system is available. As priorities change, statistical collections are reviewed and may be dropped or revised, or new collections may be implemented.

The Department is currently undertaking a thorough review of NHS statistical collections to reduce the burden that the centre places on the NHS. Details of the Department's current NHS statistical collections are available on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/stats/rocr. Details of NHS collections discontinued between 1997 and 2003 are shown in table 1; information on other returns and publications discontinued in the last three years are shown in tables 2 and 3.

Patient Deterioration

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned on the extent to which patients suffer deterioration in their disease prior to having an operation in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Europe and (c) the United States. [143438]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has not directly commissioned such research, however, it has helped to initiate and is an active participant in a two year international Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development project on waiting times for elective surgery.

Nurses

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average number of nurses per 100 beds was in (a) England and (b) the West Suffolk NHS Trust in each year since 1997. [143532]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is shown in the table. Since 1997, the average number of nurses to every 100 beds in England has increased from 151 to 189 in 2002. In West Suffolk Hospitals National Health Service Trust, the number has increased from 100 to 127 in the same period.

Obesity

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the projects being funded by his Department to tackle obesity. [144565]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department are leading on developing a Food and Health Action Plan, which will shape, co-ordinate and drive action to improve public health in England through better diet. Action on physical activity will be guided by an activity co-ordination team, jointly led by the Department of Health and the Department of Culture, Media and Sport. These two initiatives will be of direct relevance to the prevention and management of obesity and will provide the overall strategy.

Projects funded by the Department which contribute to tackling obesity include:

79 practice based projects to increase breast feeding and the annual National Breastfeeding Awareness Week

the reform of the Welfare Food Scheme

the Food in Schools programme

the communications strand of the Five-a-Day Programme resources by non-Governmental organisations, including the British Dietetic Association Weight Wise website and Weight Concern's toolkit on obesity and guidance for health professionals for family-based behavioural treatment for childhood obesity work with industry to address the sugar, fat and salt content of the diet local exercise action pilots

the distribution of pedometers via general practitioner practices

the National School Fruit Scheme.

Primary care trusts allocate funding from their own devolved budgets to deliver national targets and milestones and to meet local priorities, including work relating to diet, physical activity and obesity.

Orthopists

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has made of the number of orthopists needed in the Health Service by 2006. [144190]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 15 December 2003]: Separate information is not collected in the non-medical workforce census on the number of orthopists employed in the National Health Service. The Delivering the NHS Plan target for increasing the number of therapists and scientists by 30,000 by 2008, over 2001 levels, includes orthotists as does the NHS Plan target for increasing the number of therapists and other key professional staff by 4,450 by 2004 over 1999 levels.

There is only one course in England for prosthetists and orthopists that is commissioned by Cumbria and Lancashire Working Development Confederation. In 2002–03, there were 30 training places with 32 forecast for 2003–04.

Paediatricians

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant paediatricians have left the NHS in each of the last six years; and for what reasons. [143048]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect data centrally on, or reasons for, the number of leavers in the national health service.

As part of the Department's recruitment and retention strategy, we are taking forward a programme of work to address key issues of concern to the medical profession. This programme of work is part of the "Improving Working Lives" initiative, which enables all staff, including consultants to strike a better balance between work and other aspects of their life outside work.

Prisoners

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the 2002–03 budget for mental health in-reach work in prisons is dedicated specifically to women prisoners. [144069]

Dr. Ladyman: In 2002–03, £3,375,000 was made available for National Health Service mental health in-reach services in prison establishments in England, of which £425,000, or 12.5 per cent., was for services at six establishments holding only women. The comparable figures for 2003–04 are £9,400,000 and £903,000, or 9.6 per cent., at 11 establishments.

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure a consistent structure of oversight for prisoners' healthcare during the transfer of responsibility from HM Prison Service to the NHS. [144071]

Dr. Ladyman: In addition to routine performance monitoring by the Prison Service, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Prisons and the independent monitoring boards at individual establishments oversee prisoners' healthcare. The Commission for Health Improvement's (CHI) responsibility for conducting reviews and investigations of healthcare extends to health services for prisoners commissioned or provided by National Health Service bodies. The Commission for Healthcare Audit and Inspection (CHAD will succeed CHI from April 2004.

Transfer of responsibility for commissioning health services for prisoners to NHS primary care trusts (PCTs) is due to begin in selected locations from April 2004, leading to full devolution of prison health resources to PCTs by the end of March 2006. As this process develops, prisoners' healthcare will come within the ambit of the normal NHS monitoring systems. We are considering with HM Inspectorate of Prisons and CHAI how the external inspection arrangements for prison health services should develop in the light of these changes.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the funding levels were for the Public Health Laboratory Service in each of the six years before its abolition; and if he will make a statement. [144370]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The funding levels for the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) in each of the six years in question are shown in the table.

(£000)

	Revenue	Capital	Total
2002–03	62,867	4,337	67,206
2001–02	58,207	5,355	63,562
2000–01	58,423	3,695	62,118
1999–2000	59,211	3,924	63,135

PHLS audited published annual accounts.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons the regional networks of microbiology laboratories were disbanded. [144371]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Public Health Laboratory Service's regional network of microbiology laboratories has been replaced by the Health Protection Agency's (HPA) local and regional services division, which has a network of eight regional laboratories. This is supported by more than 300 National Health Service microbiology pathology laboratories across the country. The HPA has regional microbiologists (a newly created post in microbiology), who, working with regional epidemiologists and local communicable disease control teams, ensure that the public health outputs of the laboratories in their regions are maintained. This is a more comprehensive coverage of the public health needs across the country than was previously possible, filling some of the surveillance gaps identified by the Chief Medical Officer in his strategy for combating infectious diseases, Getting Ahead of the Curve.

Respiratory Syncytial Virus

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether premature babies discharged from Guys and St. Thomas' Hospital in the last three months who were given the first course of their preventive treatment for respiratory syncytial virus will continue to receive that treatment by the hospital until their course is completed. [143682]

Mr. Hutton: Guy's and St Thomas' National Health Service Hospital Trust has confirmed that all babies who meet the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI) criteria for preventative treatment for respiratory syncytial virus (RSV), including those for whom a programme has already been initiated, will have their full course of injections provided by the hospital. The protocol in use is the same as that used by other neonatal units in the Region.

A second group of eight babies, who do not fulfil the criteria set out by the JCVI, were given the first dose at the hospital. The trust has reviewed the evidence and guidelines for this group in discussion with primary care trusts (PCTs) and parents, and is deciding on a case-by-case basis whether or not to continue the treatment.

The trust has agreed with PCTs that it will not commence any new RSV courses which fall outside the current criteria without prior agreement with the regional specialist on infectious disease and agreement with the PCTs on funding for the whole course.

Self-administered Treatments

Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what his policy is towards new treatments which allow patients to self-administer at home; [144549]

(2) what steps he is taking to help patients access new treatments which allow them to self-administer their treatment at home when recommended by their clinician. [144550]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Government's policy is to promote self-care and give patients greater control over their treatment. On 9 December, we published "Building on the Best: Choice, Responsiveness and Equity in the NHS". This document broadly sets out how we need to make the national health service more responsive to patients by offering more choice across the spectrum of health care. Redesigning services around the wishes and choices of different groups of service users will improve access to care and treatment and reduce health inequalities.

Speech and Language Therapists

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether speech and language therapy undergraduates will be charged top-up fees from 2006. [144536]

Mr. Hutton: Existing contracts between strategic health authorities and higher education institutions cover the full cost of training and top-up fees are not charged. The consultation document, Funding Learning and Development for the Healthcare Workforce, sets out our proposal for a national model contract. It is intended that this contract for National Health Service-funded pre-registration courses, which will include speech and language therapy undergraduates, to be introduced from 1 April 2004, will specifically prohibit the charging of top-up fees to students.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his Answer of 8 December 2003, Official Report, columns 319–20W, on tuberculosis, what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the reasons for the increase in TB cases; what steps are being taken to deal with the problem; and if he will make a statement. [143951]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department has not commissioned any research into the increase in tuberculosis cases. Within any given area, the number of notified cases fluctuates from year-to-year. The number of cases of tuberculosis notified nationally declined until the mid-1980s, but has been generally rising since then. The fluctuations in the number of tuberculosis cases in the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire area are not considered to have any additional significance beyond the national trends. At a local level, health professionals are constantly monitoring any cases and keeping the situation under general surveillance.

The Department ran a national tuberculosis awareness campaign in 2002. This aimed to increase the awareness of tuberculosis, encourage early access to diagnosis and treatment and reduce delays in diagnosis and completion of treatment and encourage early diagnosis for cases of active tuberculosis and preventative measures. As a result of the campaign and improved surveillance, both detection and diagnosis of the condition has improved.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 415

SESSION 2002–2003

26th November 2003—18th December 2003

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volume of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The index to the daily parts of Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references may be different as a result of changes to the text and column numbering.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Daily part and volume and indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings, written statements and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'ws' indicate written statements.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting, is a written statement or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Chamber Debates (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Westminster Hall Debates (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings);
  - Written Statements (consisting of ministerial statements issued in writing); and
  - Questions (which includes all written, oral and urgent questions).

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used in connection with the progress of bills:

- 1R = First reading
- 2R = Second reading
- Com = Committee stage
- Rep = Report stage
- 3R = Third reading
- res = resolution
- amendt(s) = amendment(s)
- * = matter taken formally without debate or division
- (HL) = Bill starting in House of Lords
- (SP) = Bill in Scottish Parliament.

Parliamentary background

- The Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk contains a range of information about Parliament and the full text of some Parliamentary papers and proceedings including Hansard.
- Information on current Parliamentary business is provided in the House of Commons Information Office Weekly Information Bulletin, available on the website and from The Stationery Office (020 7873 8499).
- Further information on Parliamentary proceedings and procedures is available from the House of Commons Information Office (020 7219 4272).
